However much these brethren may differ with me in regard to church organization and some other things, I believe them to be Christians, with a holy desire to exalt Christ above everything else, and that they have no relish for the dirty streams of the world which Satan controls. All Christians, we would think, when they have the light which they need and ought to have, will exalt Christ above the false worships of the lodge, and take him for their "all in all." "Rebuke" evil, not good, "with all long suffering and doctrine." Give the light in the name and spirit of Christ. It is required of them that have on the whole armor of God. CYRUS SMITH.

PITH AND POINT.

A GREATER POWER IN THE TRUTH.

Since I have been receiving the Cynosure I can witness to the good that it has done. I carefully read the paper and found it was a power greater than the thrones of the anti-Christian societies. It led me to victory in the fight against the secret societies. I am doing all in my power to try to circulate the blessed paper in our midst.—(Rev.) E. D. BANKS, Jeanerette, La.

A COMPANION OF GEN. POMEROY.

I cannot do without the Cynosure; have taken it some ten years, and I fought Masonry long before I saw it. With S. C. Pomeroy I began to fight it in Kansas in 1854, and as time passed it grew worse. I still keep old John Brown's picture hanging in my room. But I don't talk so much as I used to; I just take my Cynosure and read to them, and oh! you should see them squirm. If you send but one copy to this office, don't think it goes under a bushel. God bless the right, and all the Cynosure brotherhood.—S. H. MOORE, Garland, Kansas.

AN ARKANSAS CONTRIBUTOR.

You will find in this letter a money order for $2.50; $2 to pay for your most excellent paper and 50 cents to be applied to the Southern ministers' fund. I see how the colored ministers are hoodwinked and duped into the different lodges. They say they want protection. It is a bad way to get protection to bind themselves hand and foot and swear away their liberties and become slaves to the devil. I hear of many different lodges being organized. I oppose them and give them the Cynosure to read, and see some fruit of my labors.—CHARLES P. PAGET, Charleston, Ark.

A TRAITOR TO PROHIBITION BUT NOT TO MASONRY.

In my last when speaking of the Prohibition party I had special reference to the party in this State, and not the American party. But to answer your question. During 1886 one Rev. Deo, of Oxford, announced himself for Prohibition. He was elected to the State legislature. Now this learned divine is well up in Masonry. When he was running for office two Democrats of Oxford, saloon-keepers and Masons of high standing, sent to the Democratic committee word to this effect: Stand by Deo; he is liberal both in religion and temperance. When the vote was taken on the constitutional amendment, his vote was No. Again, I ask, what will we do with the lodge power? Where must the separation take place? Will the Cynosure solve this problem for me? For me to keep clear in my soul, I must vote as I pray. O my God, put down the whisky and the lodge power in our country.—D. BENJAMIN, Seymour Lake, Mich.

NOTE.—As the work of casting out the saloon progresses, we shall learn of other cases like the above. The lodge will always stand by its own and sell out the truth. New York friends, mark this case.

LITERATURE.

THE GREAT PYRAMID OF EGYPT—ITS TEACHING TO US AS A PEOPLE. A Lecture Delivered at Chautauqua. By Charles Latimer, C. E. Price, 25 cents. C. H. Jones, Chicago, Ill.

The fact that the author of this work—who was Chief Engineer of the N. Y., P. & O. R. R.—takes the ground that the Great Pyramid of Egypt was built by men inspired by God, will render it interesting to those engaged in scientific religious investigation. Mr. Latimer had been for years engaged—with his money and time—defending and advocating this—what he believed to be—a great truth. The subject matter of the pamphlet is that which was given by him in a lecture at Chautauqua which created much interest. That the builders had some object in the construction of this great wonder of the world, is certain. Its mathematical accuracy is truly surprising. The author says: "All that it has revealed teaches us that it will reveal more, and that we have not more than reached the threshold." That the author is honest in his investigations there is no doubt. Whether the conclusions are tenable, further researches of men of science may, and probably will, determine.

ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA OF KNOWLEDGE AND LANGUAGE. Vol 6. Bravo to Calville. Price, 40 cents, cloth. John B. Alden, New York.

This extensive and popular work is growing into a handsome library of useful information. The convenience of handling a small volume of reference can be appreciated by all who have dreaded to open an immense unabridged dictionary, the very exertion making one reluctant to use it. This objection removed, a plain, condensed cyclopedia becomes an investment of double value. The plan of this work does not comprehend elaborate disquisitions or treatises, but a book for home use. School children will find an excellent part of their education promoted by the constant use of such reference books.

"TEMPERANCE ANECDOTES."—We are indebted to the National Temperance Society and Publication House at New York for a copy of an admirable little work bearing the above title. It is a collection of jokes, anecdotes, witticisms, conundrums, etc., original and selected, for the entertainment of the friends of temperance. It will be helpful to temperance lecturers in furnishing them with appropriate anecdotes and happy illustrations, with which to embellish their speeches. It is well known that a dull and sleepy audience can often be aroused, and even kindled into enthusiasm by the magical spell of a good story. It was a happy thought of the author to compile and publish a work of this character. It will meet a want long felt, and often expressed by a very large number of the numerous friends of the temperance cause throughout the land. We should not underrate the value of wit and humor when judiciously used. A good hearty laugh is healthful to the body and restful to the mind. A little pleasantry interspersed throughout a lecture will aid in securing a favorable hearing, and add to the effectiveness of the speaker. Hence, we believe that the work under notice will not only furnish amusement and entertainment, but contribute materially to the advancement of the temperance reform. We commend it to ministers and temperance lecturers everywhere. It forms a 12 mo. volume of 288 pages, neatly printed, substantially bound, and illustrated with twelve choice wood engravings. Price $1 postpaid. B. W. WILLIAMS.

The Missionary Review of the World easily distances, by its high literary ability, its breadth of discussion and information, and its world-wide sweep of survey, all the other missionary periodicals of the world. There are several noteworthy articles in the "Literature" section of the August number, such as the "Bicentenary of Bunyan's Death," "The Miracles of Missions," "The World's Missionary Conference," all from the graphic pen of Dr.

A. T. Pierson; "The Romance of Missions," "Dr. Christlieb on Medical Missions," "The Drink Traffic Among Native Races," by Dr. Duncan of Scotland, and Dr. Cust's "Hero Missionary." We know not where to look for better reading than these papers afford. The "Correspondence," the International," the "Monthly Concert," the "Monthly Bulletin" and the "Editorial Notes" departments are each of them full of timely thought, fact and discussion. Funk & Wagnalls, New York. Yearly price, $2.

Science for July 13 is largely devoted to the topics "Methods of Disinfection" and "Protection of Buildings from Lightning." These are subjects of great pub lic interest and are discussed in a critical and scientific manner. The conclusions reached in the latter are in favor of much simpler means of protecting buildings than are urged by the lightning-rod agent whose bill will amount to from $75 to the hundreds. Barbed wire for the higher parts of a roof and telegraph wires for conductors are held to be superior to the expensive copper ornaments sometimes spread upon a building.

IN BRIEF.

A little son of Hiram Rice got a grain of corn lodged in his throat four days ago and all efforts to dislodge it failed. As the grain of corn began to swell it interfered with the boy's respiration, but he said nothing till to day, when the grain closed his throat and he died in horrible agony.

The insane asylum for Negroes at Goldsboro, N. C., has just been enlarged on account of the rapid increase of insanity among the colored people. Thirty years ago madness was almost unknown among the Southern Negroes, but now the number of those affected in North Carolina alone is estimated at 1,000.

"Pa, did you see that the Supreme Court of this State has decided that the hoe is a deadly weapon?" "Yes, son. Why?" "O, nothing; only as garden time is coming pretty soon I thought I'd mention it so you wouldn't ask me violate the law by carrying deadly weapons about my person."—Chicago News.

Several years ago a valuable calf, belonging to E. O. Bancroft of Warehouse Point, sucked a diamond ring from his finger as he was teaching it to drink milk. The calf grew and became a cow, and the other day died mysteriously. A post-mortem examination showed that the ring had recently become detached from a muscle, where it had hitherto remained harmless, and had been the cause of death.

Two grown daughters of Jacob Nye, a well-to-do farmer living eight miles south of Princeton, Ill., were adjudged insane here to-day, and will be sent to Jacksonville for treatment. The father and mother and another daughter are also insane. The family of five were all struck with this strange malady the same day, and physicians are unable to account for the cause, as all were well a few days ago, and there had been no unusual excitement in the neighborhood. They spend their time singing and praying, and seem to fear being poisoned.

July 4 at Shell Rock, Iowa, the parents of a little child that had died, buried it in their door-yard and then went to a dance. When the citizens learned of it they were greatly scandalized, and it was openly charged that there had been foul play. The mayor ordered an investigation, and it has just been ascertained that the remains have been quietly removed and buried on a farm in the country. A physician stated that in his opinion the child died a natural death and it is probable that no further steps will be taken, but the people of Shell Rock strongly denounce the unfeeling conduct of the parents.

Old Tim Williams, the Lebanon, Conn., hermit, who has lived alone upon a small farm, amid underbrush and thicket, his entire life, was recently found dead. His largest hive of bees swarmed upon a huge apple tree just back of his hut. Fearing that they would escape, the old man climbed the tree, a distance of twenty-five feet. He fell to the ground, stirring up the bees in his descent. The bees followed him down and completely covered him, stinging him hundreds of times. With one leg broken broken, the cage torn from his face, and too weak to fight the insects, he was practically at their mercy, and they stung the old man to death.

The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy has been experimenting with a palace live-stock car of its own invention with very satisfactory results. The proprietors of one of the patent stock cars now in use on some of the railroads were challenged to a contest recently. Two of the patent cars and two of the Burlington cars were loaded with cattle at Omaha, coupled together, and hauled to Chicago, stopping over Sunday at Galesburg, where the cattle were accorded the same treatment. The weight of the cattle in each pair of cars was the same at starting, 50,500 pounds. On their arrival at Chicago the Burlington cattle, it is claimed, weighed 51,110 pounds, while that in the other cars weighed 51,070.

There is arising in South America a nation which bids fair to compete with the United States in enterprise and population. During the last year the Argentine Republic added five thousand miles of railroad to the four thousand which had been built before. There will this year be two hundred thousand immigrants, chiefly from the south of Europe. There are over three thousand public schools, and two hundred and thirty thousand scholars. The chief cities are lighted with the electric light, and abundantly supplied with telephones. During 1887 four thousand vessels entered the ports, and the revenue of the government left a surplus of six million dollars over the expenses.

An Akron special to the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette says: "A peculiar case of accidental shooting occurred in this city. Frank Lang, a quarryman, was painting in a sitting room of his house, on Wabash avenue, when the report of a pistol was heard, and neighbors ran quickly to the house to find Lang lying dead, and a bullet hole under his right eye. The weapon, a rusty 22 caliber revolver, lay on a shelf in a pantry, at least ten feet away, the muzzle pointing toward the wall. The only other person known to have been in the house at the time was Frank Killine, aged 14 years, brother of Mrs. Lang. He says he was in the kitchen when he heard the shot. The revolver had been left in the house by a family moving out, and had not been used for years. How the weapon could have been discharged and yet remain on the shelf is one of the strangest affairs that has ever taken place in this city."

SWEET FLOWERS.

The fairest buds are often the first to wither, and the ravages of disease make havoc with the beauty, as well as the strength and happiness of the fair sex. The prevalent disorders among American women are those of a most distressing description. These "weaknesses," as they are suggestively termed, insidiously sap the health, and the patient becomes pale and emaciated, the appetite grows fickle and feeble; she loses strength as the attacks increase in severity, and is in despair. There is relief for all such sufferers in Dr. Pierce's world-famed Favorite Prescription, which cures all "female complaints." Its use is followed by cessation of the "dragging down" pains, return of appetite, and in due course, vigorous health.

If you wish to restore the bloom to your wasted cheek, and so improve your health that plumpness and strength will succeed emaciation and debility, purify your blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This remedy will benefit you more surely and speedily than any other.

"I can heartily say to any young man who is wanting good employment, work for Johnson & Co., follow their instruction and you will succeed." So writes an agent of B. F. Johnson & Co., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va., and that's the way all of their men talk.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY EMINENT EDUCATORS.

PRESIDENT F. H. M. HENDERSON, Bowdon College, Ga.:—I regard all secret societies as extremely liable to be perverted.

PRESIDENT NOAH PORTER, Yale College:—That there are serious evils connected with them cannot be questioned; that they accomplish some good is equally clear.

PRESIDENT HITCHCOCK, Amherst College:—These, at different periods, have been fruitful sources of excitement, jealousy, and heart-burning among the students.

JOSEPH MOORE, President Earlham College:—The fact that Freemasonry often thwarts every effort to enforce the law against an offender who is of the fraternity, shows it to be an obstacle to moral and civil progress.

HOWARD CROSBY, D. D., Chancellor University, New York:—Thirty years ago I was a member of a college secret society, and while I had upright fellow-members, and we encouraged literary culture, I found the association was chiefly a temptation to vice.

PROF. J. R. JACQUES, Illinois Wesleyan University:—Among college students, at an age when most susceptible, secret societies tend to breed that secretive disposition which is the very opposite of the truly candid, generous, and magnanimous character.

DR BEYSCHLAG, Professor in the University of Halle:—Never entertain the idea to join the lodge for popularity's sake. It is utterly degrading to imagine pastors, men who have to deal with Christianity, the most universal and open thing in the world, wrapped up in the mummeries of Freemasonry.

PRES. J. BLANCHARD:—There have been civil and ecclesiastical pests ever since there was a government and religion; and Freemasonry is one of those pests. The Cains of humanity have rejected Christ and worshiped nature, and Nimrods have denied justice and practiced oppression, But both are combined in the lodge.

PROF. J. R. W. SLOANE, D. D., Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary:—But my strongest opposition to Masonry is because of its rivalry with religion. It steps in before the church, and is a false, an idolatrous religion, a religion without a Saviour and, therefore, a delusion and a snare to all who engage in it, or rest their hope upon it.

PROF. BURT G. WILDER, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.:—I am willing to hazard my position....upon the truth of the proposition that secret societies are unknown in heaven, but that they form a prominent and essential feature of life in the other locality. Light versus darkness; openness versus mystery; mutual confidence versus suspicion and distrust.

PROF. S. C. BARTLETT, D. D., Chicago Theological Seminary:—There are certain other wide spread organizations, such as Freemasonry, which, we suppose, are in their nature hostile to good citizenship and true religion, because they exact initiatory oaths of blind compliance and concealment, incompatible with the claims of equal justice toward man and a good conscience toward God.

PROF. J. G. CARSON, D. D., Xenia, Ohio:—These associations are inconsistent with the genius of Christianity, because the secrecy which they affect, and to which they bind their members by promise or oath, is unnecessary and so unwarrantable, dangerous, and ensnaring to the conscience, and, therefore, utterly opposed to that openness and publicity which Christ enjoins on his disciples both by example and precept.

PRESIDENT C. G. FINNEY, of Oberlin, 1868:—We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. In our judgment we are forced to the same conclusion, we cannot escape from it, we wish it were otherwise, we therefore sorrowfully but solemnly pronounce this judgment."

The Christian Cynosure.

EDITORS.
J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 26, 1888.

WHAT SHALL WE DO?

We publish below a private letter, without the name of the writer, from one of the best and soundest men of the American party (and, indeed, of any party), for two reasons:

1. To give our readers the benefit of his thoughts.
2. To explain our own.

If John A. Brooks was Prohibition candidate for governor of a State we could easily set him aside, and scatter our votes, or nominate and concentrate our votes upon another. But we cannot now get up an electoral ticket without calling a national convention, which would be an abortive effort.

Then, we are not sure we could get a better Southern man than Mr. Brooks. He is an able speaker and politician. He is inured to reform, and came off from the Democratic party and made a most stern and desperate fight for prohibition in Missouri. And when applied to by our committee for his lodge standing, he wrote with the frankness of a Southern gentleman and a Christian, thus:

"Years ago I was a Mason, but have demitted, and am not now an affiliated Mason. Though not now a member I have no prejudice to secret societies."

We once apologized to Gov. St. John for speaking as though we knew more of Masonry than he did. He replied: "You may well do that; for since I left them I have paid no more attention to their proceedings than I have to the proceedings of the Hottentots." Mr. Brooks seems equally ignorant of the lodge with the good St. John. He demitted "years ago," which released him from all obligation to the lodge, except not to reveal their fool secrets. He speaks of himself, in the face of the country, as "not now a member;" and he is evidently ignorant of the impudent claim of Rob. Morris, that the lodge, like the anaconda, holds its grip upon the throat of a man till he stops breathing.

Why not then instruct him and request a second answer?

Because both Gen. Fisk and he have manfully declared themselves clean of the lodge, and it is neither wisdom nor fairness, in the midst of a hot political canvass, to require them to turn anti-secret lecturers. It will be time for us to do that, when, as we trust in God we shall, we have put our own platform in the field, with our own candidates standing on it.

"But do we not violate our own principles, and vote for an adhering Mason in voting for Fisk and Brooks?"

No. One of them never was a Mason, and the other declares himself "Not now a member." And putting this before the public in the opening of a national canvass is a declaration of hostility to the lodge. Why did Mr. Brooks quit Masonry "years ago," unless, like his great denominational leader, Alexander Campbell, he had become opposed to the lodge?

"Oh, but Mr. Brooks was in the rebel army!"

So David was in the army of Moab. Like Mr. Brooks, under terrible pressure, David fled to Achish, and took arms against Israel; but we would vote for David if he were here now; and as at present advised, if alive next November, we shall vote for Fisk and Brooks. In sailors' phrase, we shall "jam our vessel into the wind" of this election. By doing so in 1884 we spread the knowledge of our party and principles over the Union in spite of the paltroon silence of the press. And when this hot liquor battle is gained, we will push our ship to sea, with our guns shotted to the muzzle, and our sky-scraping streamer, bearing the legend, "The Moabite shall not come into the congregation of the Lord forever." Neh. 13: 1. Not that we fight Moabites or Masons. We fight their religion; which, in Scripture phrase, is an "accursed thing." There is no Messiah in either. No "living God," or perfect humanity. There are good and mistaken men who are Masons; and Ruth was a Moabitess. Yet that magnificent young woman was the grandmother of David, and a progenitor of Christ. The Cynosure votes for Fisk and Brooks. Let us not only vote, but pray for their election.

THE LETTER.

What shall we do? I, with many others, had resolved never to vote for an adherent of the Masonic lodge, nor for one of any other secret lodge.

The nominee for Vice President on the Prohibition ticket, it now transpires, is a demitted Mason, and is also a dabbler in other secret abominations. Rob. Morris says, "A demitted Mason is a monstrosity."

You know that a Masonic demit is a certificate, signed, sealed and delivered, that the holder thereof is a worthy "frater" in good standing, clear of any unmasonic conduct; that he is a loyal sun-worshiper, and therefore an idolater without spot or blemish; that he is in harmonious accord and fellowship with the fraternity; in savage, half-civilized, civilized, enlightened and Christianized countries; with pirates, with Mexican mountain robbers, cut-throats, drunkards, etc., etc. A man may hold a demit from merely prudential reasons or motives. But he may also hold and use it for a very different and sinister purpose.

I think it unfortunate, to say the least, that the Prohibition convention could not find a suitable candidate among the hundreds of good and noble men in the country, without having been compelled to go fishing round in the filthy, sickly slough of secretism to find one.

WHAT SHALL WE DO?

Prohibition is your "thunder," prominent in the American platform, and now 'tis stolen to foist an obscure renegade lodgite into public notice, and thus make clanism respectable. I would like to vote Prohibition, but sugar-coat this ticket never so nicely, while I know the apossum's tail is in it, and 'twill be a bitter dose for me to swallow.

Wishing you long life, prosperity, health and happiness, I am as ever, sincerely yours.

THE HAND OF ROME.

The necessity of laying over for a week the interesting report of the centennial celebration at Marietta, Ohio, of the beginning of the settlement of the Northwest Territory, by our valued Cincinnati correspondent, give an occasion to notice a remarkable feature of that occasion. The significance of this celebration and that of last year upon the anniversary of the passage of the Ordinance of 1787, is the fact that the Christian religion was therein recognized as fundamental to good morals and government, and it was to be maintained and taught in connection with public schools, so as to be intelligently promoted. As if in mockery of this great central fact the Catholic bishop of Cleveland was selected, by a sort of Masonic art, to preach the sermon of the occasion. Bishop Gilmour may personally be a most excellent gentleman—of that we say nothing—but he is the representative of Rome—of a system which contradicts the principles which have given the great Northwest its unexampled prosperity.

From our New England letter it will be seen that Boston is beginning to awake from the alarming sleep which has come like a spell from her fatal optimistic philosophy. And may God grant that the Samson of our old Puritan character may not too late awake and rouse himself from the lap of this Delilah.

The same Jesuit management which is playing so boldly in Boston is at work in all our cities. It has been fought down for years in New York, but never overthrown—hardly checked. At this very time the same demands are made in Brooklyn which in Boston culminated in the casting out of an old and faithful teacher and Swinton's "Outlines of History." The New York Sun says that a Miss Carty, in the Central Grammar School, Brooklyn, has sent a witten complaint to the Board of Education charging a teacher, Miss Van Valkenburgh, with publicly insulting her and other Romanist scholars, by "inculcating religious and sectarian doctrines." As long ago as April last a priest, James Donohoe, made a similar charge against this same teacher. The Boston agitation may serve to postpone her discharge. The specification is that the teacher gave instruction from an "unauthorized book," in which the Reformation was described as a protest against the formalisms and abuses of the Roman Catholic church." The Catholic Review, in a long editorial, approves these protests, and argues that the struggle is one without quarter, and the only remedy is the establishment of church schools and the overthrow of the free school system.

Let the agitation spread and the discussion of the principles of Romanism go on; only thus shall we establish the fact that they are incompatible with our American institutions.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold writes from Fulton, Ill., of much rainy weather, but excellent audiences, especially to hear his argument and see the illustrations demonstrating the identity of ancient and modern heathen worships as practiced in the lodge. He goes to Lyons, Iowa, this week.

HOW STAND YOUR CANDIDATES?

NOTES OF THE ANTI-SECRECY LEAGUE.

Many of our readers can give valuable aid to this department of N. C. A. work by sending to this office the names of all candidates for State offices or for Congress, with their post-office address, and any accurate knowledge of their lodge standing or otherwise. Or, if no direct information can be given on this point, please suggest how it may be obtained providing the candidate is unwilling to answer for himself.

In addition to the previous reports, which have happily given so general satisfaction, we have the pleasure of publishing from three letters received from Prohibition candidates in Illinois and Vermont. The first is from Miss Mary Allen West, editor of the Union Signal, and one of the most honored names on the roll of the W. C. T. U. She is nominated as member of the State University Board. She says:

"I was brought up to believe secret societies wrong; graduated under President J. Blanchard, and have never swerved from his teachings and those of my father, on this subject. I have never belonged to any secret society, and never shall."

The candidate for State Treasurer in Illinois is Mr. John W. Hart of Rockford. His letter has a frank and manly ring which gives us no fears that during his administration thousands of dollars will be stolen from the State, and the public never learn whether the loss was made good, or whether the report of theft was made to cover a defalcation, as was the case with a late Masonic incumbent of the office. He writes:

"I am not a member of any secret society except that known as the Temple of Honor and Temperance. Of this one I became a member many years ago, because it was a society having for its chief aim the extinction of the American saloon and the salvation of the victims of that 'blot upon our civilization.'

"My views as to the character and influences of secret societies may be stated as follows:

"For myself, I have not for years past regarded them as necessary or valuable, because I have felt that I could expend my time and efforts to better purpose in endeavoring to raise fallen humanity and in helping the young to keep from falling, through the agency of the church and Sunday-school than by means of the machinery of any secret society. While this is my view of what is best for me, I am aware that many good men regard secret societies as valuable agencies for the promotion of certain good works, and for their views I desire to have the same charity that I wish them and others to have for mine."

Prof. Henry M. Seeley, of Middlebury College, Vermont, is professor of Chemistry and Natural History in that institution. He is Prohibition candidate for some State office. That he may safely be intrusted with official responsibilities, the following from his letter is proof enough:

"I am not connected with secret orders, the family and the church offering me all necessary opportunities for exhibiting my love and sympathy for my fellows. I, however, have never seen such interference, by members of the orders, with the course of the law or the meting out of justice that would lead me to condemn them."

—The senior editor of the Cynosure started with Mrs. Blanchard for Saratoga last Tuesday, expecting to remain a few days with Dr. Emory Potter of Elmwood Hall before proceeding to the Vermont appointments for which Rev. Mr. Leach has arranged.

—The return of these dear old people may be delayed until the middle of September or later. Their children had begun the arrangements for a decorous and appropriate celebration of their Golden Wedding, which occurs September 17th; but abandoned the project when the parents not only refused to accept any personal gifts on the occasion, but would not consider even whether they should, if necessary, cut short the work in Vermont and return in time for the anniversary.

—President C. A. Blanchard closed a very profitable meeting at Geneva, Ill., and last week was with pastor C. R. Hunt, of Clarence, Iowa. He is next week expecting to hold meetings with the church in Streator, Ill.

—Bro. J. F. Galloway, of Okahumpka, Fla., has sent us photographs of his fruit farm, with groves of orange and other trees. He desires to find a good purchaser for the place, and will be happy to answer the inquiries of any who may wish to buy.

—The Independent Christian of Littleton, New Hampshire, Alonzo A. Hoyt, editor and publisher, is uncompromisingly opposed to the secret orders. The Cynosure rejoices to exchange with this new-found friend, and to recommend it to our readers.

—Bro. Hinman, returning to Chicago from his brief trip in Illinois, went to Wisconsin, seeking to enlist further aid for a Southern district headquarters. He had between $250 and $300 promised, and hoped the amount might be doubled before returning to Chicago.

—The N. C. A. Board at its last meeting arranged to meet every three months, beginning with the last Thursday in July. Other necessary meetings will be held as heretofore at the call of the chairman. The members are somewhat scattered, but we hope for a good meeting this week.

—Bro. Countee's letter from Wellsville, Ohio, will be read with intense interest and earnest prayer that his useful life may be spared and his health restored. On Friday he wrote acknowledging the receipt of money from Bro. Worcester and others. He had been unable to sit up since the Monday previous, but his physician encouraged him with the hope that in about a week he might be able to go on to Cleveland.

—Dr. J. E Roy, of this city, is trustee of a legacy of $2,000 left by Philo Carpenter for promoting the reform against the lodge in the South. He regards the circulation of literature as perhaps the best means now employed to carry out the benevolent purposes of Mr. Carpenter, and last week ordered the Cynosure sent to over one hundred ministers and other influential colored men in the South, part of the number for three years.

—Rev. Alexander Thomson, chairman of the N. C. A. Board, headed a delegation before the committee of the Cook County Commissioners to prevent the granting of a saloon license at Bartlett. It was proved that the keeper repeatedly violated the State law by selling to minors and keeping open on Sunday, and has a notoriously bad place. Notwithstanding, five of the Commissioners voted to grant a license, and the petition of the saloonist was placed on file by a vote of 5 to 7. No wonder "boodlerism" was rank in the Board a year ago; and if all its members have their deserts more of them may find a residence in Joliet.

—When "old dog Tray" got in bad company, according to the old story, he had to suffer as an evil doer. The W. C. T. Union of this city, we regret to say, seems not to have remembered the admonition. The Good Templars of northern Illinois and Wisconsin planned a grand camp meeting and love feast of lodgery, which was held at Crystal Lake, Ill. By what sort of seductive influence the W. C. T. U. was led to participate in the meeting we can hardly imagine. The fact does not appear in the bills, but in the press announcements of the meeting, and there may have been no official union; but at least Mrs. Buel, treasurer of the National W. C. T. U., participated in the meeting and made an address; while Sibley, Hastings, Chaffin, Christian and other Good Templar lights were advertised with her. The latest account is that the community which furnished the audience is so disgusted with its management, the proprietor of the grounds among them, that they threatened to drive the crowd off the place.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, July 20, 1888.

The National Temperance Home in Washington celebrated its first anniversary meeting in the lecture room of the Metropolitan church on Sabbath evening last. Congressman Taylor of Ohio delivered the address. In introducing him the president of the Home made the mistake of saying that he was from Iowa, a State that had recently voted in favor of prohibition. Being corrected, the error was gracefully acknowledged, and passed by the statement that it was Ohio, instead, a State which had given 323,000 votes in favor of prohibition, and which would have given a majority had the votes been fairly counted.

Speaking in regard to the Prohibition vote in Ohio, Mr. Taylor said the ticket failed to receive a majority because its supporters went home by nine o'clock, and did not remain to see the vote counted. "When we have another election," he continued, "it will be better to sit up late, for at least one night, in order to see that there is a fair count." He eulogized the Temperance Home for the work it was doing, and said that he would favor an appropriation by Congress of $10,000 to erect a chapel in connection with it, in order that its inmates might be brought under Christian influences. Appeals to manhood and self-respect were not to be relied upon to secure permanent reform. He had seen it tried, and knew it would fail. In order to succeed there must be faith in Christianity and Divine help.

Sam Jones's latest utterance in speaking of prohibition is that he is neither a Republican nor a Democrat, nor a "third party" man. He looks forward to the organization of a reform party, he says, which will stand on "the Bible, the Sabbath, and the Home."

The President occasionally bundles up his work in the evening and takes it with him to Oak View, spending the next day there with his papers. He says he can accomplish three times more work at his country residence than he does at the White House, with the many interruptions incident to his office.

Already 16,795 bills have been introduced in the House alone this session, and still they come. During the entire two sessions of the last Congress, the number of bills presented in the House was 11,260. Although it is predicted that there will not be a quorum left in the House end of the Capitol three days after the passage of the tariff bill, there are many bills yet unacted upon. For instance, the Blair bill. This latter bill will not come out of committee, and the $250,000,000 pension bill, now on the calendar, will not get a hearing in the House. Another attempt will, no doubt, be made to pass the Union Pacific railroad bill, but the opposition to that measure is stubborn and determined. The bill to admit four new States may or may not get a hearing. It is hardly likely that the Oklahoma bill will pass at this session. The Indian committee has some important bills of a general character to bring before the House, and some of them may get an opportunity to pass. Then the fortifications bill has not yet come forward, and the discussion of it will no doubt occupy the House for some time. But after the House has passed the tariff bill, the date for the adjournment of Congress will depend upon the Senate, and as soon as the latter body has had its say on the tariff, both Houses will be ready to adjourn. *

OUR NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The public school imbroglio—Are indulgences still sold?—Prof. Townsend on Jesuitism at the New England Chatauqua—Masonry allied to Jesuitism—William F. Davis refused bail by Judge Knowlton.

The repeated encroachments of the Jesuit power which rules so many of our New England cities and towns seems at last to have roused up the Pilgrim blood, and set "the old cradle of Liberty" to rocking in an (of late) quite unprecedented manner. The occasion, to put the matter in a nutshell, was the throwing out by the school committee of Swinton's Outlines of History from the authorized text books, and the degrading to a lower rank of Mr. Travis, an old and successful teacher, because both defined the Romish doctrine of indulgences as licenses to commit sin, in consideration of a certain sum of money paid by the licensee. It is difficult to see how either text book or teacher could have taught anything else without shameless falsifying of all the facts of history. But the Jesuit power, which rules Boston, decided that Swinton's Outlines must go, and Mr. Travis be invited to take a lower seat, only two members, and they were women, having the courage to vote No against such an outrage on our free schools. It is to be hoped that the arrogance of the Jesuit party has at last roused the people from their apathetic slumbers. At Natick the graduating exercises of the High School have always been opened with prayer. This year Father Patrick B. Murphy made an unavailing protest; and I clip from the British American the following report of his utterances when interviewed on the subject:

"There will be prayer at the graduation, but it is against my solemn protest. I am one against two. The scholars have voted on the matter and a majority of them are in favor of having prayer, but it may be well for these people to remember that the time is coming when they will not be in the majority."

Rev. Thomas E. Leyden, a converted Romanist, exhibited before the Fanuiel Hall meeting some colored squares of metal strung like a rosary on pieces of silk, and said that they were indulgences which had been sold to him in the city of Boston—a rather startling revelation for people who, like the writer, have been innocent enough to believe that the system of indulgences, as a marketable commodity, died with Tetzel. Mr. Leyden testified that the Catholic church had placed Swinton's text book under ban four years ago, with other books now in use in the public schools of Boston; that Roman Catholics were kept in ignorance so that the church could use them as merchandise, and one idea in having parochial schools was that in the near future the church could control the votes of the people.

Now all this, alarming as it sounds, is only what has been reiterated in our ears time and again by those who ought to know whereof they affirm—men who have come out from the ranks of the priesthood, who know its craft and guile, and have themselves felt the Jesuit's hand of iron under his velvet glove. But will the people be content with a mass meeting or two, with a few fiery speeches and resolutions, and then sink back into the same hopeless indifference once more? Americans are somewhat disposed to put such irregular bursts of public indignation in the place of that "eternal vigilance which is the price of liberty," for nationally as well as individually they are growing to partake more and more of the mercurial nature of the French.

Prof. L. T. Townsend, at the New England Chatauqua, gave an address on Jesuitism in which he stated the number of Jesuits in the United States to be about 100,000. Banished from European countries, here there is no public position from which they are excluded. They are in the army, the navy, the Legislature, the public schools, and make a portion of the staff on many of our leading newspapers. In politics they are always Democrats, because through the medium of that party they can best control the ignorant masses which make up its rank and file. And nothing can more startlingly illustrate their power in the public schools than the fact that one of Boston's male teachers has gone over to Catholicism, and one of the lady teachers has consulted Prof. Townsend three times on the advisability of becoming a Catholic in order to retain her place! Well might he ask, "Why talk of tariff, civil service reform, the fisheries, until this is settled—as to whether the American people or the Pope at Rome is to rule this country."

It is interesting to note how closely allied is Jesuitism to Masonry, the whole vast, secret, oath-bound system being under one superior, who is the real head of the Roman Catholic church. That they can, in spite of their pretended animosity, strike hands together when their purpose is the same, is proved by historical facts. In France, before the Revolution, the Jesuits entered Masonic lodges for purposes of political intrigue, and founded new degrees with the object of reinstating the Pretender, and thus giving over England to Papal rule. What is to hinder their entering Masonic lodges in America, and in the same manner controlling them for their own ends? I can only say that our Government, while truckling to the powers at Rome, had better remember Henry IV., who, after the Jesuits were banished from France, recalled them for fear they would wreak their vengeance on him by assassinating him—and yet met the very death he dreaded at the hands of the Jesuit monk, Ravillac.

Judge Knowlton has denied, as might have been expected, the application of Wm. F. Davis's counsel, asking that his client be admitted to bail, the application being grounded on the fact that to test the legality of the city ordinance under which he is imprisoned, the United States Supreme Court has been appealed to for a writ of habeas corpus; and unless bail is allowed his term will expire before the case can be tried. The asperity with which Judge Knowlton dismissed it as "an unprecedented motion," is only another proof that our courts, which can treat a devoted minister of the Gospel like an outrageous criminal, are no longer fountains of justice and equity.

"Well, to suffer is divine,
Pass the watchword down the line,
Pass the countersign, Endure."

For which the future may have more occasion than the past, if these things in all their ominous signification go unheeded. But meanwhile I know of no man more to be envied than Wm. F. Davis, standing as he does in the very footprints of Wycliff, who said in 1384 to the authorities who would have prohibited him from preaching: "To live and to be silent is with me impossible; the guilt of such treason against the Lord of Heaven is more to be dreaded than many deaths." E. E. FLAGG.

Lovers of our American institutions must learn to vote independently on matters that pertain to public schools. Parties as such cannot be trusted. Says an evening paper: "In Massachusetts they tried to raise an issue against the Roman Catholics on the school question, and yet the Republican speaker of the last House, who is to be re-elected, living in a district where there is a large Catholic vote, based his appeal to the voters on his having aided in obtaining State subsidies for a Catholic institution, and obtained hundreds of votes in this way. Moreover, Governor Ames somewhat ostentatiously made a large gift to a Catholic college a few months ago, and since the election he ridicules the idea that the public school issue had any effect upon the result."—New York Observer.

THE HOME.

THE MISSIONARY.

[The following poem, which is here republished by request, was written many years ago by the late Rev. Nathan Brown, for years editor of the American Baptist, and who died a missionary in Japan Jan. 1, 1886.]

My soul is not at rest. There comes a strange
And secret whisper to my spirit, like
A dream of night, that tells me I am on Enchanted ground. Why live I here? The vows
Of God are on me, and I may not stop
To play with shadows, or pluck earthly flowers
Till I my work have done, and rendered up
Account. The voice of my departed Lord:
"Go teach all nations," from the Eastern world
Comes on the night air and awakes my ear.

And I will go. I may no longer doubt
To give up friends, and home, and idol hopes,
And every tender tie that binds my heart
To thee, my country! Why should I regard
Earth's little store of borrowed sweets? I sure
Have had enough of bitter in my cup
To show that never was it His design
Who placed me here that I should live in ease
Or drink at pleasure's fountain. Henceforth, then,
It matters not if storm or sunshine be
My earthly lot, bitter or sweet my cup;
I only pray, God fits me for the work;
God make me holy, and my spirit nerve
For the stern hour of strife. Let me but know
There is an arm unseen that holds me up,
An eye that kindly watches all my path,
Till I my weary pilgrimage have done;
Let me but know I have a Friend that waits
To welcome me to glory, and I joy
To tread the dark and death-fraught wilderness.

And when I come to stretch me for the last,
In unattended agony beneath
The cocoa's shade, or lift my dying eyes
From Africa's burning sand, it will be sweet
That I have toiled for other worlds than this.
I know I shall feel happier than to die
On softer bed. And if I should reach heaven—
If one that hath as deeply, darkly sinned—
If one whom ruin and revolt hath held
With such a fearful grasp—if one for whom Satan hath struggled as he hath for me—
Should ever reach that blessed shore, O how
This heart will glow with gratitude and love!
And through the ages of eternal years,
Thus saved, my spirit never shall repent
That toil and suffering once were mine below.

BLOWIN' THE GOSPEL TRUMPET.

One hot July day, long years ago (in 1839), I was accidentally passing the great Turkish custom house in Galata, Constantinople, and I found a crowd obstructing the street. Penetrating it I found a poor mortal against the wall, apparently dying in the pains of cholera. His condition was indescribably revolting. I said, "Do you speak English?" "Yes, —— your eyes," he replied, turning upon me a look of anguish, or fierce hatred, I hardly knew which. He knew the inhuman crowd was waiting to see him die. "Are you American or English?" "American," with the same or far worse profanity. I tried to get a couple of porters (homals), usually ready for any such service, to take him and his sack of clothes to a sailor's boarding-house near by. No one would touch him. I offered large pay in vain, when two noble colored sailors, Jamaica negroes, offered to take him without pay. The boarding-house rejected us. We went to the English marine hospital, to be rejected in like manner. The two Jamaicans poured out the most awful maledictions upon the English consul, to whom I appealed in vain, and the sick man joined them, until I ordered them to stop, in quick, sharp tones they were accustomed to hear on deck, and not an oath was uttered after that. I then had him carried to the boat house of Nicola, a good, kind Italian boatman, who had nursed Capt. Holt, of Andover, through a long and dangerous illness. He assented to my leaving him in his bunk until I could run and call our doctor, Stamotiodes. The common sailors are generous fellows, faithful to each other unto death.

I could not find our doctor, but in the search I most providentially met with Dr. Riach, a Scotch physician of experiance in India and Persia. I seized upon him, and took him to the boat-house.

"Small chance for this poor fellow," said Dr. R., "but administer this prescription; it is all I would do for him to-night." The druggist first refused to make up the prescription, because "it would kill any man." But I compelled him to make it up quick, and when I had administered it I found Dr. Stamotiodes, who took the case in hand with great kindness and attention.

One evening he sent word to me to come and bury Brown in the morning; he would not live through the night, and the heat made immediate burial a necessity. I went, but the case had turned toward life, and Brown slowly recovered.

The Rev. Mr. Hibbard was staying with us, an invalid missionary from Beirut. He visited Brown daily, or if not able to, then Dr. Goodell or myself took his place.

He seemed to be truly penitent for all his sinful and abandoned life. He was about twenty-five, had learned to read in his boyhood, but had nearly lost it in his vile, degraded life. Bro. Hibbard helped him recover what he had lost, and in two or three weeks he could read a chapter in the New Testament with some few hitches.

When, at length, after waiting for weeks, the consul found a passage for him home, he bade me goodby with a sailor's heart, and said, "I have hitherto done all the evil I could in life, and now I am going to try do good;" and so Marcus Brown departed, and I did not hope to hear from him again.

About a year after Mr. Calhoun, returned missionary, wrote me: "Your sailor holds out a true Christian, and was in Father Taylor's prayer-meeting, and when opportunity for prayer was given a sailor burst out with, 'O God, I thank thee for the American missionaries. When I was dying, a poor blasphemous dog, in a street of Constantinople, thou didst send thy servants, Hamlin, Hibbard and Goodell, to save me, soul and body,' and so on through an unique and earnest prayer which called forth hearty amens." Mr. C. failed to find him in the crowd after the meeting, and perhaps another year passed, when I had a very characteristic letter from Brown, not always correctly spelled, but full of life and earnestness. It began, "Dear, dear Mr. Hamlin: Thank God, I still survive the ded." He told of his shipwreck when he "found his feet standing on the rock Christ Jesus," "and now I am blowin' the gospel trumpet on the Erie Canal." I went over and read the letter to Father Goodell. He clapped his hands and said, "Let me begin the reply to that letter," and taking a sheet of paper he wrote:

"DEAR MR. BROWN: Blow away, brother, blow.
"Yours in blowin' the same gospel trumpet,
"WILLIAM GOODELL."

I know not if he ever received the letter. Twenty-eight years passed away from that contest with death on that hot July day, and, in all the excitement, anxieties and cares of missionary life, the rescued sailor was forgotten. In 1867 I was dining at the Hotel Newton, Rue de St. Augustine, Paris, at the time of the great "Exposition."

Near the close of the dinner, at which were seated men and women of different nations and languages, the gentleman sitting at my right turned to me and said: "I see you are from Constantinople, sir. May I ask if, while there, you chanced to meet with one Cyrus Hamlin," etc. "I am the person you ask for, sir." After expressing his surprise and pleasure, he said, "I am just from Honolulu, and I have long wished I could ask you about a sailor, Brown, who has been a sort of sailors' missionary in the islands, and has done a great deal of good among the seamen of all nations. He has told me how he was dying, 'a blasphemous dog' (his own language), in Constantinople, and how you rescued him, and so on and on. Now I want to know how much of this is a sailor's 'yarn,' or is it all true, for he seems to be a man of great simplicity?" "Why! the sailor Brown?" I replied. "I had forgotten him! It is all true, and I bless God that I hear from him again!"

The reader will see in this brief story that we can rarely know what good may result from a simple act of kindness, of humanity. Once in a while the good done may become known, but not often. Constantinople, Boston, Erie Canal, Honolulu and Paris, with twenty-eight years between, do not often come together to reveal what is done. But no good deed is lost. "God will multiply your seed sown, and increase your fruits of righteousness."—Cyrus Hamlin, in The Golden Rule.

HARMS'S MISSION SHIP.

Louis Harms, the pious Lutheran minister of Hermannsburg, had determined upon establishing a mission among the heathen. Twelve young men had offered themselves for the work, and had already been educated by him and his brother. He selected the Gallas, on the coast of Africa, as the objects of the mission, but could not find the means to send the missionaries. He tells the story of the ship himself: "One of the sailors said, 'Why not build a ship, and you can send out as many, and as often as you will?' The proposal was good; but the money! That was a time of great conflict, and I wrestled with God. For no one encouraged me, but the reverse; and even the truest friends and brethren hinted that I was not quite in my senses. When Duke George, of Saxony, lay on his death-bed, and was yet in doubt to whom he should flee with his soul, whether to the Lord Jesus Christ and his dear merits, or to the Pope and his good works, there spoke a trusty courtier to him: 'Your Grace, straightforward makes the best runner.' That word had lain fast in my soul. I had knocked at man's doors, and found them shut; and yet the plan was manifestly good and for the glory of God. What was to be done? Straightforward makes the best runner. I prayed fervently to the Lord, laid the matter in his hands, and as I rose up at midnight from my knees, I said with a voice that almost startled me in the quiet room: Forward now, in God's name. From that moment there never came thought of doubt in my mind." The ship was built, and Oct. 28, 1853, it left Hamburg with the first colony of missionaries.

A THRILLING EPISODE.

One of the impressive incidents that characterized the closing session of the annual meeting of the Woman's Presbyterian Board of Missions of the Northwest, held in Davenport, Iowa, was the following, as reported by the Interior:

Mrs. Van Clevê of Minneapolis, who, though about eighty years of age, has strength of body and mind that is wonderful, saying that she wished to tell a story of interest to the delegates, stated that in her travels in Northern Dakota, she once saw, near one of the old Hudson Bay Company's trails, the grave of a woman, a missionary, who was murdered by the Sioux Indians about thirty years ago, being shot twice through the lungs as she was attending to her sick babe in the night, the light of her candle showing her form to the savages who were lurking outside her cabin. Her husband buried her there, and placed a tombstone, properly inscribed, at her grave. A settler took that slab, broke it in two, and made stepping stones of it for the back and front doors of his house. Mrs. Van Cleve then told of her search for further information concerning the martyred missionary, and of her obtaining it through a package of letters sent from India by a correspondent of the husband of the murdered woman. Mrs. Van Cleve's object in her address was the raising of a fund by the Presbyteries in the Northwest to build a suitable monument over that grave. Mrs. Webb, of Oxford, Pa., to whom the letters were forwarded from India, had sent a dollar for the purpose.

At this point in the narrative a lady's trembling voice inquired, "May I say a word?" "Certainly," replied Mrs. Douglass. "Your name, please?" The voice, still trembling, but giving no name, continued: "That missionary was my brother, and his murdered wife was my sister-in-law! He was David Brainard Spencer. The elder child in the cabin that night has been a missionary in Turkey ten years. The babe that Mrs. Spencer held in her arms when she was shot has been a devoted minister in Illinois a number of years." The speaker's name was afterwards given as Mrs. Drew, of Evansville, Ind., who stated that Mr. Spencer died about three years ago in Benzonia, Mich. It is said that it didn't take that crowd long to raise and hand Mrs. Van Cleve a grand "starter" for a fund for a new and suitable monument to the memory of Mrs. Spencer.

A BED-TIME STORY.

"A story! I will soon be in bed," said Birdie Brown, as her sister promised to tell her a story. Her sister began:

"There was a king who had a little daughter whom he loved very much. He wanted to make her a beautiful and wise princess, so he sent her to a country where she was to pass through many schools and learn lessons that would fit her for her father's home. This kind father did not send his daughter alone. He gave her ten servants to wait upon and care for her.

"Two of these servants were to show her all the beautiful and useful things that she should meet with in her absence, and when she got homesick they were to bid her look up and tell it all to father, and he would hear and comfort her. Two more were to help the little girl to hear sweet music and sounds that would give her joy and pleasure, and that would tell her about what she saw and bid her always remember her father's love. Two more carried her wherever she went; and poor, indeed, she would have been without these little servants. Another told her all she wanted to say to those around her and sang hymns of praise to her father, the king. Two more helped her to do everything that would give happiness to herself and others about her; but the last servant was only seen by her father and herself. When this one did his bidding, then all the other servants were faithful and true, and the little girl was beautiful and happy. The last servant always told his little mistress to love her father dearly, and not want to guide the other servants to do what would displease him. Sometimes the princess would say to herself, 'Father is not here and I will do what I please;' then in spite of this servant's pleading, she bade him guide the others into forbidden paths, and thus brought upon herself trouble and pain.

"You see that even a little princess, with ten servants to wait upon her, may at times do naughty things.

"At last the loving father gave a command to each of his daughter's servants, calling them by name as he spoke. The names and commands were these:

"'Little Eyes, look up to God;
Little Ears, hear his word;
Little Feet, walk his ways;
Little Mouth, sing his praise;
Little Hands, do his will;
Little Heart, love him still.'

"When the little princess heard these commands she made them into one great message for herself; and when she was tempted to bid her servants to do wrong she would say, 'No, no; I will not, for there are

"'Two little eyes to look to God;
Two little ears to hear his word;
Two little feet to walk his ways;
One little mouth to sing his praise;
Two little hands to do his will;
And one little heart to love him still.'

"Then her whole soul would be filled with love to her kind father, and all wicked thoughts would fly away."

"Oh, sister, I understand your story. I am the little princess and God is my Heavenly Father. He has given me ten little servants to help me do his will. Sister, I think my little heart does 'love him still.' Isn't it delightful that I am a little princess! I am going to try to remember the King's commands. Will you please teach me them to-morrow?"

"Yes, darling. Now shut your eyes and go to sleep, for the King likes his little princess to be up in time in the morning."—Morning Star.

MR. MOODY'S STORY OF A CHILD.

I was preaching out on the Western prairies once, and as I went into the inquiry meeting I noticed a little girl sitting near the door. I thought she was waiting for a mother or a sister that was in the hall, and paid no attention to her. But when I had finished speaking to the inquirers, and they had all gone, the little girl was still waiting. I went up to her and asked her if she was a Christian.

She looked up at me smiling, with the tears raining down her cheeks—you've seen it rain in sunshine—and said, 'Oh, yes, sir!"

"And how long have you been a Christian?" I asked.

"Please, sir, ever since last night."

"And what made you?"

"Well, I heard you say that God would take me if I only asked him, and when I got home I just asked the Lord Jesus to forgive me, and take me as his own child."

"And how do you know he has taken you?"

"He promised to do it," said the little one; and if that isn't the plan of salvation, I don't know what is.

This little Christian was only seven, and small for her age. I thank God it's so simple that a child can understand it. When Christ says, "Follow me," just follow him; that's what makes you free.

THE HORSE REMEMBERS KINDNESS.

A writer in Wallace's Monthly tells a good story of the famous horse, Messenger, which had once belonged to a Mr. Bush, and which after his transfer to other hands had acquired notoriety for his ferocity. It seems that years after he was sold Mr. Bush determined to see his old favorite, whom he found kept in a pasture surrounded by a fence ten feet high, through a hole in which the food and water were passed to Messenger as if he were "a dangerous convict." Mr. Bush was warned not to enter the enclosure for his very life, but he went in and unobserved, concealed himself behind a tree and whistled. With a neigh the grand old fellow came bounding across the field in search of the well remembered whistle. The horse raced around the pasture, and when at the height of his run Mr. Bush exposed himself and whistled again, Messenger wheeled and made directly for him, while the outlookers trembled in terror. But instead of seeking to kill, the horse came up gently and laid his head over his old master's shoulder to receive the customary caress. When Mr. Bush's time for departure had come, he had proceeded but a few yards from the enclosure when there was a crash and out Messenger came, bounding through the strong bars. He followed his former owner to the stable gently, where he was secured by strong ropes and for a long, long distance upon the road homeward Mr. Bush could hear the noble animal neighing, lashing the stall, and struggling to be free and follow.

TEMPERANCE.

CRIMINALS AND A CRIMINAL BUSINESS.

It is said 8,000 out of the 12,000 saloon-keepers in New York city have been committed for some crime. Yet these are the men supported so liberally by a generous public. They grow fat and flourish on the cash which represents the wounds, woe and hunger bite of thousands. The writer has often been called upon to hear the old, old story of wrecked prospects; and the cause assigned has invariably been strong drink. If the drink traffic be responsible for only a fraction of the evil wrought, the outlook must be terrible for all who will be proven, in the great day of account, in any way, measure or manner, to have been partners or responsible in the business.

Let us, as true Christians, brace ourselves for a struggle to the death against the destroyer. "To be or not to be" is the question of the age. Should the drink traffic be permitted or prohibited? That's the question.—Rev. J. F. Avery.

IOWA SALOONS MUST CLOSE.

A decision of importance, and involving a new point under the prohibitory liquor law of Iowa, was rendered July 10 by Judge Phelps of the District Court. Two years ago a saloon-keeper, whose place was enjoined as a nuisance, appealed to the Iowa Supreme Court, and after filing a supersedeas bond continued the traffic. The injunction was sustained, and the saloon-keeper again gave bond, and carried his case to the United States Supreme Court, where it is not likely to be reached for a year or two yet. Recently proceedings were brought to have him arrested and fined for contempt of court in continuing the illegal traffic notwithstanding the injunction. His defense was that pending the decision of the Federal Court the injunction did not apply, but the District Court now decides that the injunction must stand and that the saloon must close. The saloon-keeper at once closed up and others will follow suit, as they admit that further resistance to the law is useless.

SUNDAY CLOSING IN LONDON.

Probably no Parliamentary measure, since the introduction of those that mark crises in English history, has given so much offense or aroused so much opposition as the local government bill that is now drawing its slow length along through the Commons. The government has lost elections on its account and stirred up powerful enemies. Nearly every clause out of the 125 that compose it, which have thus far been debated, has contained some objectionable feature, and not a few have been abandoned as impracticable. The clause known as the "Sunday closing clause" is the one which finds opposition at present. It is proposed by this measure to close all liquor shops on Sunday. The British public do not take kindly at all to this proposition. The workmen want their liquor on Sunday as well as other days—in fact the demand for it is greater on this than any other, barring holidays. This is evident from the condition of the British workman on Monday, as that day is almost a dead letter as far as work is concerned. Frequent meetings have been held denouncing the clause that aims at depriving the workingmen of their time-honored privilege of getting drunk on the first day of the week.

To-day, at Hyde Park, a vast assemblage gathered to protest against Sunday closing. Many speakers addressed the crowd which marched to the park with bands of music and carrying banners. On some of the banners was inscribed: "Are we all drunkards that we should be robbed of our Sunday beer?" In view of yesterday's trouble at Trafalgar Square, a heavy squad of police surrounded the square to-day for fear of a surprise. An ugly fight took place last evening at the Charing Cross Station between the police and the crowd that had been driven from the square, and many arrests were made, among them R. Cunningham Graham, M. P., the well-known labor agitator. Mr. Graham was afterward released on bail. The police grumble greatly at the government's indecision in the matter, and assert that these meetings will culminate in a riot exceeding in violence that of last November unless some action is taken.

SALOON-KEEPERS EVADING THE LAW.

After a seige of two years the authorities of Alliance, Ohio, succeeded July 12 in closing the last saloon in the place. Within the last few days the saloon-keepers, who were obliged to close their places, have completed their arrangements to open a monster beer garden just outside the city limits. The following dodger has been distributed over town: "Beer—The local option beer hall is open at the foot of Webb street this evening, and until further notice the best brands of fresh, cool, sparkling beer will be kept on hand, and for to-night beer is free." The authorities will now order a township election and vote to close it entirely.

A MOTHER'S TROUBLE.

John McDonough is now in the Deer Lodge Penitentiary serving out a sentence of two years and a half for house-breaking and malicious conduct in Basin City last winter. His mother lately made an affidavit that her son is innocent of the charge, and admitting that she, in company with another person, went to the premises of Fanny McKinnon, broke open certain barrels of whisky, let the liquor run upon the ground, and broke up her beer bottles. The lawless deed was done with the object of driving the woman out of town, as she was running a saloon and dance-house, and, as she alleges, so disturbing herself and her lodgers that they could get no rest at night. She professes her willingness to take her son's place in jail if that will satisfy the law's demands, and says she has been restrained up to this by sickness and threats from making the above statement. The affidavit is to be sent to the governor, together with such other evidence as may be necessary to secure her son's release.

TEXT FOR A TEMPERANCE LECTURE.

Mrs. William Elwell, aged about 65, and her son, about 40, were both killed at 7 o'clock this evening (July 5) by a Cleveland and Pittsburg passenger train east-bound. Mrs. Elwell was taking home her son, who is said to have been drinking. They met the train at Carpenter's Run bridge, and stepped off to the side of the track. After the engine had passed the son insisted on having the right of way, but his mother stoutly resisted, and in trying to pull him out of harm's way both were struck by the coaches. Elwell died instantly and his mother a few moments after. Their heads were terribly crushed.

WHISKY, HARD CIDER AND MURDER.

On July 16 a party of men gathered at Axton, Henry county, Va., and made merry with whisky and hard cider. Lee Eanes tried to drive his mule over Hannibal Turner. Turner struck the mule with a barrel stave. Eanes alighted, and hot words followed. Gus Eanes took Lee's part, and D. E. Davis stepped up and declared he would defend Turner. Gus Eanes told Davis he was not afraid of him, when Davis drew a pistol and shot him dead. He then turned and shot Lee Eanes twice, inflicting mortal wounds, after which he fled to the woods, brandishing a pistol and knife. The Eanes boys have many relatives in the country, and much excitement prevails. If Davis is caught he will probably be lynched.

THAT CIGARETTE.

Cigarette smoking numbers another victim in Richard H. Barringer, a popular young man of Troy. He was a constant smoker. An affection of the heart was followed by dropsy. Several physicians attended him, and they all agreed that nicotene poisoning had so shattered his system that recovery was impossible. He is dead at the age of 25. Up to a few weeks ago he had a fine physique, and was believed to have good prospects of long life. After his death one of his veins burst, and the blood therefrom was almost as black as ink.—Amsterdam, N. Y., Daily Democrat.

Kansas papers claim that the State has saved not less than $12,000,000 since her prohibitory law went into effect.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON 6. Third Quarter.—Aug 5.

SUBJECT.—The Burnt Offering.—Lev. 1: 1-9.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.—Isa. 53: 6.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Offering Must be Voluntary and Without Blemish. Vs. 1-3. Christ offered himself a willing and sinless sacrifice for guilty man. So the Christian, when he gives himself to God, makes a willing offering of all that he has and is, and in the sense that he has been washed clean in Christ's atoning blood, it is an offering without blemish. In Mal. 1: 4 there is a curse pronounced against the deceiver "who voweth and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing." The natural heart is a corrupt thing. It must be changed by the regenerating power of the Holy Spirit, and a new spiritual life implanted within it, before it can be an acceptable offering to God. When we give in charity that which we would not be willing to use ourselves we sacrifice to the Lord a corrupt thing, yet how many do it. The practice of holding church fairs, church suppers, etc., when money is to be raised for benevolent or religious purposes, is altogether alien to the spirit of true sacrifice. The equivalent of the time and money spent is supposed to come back in the shape of pleasure. But granted that it does—which is seldom the case, considering the worry, vexation and petty jealousies which always follow in the wake of such affairs—we are commanded to give to the Lord, and giving is not a system of exchange. Nothing can be offered to him acceptably which is the fruit of unrighteous gains, or which has in any way caused the injury or degradation of our fellow beings. A rumseller's offering is a corrupt thing. The church or the institution which will accept it must expect a curse will follow. No greater insult could be given to Jehovah than to seek to build up his sanctuary with blood and his cause with iniquity. No offering laid on lodge altars can be accepted. They are erected to an unknown god; they have not been sprinkled with atoning blood. But aside from this is a fatal blemish—selfishness. It is not offered in pure charity, but with the hypocrite's hope of receiving as much again. It is a common saying with lodge men that secret societies do more good than the church. We have only to examine the annual report of a Masonic or Odd-fellow Grand Lodge to see the falsity of this statement; but granted its truth, God can no more accept such an offering than he could Cain's. It must be without blemish.

2. The Acceptable Sacrifice. Vs. 4-13. In verses 5, 11 we have an image of "the blood of sprinkling which speaketh better things than that of Abel." It is true that without the sprinkling of blood there is no remission. At the same time God's Word tells us plainly that he takes no pleasure in burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin in themselves considered. An architect takes no pleasure in the rough scaffolding to some fine building. He may command one to be erected because he knows it is temporarily needed, but not that it has the smallest beauty in itself. In the time of Solomon the Jewish temple service advanced to its highest pitch of ritualistic splendor, yet his next step was to build high places for heathen gods. Even then Judaism was tottering to its fall into an abyss of semi-heathenism from which it only recovered to fall again on the other side into the grovelling formalism of Pharisaical tradition. Had Solomon studied attentively his country's history he would have seen that simple obedience would have been more pleasing to God than all his monster sacrifice of sheep and oxen which could not be numbered for multitude. The most dangerous time for the church is when she begins to multiply and make magnificent her outward services. Ornate ceremonials smother spiritual life, while at the same time the simplest form of congregational worship may become a snare, if we let the hymn and the prayer and the sermon take the part of active religious duty, if we are content with the scaffolding and allow our soul's temples to remain unfinished. Thus we come back to the thought with which we started. Obedience is our best sacrifice; the simple childlike obedience which does not falter nor question which is the most expedient way. But over it must be the blood of sprinkling ere it can be an offering of sweet savor acceptable to God.

—Mrs. Mary B. Willard, sister-in-law of Miss Frances E. Willard, will take a company of young women to Europe this summer for a three months' trip, and will resume the charge of her home school at Berlin in the autumn.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

NOTICE —The camp meeting in Dawson's Grove, three miles north of Muscoda, Wisconsin, on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, will commence the 18th of August, and will be conducted by Evangelists Woolf and Swayne. Bro. Woolf preaches the Gospel in its purity and does not forget the "old handmaid." He gives to each their portion in good season; and Bro. Swayne sings the Gospel with such sweet and thrilling strains it must and will convert. Come all, good brothers and sisters, who are Christian Cynosure readers, to the pleasant grove. W. H. DAWSON.

A WONDERFUL MISSIONARY MOVEMENT.

Somewhere between two thousand and three thousand young men and young women in the academies, seminaries, colleges, medical colleges and theological seminaries of the United States, have said that they wish to engage in missionary service, many of them wish to devote their lives to missionary work,—if the Church will sustain them. This disposition has resulted from a similar movement among University men in England, as a consequence of the exhortations of Mr. Moody.

A singular characteristic of this movement is that it has advanced and still lives without an organization. It has been voluntary and free. To-day it is endeavoring to ascertain whether the churches will send out and support these applicants, but without an organization. There is no committee, no president, secretary or treasurer. There is a general and confident acquiescence, unsought, voluntary, but cordial and unopposed and unquestioned, in the endeavors of Mr. Robert P. Wilder of Princeton, Prof. Lee S. Pratt of Park College, Mr. J. W. Stoops and Mr. O'Brien of Union Seminary in this city. By universal consent the students have entrusted to these gentlemen the attempt to ascertain whether the churches will add about 2,000 missionaries to those they now maintain.

These gentlemen are distributing a plan, the main point of which is this engagement:

I promise to give $— and — cents each week, during a period of five years from date, toward the support of a missionary in the foreign field, this sum to be over and above my present offerings to the cause of Foreign Missions. (Instead of weekly payments, quarterly or yearly payments may be made if so desired.)

The plan provides for a report of the results of circulating such a pledge and for the designation of missionaries to be sent out and supported.—Christian Intelligencer.

—The Chicago Evangelization society is now conducting Gospel meetings in four different parts of the city. On the North Side the society some months ago bought the National theater, 26 and 28 Clybourn avenue, for $22,000 and converted it into the "North Side Tabernacle." This tabernacle seats 1,500 people. Services are held every evening except Saturday and on Sabbath morning. The Sunday-school is held at 3 P. M. The North Side Gospel tent is located on Clybourn and Fullerton avenues. It has average audiences of 300. On the South Side there is one of the society's gospel tents on State street, between 23d and 24th streets, which holds 1,200 people. Services are held every evening save Saturday. Vernon Hall, 521 Taylor street, is the West Side rendezvous of the society. Rev. Alexander Patterson is the evangelist in charge. Services are held here three or four evenings in the week. The society was formed to work among the people where church facilities are lacking; to reach those people whom churches do not reach. The establishment in Chicago of a school for evangelists, where preachers may be trained in the right way of going about the work, is one of the objects of the society which is expected soon to be in order. D. L. Moody is president of the society; T. W. Harvey, vice-president; E. G. Keith, treasurer; C. H. McCormick, N. S. Bouton, J. V. Farwell and Robert Scott, trustees, and F. G. Ensign, general manager.

—Rev. H. F. Titus, former pastor of the Baptist church at Newton, Mass., has concluded to try and start a new church, whose members shall undertake to live as Jesus Christ lived. Mr. Titus resigned his pastorate some time ago to study medicine in order to better fit himself for missionary work; but his people persuaded him to go on preaching until a recent Sunday, when he told them that he should not enter their pulpit again; that he had ceased to be a Baptist; that there was no other church he could go to, since none attempted to live the ideal life patterned out in the Gospel, and that he had no choice but to attempt to start one of his own. He thinks that in the ideal church, such as he proposes to found, there should be no rich, no poor; that the members should give generously one to another; that they should take care of each other better than Freemasons or any similar society, and that there should be no social distinctions among them.

—The Southwest, an organ of the liquor trade published at Cincinnati, raves about churches giving money for missions and neglecting the suffering poor. There would be no pauperism to speak of in this country if the liquor traffic were abolished. Every year Christian people give millions to relieve the distress of people who have been ruined by liquor. How much have the saloon-keepers given to this cause? If they would take care of those whom they have reduced to poverty there would not be much left for other people to do in the way of charity.

—The corner stone of the first building of the Arkansas Baptist college is to be laid in August next, during the sitting of the Arkansas Baptist State Convention in the city of Little Rock. This institution is owned and controlled by the colored people of Arkansas. Its object is to give industrial training and Christian education to young people of our race, and to help our ministers better prepare themselves for the great work.

—The Illinois Y. M. C. A. convention, meeting in Rock Island September 19-23, has already issued a preliminary program. We are glad to see so stalwart a champion of the Word of God. Rev. Dr. J. H. Brooks, of St. Louis, is engaged for an address on each of the three days during the meeting.

—At a late meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Presbyterian church in Chicago, Mrs. W. E. Knox of New York, who had spent one year in a trip to mission fields and a visit of three months to her son, the Rev. Geo. W. Knox, professor in the Tokio College, Japan, spoke of the large number of idols. In one temple there were 33,333. In fifteen years, if the churches at home comply with the requests of the missionaries and the increase is as great as in the past ten years, there will be no need of missionaries being sent there, for the native church will be amply able to take entire charge of the country.

—At the Pan-Presbyterian Council in London the proposal that the next meeting be held in Toronto was unanimously agreed to. It was observed that, owing to the strong, loyal and ardent Presbyterian sentiment existing in Toronto, work would be carried on in the midst of congenial surroundings.

—The Presbyterian General Assembly at Philadelphia appointed Sabbath, October 7, as a day of special prayer that the Lord will send more laborers into the field, that a spirit of greater liberality may be awakened in this interest. A collection for education is to be taken in all Presbyterian churches on that day.

—That was an impressive scene recently in one of our Dakota churches when an Indian and his wife presented themselves for membership, and before the ceremony were first re-united in Christian marriage, then baptized, and immediately after their reception brought their child for baptism. It was a beautiful testimony to the power of the Gospel to permeate and elevate all the relations of life.

—The Pan-Presbyterian Conference, which met on July 3d in London, is the fourth assembly of that kind. The gathering is representative of all the Presbyterianism in the world. It has relation to the interests of over 1,200 presbyteries, 24,000 churches and missions, 21,000 ministers and 7,000,000 members. American and British Presbyterian bodies are prominent and there are grand accessions from France, Switzerland, Spain, Italy, Germany, Austria, Russia, Belgium, Australia, Persia, India, China, Japan, and from the isles of the seas.

—Thomas E. Moore, "General" of the Salvation Army in America, has lately written to a friend the following, which we are permitted to copy: "I am sure all such societies (secret) belong to the world and the devil. While we make it a point not to rail on any particular thing, but sin as sin. Because we find that a man who sells tracts and Bibles, and lies about it, is as great a sinner in God's sight as a whisky head who is also a high Mason. Many of our people have never had much light, but they cannot belong to the army long without seeing it is wrong and feeling it. If God has saved you from secret orders, witness to it; if not, only say what you know."

It is a very easy thing to carry a few tracts in the pocket, going to and fro; and by doing this we may frequently reach persons with the Gospel message. A tract, courteously presented, may frequently open a conversation, and help lead a soul to Christ,

LODGE NOTES.

Jesse L. Jones, Secretary of the Knights of Labor at Cincinnati, has fled with $10,000 shortage in his accounts. Fast horses and gambling brought about his ruin.

The fourth annual assembly of the Knights of Labor for Illinois, met in Springfield. Resolutions were passed denouncing the State conspiracy law and also Pinkerton detectives.

S. A. Hagan was arrested Thursday in Mendota, Ill., on a warrant charging him with embezzlement. Hagan was secretary of the Order of Faith, and in some way got possession of the funds, it is claimed, and absconded with over $100, all the money the order had; in consequence of which loss the local organization was suspended by the general lodge for non payment of dues.

L. Hott shot and killed the Bald-Knobber desperado, Wash Middleton, while the latter was resisting arrest at a country picnic in Newton county, Arkansas. Middleton killed Sam Snapp, an anti-Knobber, at Kerbysville, Mo., two years ago. Last October he was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for forty years. But two nights later he made good his escape from jail, assisted by his son and other Bald-Knobbers.

A meeting of Orangemen was held at Belfast, Ireland, Friday, after the work of the triennial council had been concluded. The earl of Erne, the newly elected grand master of the order, presided. Mr. William Johnston, member of parliament for Belfast, moved a resolution of thanks to the colonial delegates, to which Messrs. Wallace and Collins, grand masters respectively of the order in British North America and Ontario, responded.

A serious row has broken out among the Freemasons of Mount Vernon, Ind., through the refusal of the main body to suspend certain men engaged in selling liquor, in violation of the laws of the order. Deputy Grand Master Douglas went to adjust the difficulty, but finding the lodge incorrigible in its determination to resist the order of the grand lodge, he took away its charter. The matter has caused a considerable sensation, and the feeling runs high.

Before closing its session at Toronto, Canada, July 20, the Grand Lodge of Freemasons of Canada passed a resolution requesting its grand master to enter into correspondence with the grand master of the grand lodge of England and the grand master of the grand lodge of Quebec, offering to aid them in the settlement of the unfortunate matters in dispute between these grand bodies, so that a stop might be put to the vexatious trouble which is injurious to the craft generally.

The United Order of Honor is embarrassed, it is said, by a debt of $44,000. Supreme Secretary Duden admits that the order was having trouble with the Missouri lodges, which were in danger of dishonoring the assessments on account of this indebtedness. The death rate has been abnormally large, and he says he is now preparing a statement to be given to the members at an early day. The next meeting of the Supreme Lodge will likely be held here, where all the supreme officers are stationed. There are twenty mutinous lodges in Missouri and some in California.

Commander-in-Chief Rea, of the Grand Army of the Republic, has issued general order No. 9, calling attention to article 9, chapter 5, of the rules and regulations, in which officers and comrades are forbidden to use the organization for partisan purposes, and declaring that political discussion shall not be indulged at post meetings. The warning is issued "in view of the period of great political excitement upon which the country is now entering." Commander Rea also reminds comrades that Grand Army uniforms should not be worn at political gatherings, and post and department commanders are enjoined to see that the rules are obeyed.

Mayor Hewitt has issued an appeal to the citizens of New York for subscriptions to indemnify O. M. Hartt for "losses incurred by him in asserting his right as a citizen to earn his living." The Mayor in his appeal gives a brief history of the case as follows: Hartt was the foreman of a shoe factory. He discharged a man for theft. The union to which the man belonged insisted upon his reinstatement and the dismissal of Hartt. Hartt has been out of work eighteen months, and his fight against the union has cost him $2,500. He is reduced to poverty, and has a family of seven persons. The men who caused the trouble for Mr. Hartt have just been discharged, and the Mayor is of the opinion that he ought to be reimbursed. The Mayor subscribes $100.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00. Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, in two volumes, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated," as advertised, but the signs, grips, passwords, etc., of these three degrees are given at the close of Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated." Vol. 1 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive. Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive. Price per volume, paper cover, 50 cts. each; in cloth, $1.00 each. Each volume per dozen, paper covers, $4.00; per dozen, cloth bound, $9.00.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639 Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry; the exact "Illinois Work," fully illustrated. New edition 274 pages; bound flexible cloth covers, 50 cts.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75 cts.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2 00

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body at Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE WASTES OF THE HOUSEHOLD.

While the well known saying that a French family could live with elegance on what an American housewife throws away is frequently illustrated in families where waste can be ill afforded, it is also true that, in eight cases out of ten, this relegation of cold bits to the offal pail or ash barrel is not caused so much by extravagance as by the lack of knowledge of how to dispose of them in any other way. The dainty utilization of scraps is a subject that well repays the thoughtful study of any housewife, and even the least original cook can often "evolve from her inner consciousness" an appetizing dish from cold fragments that at first sight appear utterly unpromising. In this matter, however, the mistress must generally depend upon her own brains. Few hirelings have the keen interest in their employers' welfare that would urge them to save a couple of pennies here and five or six there. Fewer still, with the best intentions in the world, know how to do it or appreciate that it is in the minor economies that true saving consists. What difference does it make if those scraps of cold bacon left from breakfast are summarily disposed of in the swill barrel, or if that bit of corn beef—too small to appear upon the table again—is bestowed upon the first basket beggar who presents himself? And if these escape that fate from the extra conscientiousness of the housekeeper, they are too often converted into the ubiquitous hash. Hear how one careful housewife disposed of similar remnants: To the corn beef and bacon, minced fine, she added half as much cold mashed potato, one raw egg, a little chopped onion and parsley, and with croquettes made of these, rolled in flour and fried in nice dripping, provided an appetizing dish that was quite sufficient, when accompanied by stewed potatoes and bread and butter, to make a lunch for three people. Another dainty dish, which appeared upon a friend's table, was formed from even less promising materials. Her dinner the day before had been a stuffed chicken boiled with rice. Examination of the pantry revealed the carcass of the fowl, with one leg attached to it, and a couple of spoonfuls of the cold rice. Nothing daunted, however, the valiant housekeeper advanced to the charge, and, with the aid of a small, sharp knife, removed more meat from the bones than one would at first have believed possible. This was cut—not chopped—in small pieces and set aside with the rice and half of the dressing, while the bones, the rest of the stuffing, and a little minced onion were put over the fire in two cups of cold water. When a slow, steady simmer of a couple of hours had reduced this one-half, it was cooled, strained, skimmed, and slightly thickened with browned flour, then returned to the fire with the fragments of meat, rice, etc, brought to a boil, poured over crustless squares of fried bread laid in a hot platter, and garnished with parsley. The result was a savory salmi, whose scrappy origin no one would have suspected.

Many other instances of a similar nature could be given. Once, when an underdone loaf of brown bread, too heavy and sodden to appear on the table in its original form, was dried in the oven, grated and converted into a tempting pudding. Another, when an equally happy result was achieved by crushing into fine crumbs a quantity of stale, hard cookies, putting with them two cups of milk, an egg, a teaspoonful of butter, and the juice and grated peel of a lemon.

The principal objection urged against the preparation of these and similar dishes is the trouble it takes. It goes without saying that when a woman's time is so valuable that she loses money by spending an hour a day in her kitchen, she may feel that she can better afford to let the scraps go than take the trouble of saving them. But this is not often the case. With the average American housekeeper it is far easier to save a dollar than to earn one. These stoppages of the little leaks may not seem much separately, but, taken together at the end of the month or year, they mount up to a sum that is consoling if it has been saved, appalling if it has been wasted. To those who think this close watching and saving of "left overs" has an appearance of meanness and stinginess, let it be said that, while solid roast and boiled may give an impression of plain, substantial comfort, the entrees and made dishes have a savoriness that cannot be imparted to the regulation cuts of meat. Anyone can go to the butcher and order a round of beef or a leg of mutton, but it takes judgment, taste and skill to prepare a ragout, a salmi, or a really good scallop. —Christine Terhune Herrick, in Good Housekeeping.

TO KEEP A BEDROOM COOL.

"Let me tell you how to make your bedroom delightfully cool, even in the hottest weather," said a model housekeeper the other day. "Of course here in Chicago torrid nights are such an exception that you will not be compelled to try the experiment often, but then it is well to have it in mind. Well, when the heat becomes intolerable, take a couple pounds of ice, break it into fragments and put these into a sack. Raise your window, tie a string to the sack, and let it dally with the breezes, if any there be. Inside of ten minutes the temperature of the room will be sensibly lowered and you can sleep like a top. Of course it will be necessary to put a pan beneath the sack to catch the drippings. Thus, at a slight expense, a good night's rest is insured."—Chicago Tribune.

EFFECTS OF CLIMATE.

We hear a great deal said about the beneficial effect upon invalids of the climate of Colorado and other western localities, but when a man changes his place of residence in the hope of improving his health without first trying Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, he makes a great mistake. In nine cases out of ten he might save his time and money. This great remedy owes its power over all affections of the throat and lungs, bronchitis, asthma, catarrh and even consumption, which is lung scrofula, to the simple fact that it purifies and enriches the blood and invigorates the debilitated system.

Dropping out of the hair, with itching of the scalp, prevented, and the scalp made cool and healthy by the use of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.
Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodge than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

The Master's Carpet
BY

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 422 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

FARM NOTES.

THE HORSE MINDS HIS STEPS.

Every one has noticed, while driving, how rarely a horse steps on a stone even when going very rapidly. A writer in Golden Days quotes an old cavalry man as saying that a horse never steps on a man intentionally. It is a standing order with cavalry that should a man become dismounted, he must lie down and be perfectly still. If he does so, the entire company will pass over him, and he will not be injured. A horse notices where he is going, and is on the lookout for a firm foundation to put his foot on. It is an instinct with him, therefore, to step over a prostrate man. The injuries caused by a runaway horse are nearly always inflicted by the animal knocking them down, and not by his stepping on them.

CARING FOR A HORSE HARNESS.

The average harness in the rural districts is poorly cared for, and short-lived. Not infrequently it is hung in the horse stable exposed to the ammonia generated from a pile of fermenting manure. The stable may be furnished at odd spells with bedding or absorbents of some kind, but these are not promptly renewed, and there is great waste of the most valuable constituent of manure. The harness has the benefit of the ammonia, and the effect is about the same as washing it with lye. The harness rots, cracks, and without frequent oiling comes to grief at an early date. The safer way is to have a place for the harness in the carriage house, or some building outside the stable. If the stable alone is available, it should be kept free from the smell of ammonia by the constant use of absorbents, sawdust, road dust, straw, or refuse hay. A harness properly cared for and kept clean and pliable will last twice as long as one that is neglected. It is much cheaper to spend ten cents for neat's-foot oil, once in three months, than fifty cents at the harness maker's.—American Agriculturist.

THE EYE INDICATIVE OF CHARACTER.

The eye in farm animals, as well as in the human being, indicates character. The placid eye of the Jersey cow shows that she has a kind disposition; the subdued fire or flash of the eye of the trotter indicates its spirit. A large, prominent eye denotes intelligence, and usually courage. The horse with such an eye will be an agreeable driver, and is rarely a shyer or a runaway. In cattle we desire a quiet, docile disposition, that the beef animal may not lose flesh by violent exertion, that the bull may not be dangerous, and that the cow may be tractable. Hence, in selecting cattle for any purpose, we should look for an eye with a calm, placid, deep expression. The cow that will nose you when you are milking her has such an eye; so has the steer that will follow gently after you when you have the feed basket on your arm. This is not to be confounded with the dull, lifeless eye, which indicates stupidity and slowness, objectionable in all animals, especially in horses and work cattle. The desirable eye is always bright and full, and full of expression. A small eye usually indicates stubbornness. The eye of the hog shows its peculiar disposition. But the eye may be too lively. A restless eye is evidence of a highly organized, nervous temperament, and fire in it often shows a vicious disposition. Hence it is to be avoided in cattle and farm horses.—American Agriculturist.

UNTHRESHED OATS FOR HORSES.

Unthreshed oats are a better feed for horses than the grain alone, or the grain and straw both fed, but separately. The albuminoid ratio of the grain of oats is 1.61; of the straw of oats, 1.299. The food for horses at ordinary work should have an albuminoid ratio of 1.70. Hence, the grain of oats should be mixed with food having a lower albuminoid ratio. We might get a ration having the proper ratio by using corn with the oats. But it is well known that for grain to be well digested it must be eaten with some sort of stover to form the necessary bulk in the stomach. For stover we might use timothy, which has an albuminoid ratio of 1.81, and would give the necessary bulk. But it is much better to have the grain and the stover eaten together. We may cut the hay, mix it and the grain together, and moisten the mixture; but we accomplish the same thing more economically by feeding unthreshed oats, for then the grain, all the chaff and a good part of the straw are masticated together. By thus feeding oats we not only improve the albuminoid ratio of the ration and provide the necessary forage masticated with the grain, but we save the expense of threshing. Oats to be fed in this way should be cut before they are quite ripe, cured thoroughly, and then moved away. They are just the feed for winter, when the horses require carbo-hydrates; and because of their manner of feeding are so well digested, and are so well suited to the wants of the horse that he will do a great deal better upon them than he would upon almost any other food.—American Agriculturist.

Constipation

Demands prompt treatment. The results of neglect may be serious. Avoid all harsh and drastic purgatives, the tendency of which is to weaken the bowels. The best remedy is Ayer's Pills. Being purely vegetable, their action is prompt and their effect always beneficial. They are an admirable Liver and After-dinner pill, and everywhere endorsed by the profession.

"Ayer's Pills are highly and universally spoken of by the people about here. I make daily use of them in my practice."—Dr. I. E. Fowler, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hess, Leithsville, Pa.

"For several years Ayer's Pills have been used in my family. We find them an

for constipation and indigestion, and are never without them in the house."—Moses Grenier, Lowell, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Pills, for liver troubles and indigestion, during many years, and have always found them prompt and efficient in their action."—L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills effected a complete cure."—D. Burke, Saco, Me.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years and consider them an invaluable family medicine. I know of no better remedy for liver troubles, and have always found them a prompt cure for dyspepsia."—James Quinn, 90 Middle st., Hartford, Conn.

"Having been troubled with costiveness, which seems inevitable with persons of sedentary habits, I have tried Ayer's Pills, hoping for relief. I am glad to say that they have served me better than any other medicine. I arrive at this conclusion only after a faithful trial of their merits."—Samuel T. Jones, Oak st., Boston, Mass.

OF

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It isa practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with steal hy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The Senate on Tuesday passed the bill to place John C. Fremont on the retired list of the army as major general.

At its evening session Friday the lower house of Congress passed twenty-four private pension bills.

Melville W. Fuller of Chicago was confirmed by the Senate on Friday to be Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, the vote being 41 ayes to 20 noes.

CHICAGO.

"The Personal Rights League" is the name of an organization having its origin in Chicago, the object of which is to inaugurate a popular National movement against prohibition, though in favor of temperance.

The Alley Elevated Railroad Company has deposited the $100,000 with the City Treasurer required by the ordinance, and measures will now be taken for securing the right of way for an elevated road on the South Side.

It is expected that the Standard Oil Company's pipe line from Lima, Ohio, will reach South Chicago this week, and that during the following week the immense tanks recently erected in East South Chicago will be filled with oil from the fields of Ohio. It was the intention of the company to build a gas manufactory on their East South Chicago plant.

COUNTRY.

Rev. E. P. Roe, the well-known author, died suddenly Thursday evening in his home at Cornwall-on Hudson, N. Y.

The physicians of General Sheridan report that his condition had not materially altered in the last days of the week. He had been slowly improving before that time.

A. P. Marble, of Worcester, Mass., was elected President of the National Teachers' Association at San Francisco Friday, after which the convention adjourned.

In the mine of the Lake Superior Company, near Ishpeming, Mich., a single blast Friday dislodged a mass of gold-bearing rock, weighing 300 pounds, the gold in which is valued at from $10,000 to $60,000. This is said to be the fifth remarkable discovery in this shaft, and has created the wildest excitement.

The New York Legislature Friday abolished the use of machinery in penal institutions, decreeing that convicts shall make only and by hand the goods required in the prison system.

Anarchists and socialists have started Sunday-schools in various parts of the city, with the view of instructing young and old in their pernicious doctrines and the use of dynamite.

A farmer found a 15 inch gas-pipe bound on the Burlington and Missouri R. R. near Stratton in Western Nebraska. The deadly implement created much local excitement.

The Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad has begun suits to eject three hundred settlers from farms in Allen county, Kansas. The controversy relates to about thirty thousand acres of land in that county, and affects the rights of about three hundred settlers who have lived on their land for many years, and who, if they lose these suits, will lose their all.

The National Educational Council, in session at San Francisco, elected officers, J. L. Pritchard, of Iowa, being chosen President. Selim H. Peabody, of Illinois State University at Champaign, was elected a member of the executive committee.

Judge Couch Tuesday filed a decision at Waterloo, Iowa, declaring that ginger ale was an intoxicating drink and under the ban of the Iowa law. Permanent injunctions were issued, and the sheriff was ordered to close the saloons.

Upon advice of Bishop Galloway the Prohibitionists of Mississippi, in State convention at Jackson, refrained from nominating an electoral ticket.

An expedition will start from Camden, N. J., Friday, to search for the treasure of the British sloop-of-war Brask, sunk near the Delaware Breakwater in 1798. The wreck is believed to contain $20,000,000 in Spanish gold.

At an early hour Friday morning a collision occurred on the Lehigh and Susquehanna division of the Central Railroad of New Jersey in a tunnel in the mountain near White Haven, between a coal train and the New York fast freight. One conductor was killed, and five train hands were badly injured.

Early Tuesday morning the Louisville and Nashville cannon-ball passenger train collided with a freight train Birmingham, Ala., killing the engineer of the passenger, and firemen of both trains.

The explosion of the steam-pipe that supplied the engine from the boilers caused the death of seven men of the crew of the tugboat Convoy on the Ohio river. The accident occurred near Westport, Ind., and most of the men were asleep at the time.

By a boiler explosion at Hopkinsville, Ky., one man was killed and two others fatally injured. The engine-house and other buildings were demolishcd.

Over 10,000 bushels of grasshoppers have been killed in the vicinity of Fergus Falls, Minn., and prospects appear to be good for getting rid of the pests.

Heavy rain caused a flood at Wheeling, W. Va., Thursday evening, debris from the hillsides rendering some streets impassable. One of the B. & O. bridges collapsed, and many persons were drowned. At Caldwell's Run four dwellings were swept away, eleven persons being drowned. The Western Union office and other buildings at Wheeling had a foot of water on the main floors. Sewers were burst and streets washed out. Railroad tracks were torn up, and it is even reported that trains and coal chutes have been carried away. The damage in the city is placed at $150,000 while the loss to crops in the surrounding country cannot be estimated. The loss of life from the flood is at least twenty-five. The greatest loss of life was along Wheeling creek and at Triadelphia. A search Friday morning resulted in the discovery of a number of bodies near the latter place. A later dispatch says twenty-three persons are known to be drowned. Among the number was the Sheriff of Marshall county. Two cemeteries were washed out, and the coffins with bodies floated down the river. The storm cut off all railroad communication between Wheeling and Pittsburg, both the Baltimore & Ohio and the Panhandle being blockaded. The damage on the Baltimore & Ohio is mostly due to landslides, washouts, and destruction of bridges. Superintendent Patton says it is impossible to estimate the losses.

FOREIGN.

Canada, at present, has no murderers under sentence of death, a fact which is said to be almost without precedence.

Reports received daily from Suakim confirm the opinion that either Henry Stanley or Emin Bey is in the vicinity of Darfour.

The select committee appointed by the House of Commons to consider the question has submitted a report to the House recommending perpetual Sunday-closing in all parts of Ireland, and also the closing of inns at 9 o'clock on Saturday nights.

Prince Bismarck, in the course of a long interview prior to the departure of Count Schouvaloff for St. Petersburg, handed the Russian ambassador a document expressing his views on the Bulgarian question. In it the chancellor favors the maintenance of treaty rights, at the same time taking into account Russia's legitimate claims.

The story of a terrible drowning accident comes from the St. Maurice region, Canada. A gang of thirty or forty men on a log-drive on the Mattawan river procured some whisky, and, in a drunken freak, decided to run the rapids. Fourteen men boarded a driving boat. When in the middle of the rapids the steersman was seen to take his paddle out of the water for an instant. The current, which was terrific, swung the boat round broadside and over, and the fourteen occupants were dashed to death on the rocks.

Dr. James Ridley, the medical officer in attendance at Tullamore jail, Ireland, during the incarceration of Mr. Mandeville, the Irish agitator, there, and who was subpœnaed to appear at the inquest at Mitchelstown into Mr. Mandeville's death, has committed suicide. Dr. Ridley had been present at the inquest daily, waiting to be called to the witness stand. The evidence given to show that Mr. Mandeville was subjected to ill usage while in the jail seemed to prey upon his mind. His suicide confirms the popular belief that Mr. Mandeville was cruelly treated by the prison officials.

A correspondent at St. Petersburg says he is reliably informed that the interview between the Czar and Emperor William was of a most cordial character, and that as a result of it Russia will in future pursue a pacific policy. He says that there is now no danger of trouble arising regarding Bulgaria. Prince Ferdinand will be allowed to reign on the ground that it will be impossible for him long to retain his position. When the Prince is deposed Germany will favor any candidate for the Bulgarian throne that may be nominated by Russia.

A correspondent of the daily press says that Mrs. General Logan told him she once visited one of the Soldiers' Homes. She met there a very old soldier, scarred and worn, hobbling about with great difficulty, to whom she said: "This is a beautiful place; you must be very happy here."

"H'm," he replied, "Well, yes, madam, it is a beautiful place, but how can a man be happy where there are no women." An excellent comment. May we be allowed to remind Mrs. Logan on the failings of Freemasonry at whose false altars her husband, the late General, was so ambitious and eager a worshiper.

Mrs. Clara Hoffman, of Kansas City, Missouri, one of the Board of Directors of the Union Signal publishing company, has been represented to us as opposed to all the secret lodges. She writes with approval, however, to the Signal of Mr. Brooks of the Prohibition National ticket that he was once "Supreme Master" of the order of United Workmen, and urges this as a reason why he should be a popular candidate. We trust Mr. Brooks will not thank his well meaning but mistaken townswoman for this argument. If he is not now a member of secret societies, why present his former position among them to secure him votes. Indeed, Mr. Brooks should congratulate himself if the lodge forsakes him. It would be a day of promise for greater honor than he could gain even if successful in the present canvass.

The Cynosure has often spoken of the precarious nature of investments in secret mutual insurance societies. The insurance records of many States display the dried bones of scores of these organizations. Lately we referred to the fact that the Northwestern Masonic insurance society had practically failed, as its low financial conditions had compelled its management to open the door to "cowans," to save it from bankruptcy. They could get no more Masons to insure, and to keep up the income the stream of new members must be kept up. An appeal to the "outside and profane world" was therefore necessary. The United Order of Honor, a mutual benefit society, with its headquarters in Indianapolis, is said to be in a bad way. It is compelled to wind up because so many members have ceased to pay installments. Its president says that the liabilities are about $60,000, which will involve the individual members in a liability of from $12 to $20 apiece. Most of the secret insurance societies are on the road to the same goal.

Let the workingmen of America pray for more wise and true friends like Abram Hewitt, mayor of New York. He has not only told them frankly, like a brother, of the dangerous tendencies of their secret unions, but has dared to stand between their interests and the saloon politicians by whom he is surrounded. Lately he gave another practical example of his brave, wise and patriotic spirit. He started a subscription with $100 for O. M. Hartt, who had suffered a loss of $2,500 by the Knights of Labor boycotting him. Speaking of this case the New York Witness says: "America boasts herself the land of the free, yet there is tyranny practiced here—sometimes by the would-be monopolist of capital and sometimes by the would-be monopolist of labor. The case of Mr. Hartt is one of persecution, such as would have disgraced the most despotic government in Europe. Hartt was foreman of a shoe shop, and dismissed one of the employes for theft. The union struck work, and the employers to make peace dismissed Hartt. He went to another city and found employment, but was followed by a committee of the union, which again procured his dismissal, the evident determination being to prevent him from earning a living at his trade as a punishment for having done his duty. Hartt then had his persecutors arrested and carried the case to the Court of Appeals, which declared emphatically that such conduct was a crime. The criminals were, however, let off on the plea that they did not know they were breaking the law." Mayor Hewitt had the satisfaction of seeing the full $2,500 made up to the boycotted man last week.

William of Germany, beside visiting King Christian of Denmark and Oscar of Sweden during the past week, has been favored of God with the gift of another son, his fifth child. His interview at Copenhagen had some importance in settling a family question connected with the Bulgarian throne. It seems that the Czar has at last consented to the creation of a Bulgarian monarchy with either Prince Waldemar, the youngest son of King Christian, or the Duke of Cumberland on the throne. The Duke of Cumberland has decisively rejected the offer. He declares the offer is an insult to him as the legitimate King of Hanover. King George of Greece, the brother of Prince Waldemar, opposes his candidature. Important events are certain to take place if Greece and Bulgaria come in conflict; and the young German Emperor will consult Bismarck before he goes any further in this matter. Respecting his visit to Italy, which the Pope so strenuously opposes, the Vatican diplomatists seem to have gained their purpose. Cardinal Galimberti, the papal agent at Vienna, is reported on a secret mission to Bismarck; and the latter has probably consented that William shall be asked personally to forego his visit to Rome. The Italian government understands that the Pope has gained his end, and has directly begun negotiations for a commercial treaty with France, and this arouses the distrust of Berlin officials, who view with suspicion any alliance made by the republic. The plots and counterplots of Europe seem thus to be without end, and insinuated in the midst of all the wily Jesuit is working to continue the disquiet and distrust, hoping to gain something from the public loss.

A very happy event for the great Liberal party in England and the sympathizers with its principles and efforts throughout the world was the celebration of the Golden Wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone last Wednesday. The aged, but vigorous statesman, and the wife who has so long been true to him at home and in public life, were given a reception at the residence of Earl Spencer in London, and were presented with some mementoes of the unusual occasion, among which were portraits of themselves and an address signed by 150 members of Parliament. Mr. Gladstone, replying to the congratulatory address of his old cabinet companion, Lord Granville, said that he wished to indorse all that the address contained with reference to his wife. It would be difficult, he said, to give adequate idea of the domestic happiness of his married life. With regard to the allusions to himself, he felt that they were too flattering. His conduct had been often criticised, sometimes, perhaps, unjustly, but he thought that on the whole the criticising had been more to his benefit than the reverse. He could fairly say that he was hardly able to recall an incident in his public life that was in any way painful to recollect. This is a marvelous record, which some of our budding American statesmen, who wish to make their record with a reformatory party, will do well to study.

THE FLOWER SURPASSING SOLOMON.

BY MISS E. E. FLAGG.

I have often thought St. Francis would have been a much wiser man if, instead of trying to preach to the birds and squirrels, he had gone into the woods and let the birds and squirrels preach to him. This July day I can seek no green avenues of shade and coolness, no carpets of moss, no fragrant retreats of sweet fern and brake; but on my writing table a profusion of pond lilies are opening their urns of ivory and gold as tranquilly as if resting on the bosom of their own quiet lake. And I do not believe St. Francis could have looked on this fairest of Nature's miracles, and inhaled their breath like the breath of the morning as it blows fresh and sweet and new from the hills of God, and not have dropped on his knees and let himself be preached to, poor miserable egotist that he was, if the old legends are true.

"Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God." This is the text from which my lilies preach to me; rooted in the mud and mire, type of the gross, material conditions of our earthly life; rising, crowned and regal into the air and sunshine, image of that spiritualized existence of which all human conditions are the earthly soil. "They shall grow as the lily," from the grime and dust of shops and factories, from the drudgery of farm and kitchen, from the mire of misfortune and poverty, from all untoward environments whatsoever they be, and nothing shall hinder their growing till rocked on the eternal deep "they see the King in his beauty."

How does the lily grow? Symmetrically, with an even and perfect development, always a prime condition of beauty, whether it be in a flower or a Greek vase, a tree or a Corinthian pillar. "We may not be always able to command perfection," says Hannah Moore, "but we can always require consistency." The world, dear reader, may call your consistency Puritanism, because you refuse to conform to worldly ways and maxims; but exactly what its wonderful symmetry is to the lily, consistency is to your Christian character.

It grows regally. It dons its crown of gold when it first opens to the sun and wears it every day like a king's child as it is. And is this more than you who are the sons and daughters of God ought to do? to wear the crown of your kingly anointing through all the days of the week, and let everybody see you wear it? your family circle, your friends and acquaintances, and "the stranger that is within your gates?" and years hence when the grass is green over you; alas how much easier one's grave is kept green than one's memory; they will not forget the vision.

It "goes on to perfection," increasing in beauty as its bloom matures. Whatever may be said of the rose, the lily does not reach its completest beauty till fully blown; and a Christian character only grows more beautiful with increasing maturity. Nor does "it make haste." It will not be forced to ur close except as the law of its own sweet being prompts. We should do more work and we should do it better, if unhurried and unworried like the lily, we simply did what God gave us to do, content with doing our best; if like the lily we were satisfied just to grow.

There is no concealment about her. She has nothing to conceal. There is no mystery. She is the most open-hearted of flowers. Notice how she bares her inmost bosom to the sun. No devouring insect can hide there as in the convolutions of the rose. And yet, into the secret of the lily who has penetrated? Scientists may talk learnedly, but who has yet told us how the lilies grow? And into the secret of "the life hid with Christ in God," what eye even angel or seraphim has looked? And so my lilies leave off where they began, with the secret that can never be told, the promise to the pure in heart of "that which eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man to conceive."

INCOMPREHENSIBILITY OF SIN.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The motto of the Greek philosopher was, "Know thyself." Men study the works of nature, in geology, botany, natural history, astronomy; they study the human body, its anatomy, physiology and hygiene, and they study the philosophy of the mind, its intellect, sensibilities and will. But the soul, the real self, is left a hidden, unexplored arcanum. If a man were to gather a precious cabinet at great expense of time, money and energy, and then keep it locked up, never looking at it himself and allowing no one else to enjoy it, every one would exclaim, "What unnatural folly!" and yet every man carries about an immortal soul, having capacities of eternal happiness or endless misery and all but universally ignorant of it. Thinking of the ignorance in which sin has sealed men's souls, the Psalmist exclaims, "Who can understand his errors?" Man cannot understand his sins.

I. Because the finite mind cannot comprehend the infinite guilt. Guilt consists in blameworthiness and liability to punishment. The knowledge of these comes through the law. "By the law is the knowledge of sin." 1. The law is a transcript of the divine character, and like God, is "holy, just and good." 2. It forbids sin, either of omission or commission. Failure to comply is rebellion just as well as transgressing the precept. "Sin is any want of conformity unto or transgression of the law of God." 3. The law is a unit and requires full comformity. Breaking the least precept is rebellion, just the same in kind as breaking every precept. A spark is the same element as the great conflagration, and if allowed to develop will make the great conflagration. "Whosoever shall keep the whole law and yet offend in one point is guilty of all." It is here as in nature's chain, whether you break the tenth or the ten thousandth link, it breaks the chain alike. 4. The law is spiritual. It judges our motives and states. The Saviour taught that it is a sin to feel wrong and think wrong. The law says, Thou shalt not kill. He that hateth his brother is a murderer. Covetousness is theft. Lust is adultery. Undue anxiety about our worldly interests is doubting God. It is unbelief. Paul says, "I had not known sin except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet." 5. Its obligation is unceasing. Not only for a day or a year or a life time, but forever. "If a righteous man turneth away from the righteousness which he hath done and committeth iniquity and dieth in them, for his iniquity that he hath done shall he die." So it is evident that every sin is incomprehensibly great, and our transgressions are more than the hairs of our head. We cannot answer for one of a thousand. Only a Divine Saviour can carry our guilt.

II. Because we cannot realize their power. The current of Niagara is smooth and silent. You would not think of its force until you come near the precipice where the great rocks in the channel offer resistance. The tornado sweeps over the open plain like a harmless zephyr; but when it enters the forests and rends in pieces mighty oaks, you recognize its power. A man who has been eating opium or drinking whisky or using tobacco for forty years, tries to break the habit. He suddenly opens his eyes to the fact that an irresistible force has taken hold of him. Sin is a habit of the soul. It becomes permanent by repetition. We speak of a confirmed drunkard, a confirmed liar. When the engineer was ready to build the bridge over the Niagara, he sent a kite across the chasm; by the cord he drew the first wire; over this the second, third, etc. At last they bound the bundle of wires together, making the great cable, upon which they built the bridge over which the trains of commerce come and go with perfect safety. The first sin is the first wire. Every repetition adds another wire. And at last there is a cable of habit which no finite power can break. Like the serpents of Laocon it holds the victim in its relentless folds. The sea-devil is the terror of fishermen. It comes up under the boat, throws its arms over the sides and carries it down. The only remedy is to take the hatchet and chop off the arms. And this must be done instantly. Sin is the sea-devil in human society. It throws the arms of temptation over our frail craft, and only by the hatchet of the divine law, wielded by the hand of faith, under the power of the grace of God, can we be delivered.

III. Because we loathe the search. If a man suspects that a dangerous disease is preying upon his body, he consults the best physician. He wants to know the worst. If he has a suspicion that his business interests are insecure, he examines his books and takes an inventory of his goods. He will know the worst. We know that our souls are diseased with sin, and that our accounts with God will not balance, and yet we go on in ignorance, because the search is repelling. You enter the palace. Over the portal is written, "Here God once dwelt." You turn into the chamber of reason. The dead are there. The light is darkness. Bitter is taken for sweet, crooked for straight. You turn to the chamber of the affections. It is a den of abominations. Unholy lusts reign there. It is a shame to speak of what is done there. You enter conscience chamber. It is perverted, seared as with a hot iron. You go out in disgust and close the door before the search is half completed. "The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked; who can know it." You essay to search your record, turning over leaf after leaf. Here is a black spot, a falsehood told. There is another—an injury done to another. And here is another—a fraudulent deed. By and by you are ashamed and close the book before half the pages have been scanned. "We can not answer for one of a thousand of our transgressions."

IV. Because we do not perceive their growth. Sin is a principle as well as an act. Plant the seed of a upas it grows. The stock, the branches, the leaves, the bud, the flower and fruit in turn appear. The first green blade seems harmless, the fruit is deadly. At first the serpent is a tiny, harmless creature. When grown it is the terror of man and beast. The principle of sin seems insignificant. But it develops into the full-fledged criminal. The author of the epistle to the Hebrews warns us to "beware lest our hearts be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin." Sin is an arch deceiver. 1. It deceives as to what is sin. Adam and Eve were thus deceived. Why do professing Christians buy and read the "Sunday newspaper" on Sabbath day? Why do they use the "Sunday train" for pleasure and profit? Why do they go to the postoffice to get their mail on the Lord's day? Why do nominal Christians unite with secret oath-bound fraternities, from which Christ is shut out and where darkness and not light prevails? They are deceived by sin. 2. It deceives us as to the nature of its demands. It promises to be satisfied with a limited indulgence. No man expects to become a sluggard. He only rests to-day. It is all the more certain he will take his ease to-morrow. It is doubly certain he will "lie off" the third day. "I went by the field of the slothful—it was grown over with thorns, a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep." No man intends to be a miser. But the process of getting develops covetousness, and that spirit is never satisfied. It cries incessantly, Give, give! It is the first step that costs. 3. It deceives us as to our motives. Many acts have an echo of virtue only. Virtue may be wholly selfish and superficial. Many have a name to live while they are dead. 4. It deceives us as to its effects. Adam and Eve expected to have their eyes opened. Their eyes were opened to see their own nakedness and the bitter consequences of transgression. After Judas had betrayed his Lord, his eyes were opened. He saw himself under the blaze of judicial light. After Macbeth had murdered Duncan he says, all the perfumes of Arabia will not take away the scent of blood; all the waters of ocean will not cleanse the stain from my hand. 5. It deceives us as to the degree of impurity with which we can sin. A man can think of an hundred ways in which he can avoid detection before he commits the murder. But after the crime has been committed everything is changed. He does too much or to little. He says too much or too little. He is too anxious or too indifferent. He becomes his own betrayer; murder will out. Macbeth heard a voice in every trembling leaf, in the wing of every herd, and in the babbling brook, "guilty."

V. Because our standard is wrong. A straight stick thrust into the water appears crooked. Look through green glasses and everything is green. Diseased eyes see not aright. Our spiritual eyes are diseased by sin. We look through the false medium of sin. Our judgments are always at fault. We call evil good and good evil. A single word. Our load of guilt Jesus has taken away. Our depraved nature may be restored by the spirit of grace. "It is God that worketh in us, both to will and to do of his own good pleasure." "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness."

IN THE MINORITY.

When good old Noah built the ark,
And nailed it firm and strong,
He had to bear the sneers and taunts
Of the ungodly throng.
Some called him "fanatic," some "fool,"
While others cried "insane";
Yet still he toiled upon the boat,
Nor feared his labor vain,
And said, "It will be well for me
To be in the minority."

When Sodom was by fire consumed,
And Lot fled for his life,
Adown the plains and o'er the hills—
Bereft e'en of his wife—
Afraid to cast a single glance
Along the backward way,
Or turn his gaze across the plains
Toward the orb of day,
He, too, exclaimed, "'Tis well for me
To be in the minority."

When spies were sent by Moses out
To search the goodly land,
The ten returned with faces grave,
The two with tidings grand.
The ten who vowed they were too weak
Fair Canaan ne'er possessed;
The two who trusted in their God
Obtained the promised rest.
In their case, too, 'twas well to be,
For once, in the minority.

And so to-day we'll take our chance—
Let cavil whoso will—
With those who tread the path of right,
And fight the lodge and still,
One with the Lord's almighty host;
So here our vows renew.
To drive all evil from the land,
We will be firm and true,
Until which time we're proud to be Right, though in the minority.

RUINED BY BAD COMPANY.

If the company of the wicked does not leave a smear it will leave a smell; if it be not deadly it will be dangerous. Some of us are more plastic or malleable than others, and we are the first to be impressed by our surroundings; it is to us, therefore, of the first importance to place ourselves in holy society, and shun all needless association with the godless as we would avoid the plague. We are ourselves acquainted with many who have been ruined by bad company—such were C——, who became a reprobate through spending his Sabbaths in excursions and amusements; F——, who was led into speculation and ultimate embezzlement through his friends of the billiard table; H——, who was never worth a penny piece after he had found his heaven in the banquets of the Freemasons; and J——, who went from bad to worse through the company of those who laugh at purity, and call vice pleasure. Indeed, the list is endless; and we shall be conceited to no ordinary degree if we imagine that we shall be safe where so many have fallen, never to rise again.—Spurgeon.

The striking engineers on the Burlington and Quincy railroad, beaten in their attempt to coerce the company by ordinary means, have been detected in destroying property and hazarding life by the use of dynamite. They have also failed in a conspiracy to destroy engines by the use of sal soda and emery, the former to prevent making steam and the latter to heat the bearings. Such barbarism would scarcely be countenanced in war, and clearly demonstrates the wisdom of Daniel Webster's suggestion, that the administration of secret lodge oaths should be prohibited by law. Past experience with the Ku Klux thugs, the Molly Maguire assassins, and the Chicago anarchists indicate that it is high time for the legal abolition of all secret societies. Some are more cunning or more polite in their methods, but the whole brood are inconsistent with the fundamental principles of Republican government and the Christian religion.—Christian Witness.

A VITAL POINT OF DIFFERENCE.

[Rev. J. K. Alwood in the Christian Conservator.]

A central object of Christianity is the purification of the heart. This it invariably and thoroughly accomplishes wherever and whenever it is fully embraced according to its own directions. Heaven is pure, and none but the pure can enter that holy abode. Jesus says to every soul, as he said to Peter: "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me." He also says: "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Paul says, and every true Christian repeats the declaration, that "He saved us by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost." Peter says of the Gentile converts at the house of Cornelius: "God put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith." John says: "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all unrighteousness."

That Masonry is not out on any such mission as purifying the hearts of men, is obvious from the following facts: 1. It excludes all minors; 2. excludes all ladies—i. e., more than half the human family; 3. all Negroes (they have lodges of their own, but the whites call them "clandestine"); 4. all invalids; 5. all maimed persons; 6. all deaf persons; 7. all blind; 8. all too poor to pay; 9. all slaves; 10. all who were not free-born. These ten classes comprise not less than five-sixths of the human family. (See Dr. Morris's "Dictionary of Freemasonry," p. 180, and Chase's "Digest of Masonic Law," pp. 198 to 212)

No one of ordinary intelligence, in this Christian land, laboring with the least sincerity for his own moral purity and that of others, could possibly consent to exclude those ten classes from the benefits of his labors. The idea is absurd on its face. Every one knows that it is contrary to the very idea of purity, which is attainable only through Christ, whose great heart says: "Go out into the strees and lanes, the highways and hedges, and constrain them to come in." This call brings multitudes to Christ who fall under the ban of exclusion from the lodge. And Jesus receives and purifies them. True, Masonry would gladly receive those who are already pure—provided they do not belong to one of the ten excluded classes,—but it does not receive men for the purpose of purifying them, or of bringing them up to a certain standard of moral excellency. It has no moral standard. Chase says: "It is Antimasonic to require any religious test, other than that the candidates should believe in a God, the Creator and Governor of the universe.... The religious views of a candidate are not to be regarded at all." (Digest, pp. 206, 208) It is folly to talk of laboring for the purity of a soul without the least regard for his religious belief. The same author says: "Freemasonry calls no man to account for his belief of any religion on the globe." (P. 208)

This proves beyond all question that the order gives no attention to the moral condition of the heart. It is impossible to require or to labor for moral purity in any rational way—especially in this land where "true light now shineth"—without a very careful regard to the religious opinions of the person to be reformed. But Masonry utterly ignores the religious opinions of its votaries, and says: "To require that a candidate profess a belief in the divine authenticity of the Bible, or a state of future rewards and punishments, is a serious innovation in the very body of Masonry." (Digest, p. 206) The Grand Lodge of Ohio (1856) quotes approvingly the following from an address by the "Most Worshipful Grand Master of Missouri, who says: 'We must away with the too prevalent idea that Masonry will make a good man out of corrupt material. Never admit an unworthy man with the hope that Masonry will make him better.'" (Proceedings, p. 461)

This reveals the whole matter. "Masonry will not make a good man out of corrupt material," according to the deliberate judgment of the M. W G. Master of Missouri, and of the Grand Lodge of Ohio in 1856. They say: "Never admit a man with the hope that Masonry will make him better." Vain hope, say these high authorities. No hope of moral improvement by the power of Masonry. Here is a plain confession that moral improvement is no part of the object in Masonic labor. They are not "laborers together with God," as Paul declares all Christians are, in the effort to purify the world. Masonry cannot take hold of bad material and make it better with its babyish "working tools—the twenty-four-inch gauge, gavel, plumb, square, level, trowel, chisel and mallet." It is foolish to talk of making a "man better" with such things. To this we have the explicit confession of their own most competent witnesses.

How long, then, will a man be so credulous as to believe the delusive profession of cheaper Masons, that "Masonry is the servant and hand-maid of the Christian church?" The truth is that Christianity stoops down and takes hold of "corrupt material," lifts it up and purifies it; then Masonry most delusively draws in all it can of this good material, and makes use of it for advertising purposes until the goodness is all corrupted and worn out. It borrows the livery of Christianity and all the good material it can possibly grasp, to keep up its reputation; and yet the wail goes up all over the land, "Masonry is good, but our lodge is made up of bad material."

THE BOSTON DEBATE.

[Letter of Rev. J. L. Withrow to Chicago Times.]

Going back to Boston, the people of that city are having an extraordinary agitation at present of a politico-religious character. The school board of that city has several Roman Catholic gentlemen in its membership. The mayor is of that religious faith, and, as well, other leading lights of the city government. In fact, for some years past the public offices have more and more been falling to the occupancy of Roman Catholics. With this accession and increase of official influence there has appeared a disposition on the part of the church to interfere in public affairs. The controlling vote of the city council has been understood to wait on the will of the church. An old ordinance which forbade preaching in the parks of the city was put into operation by this Catholic administration, against some of the most worthy and well known Protestant clergymen, who were addressing little companies of entirely orderly people on the Common on Sunday afternoon. These clergymen were sternly arraigned and fined and two of them thrown into jail, where one of them has been for many months and still is. Without doubt there was legal ground for their punishment. But when it is unquestionably true that the police permit open and flagrant violations of ordinances by saloons and gambling houses and brothels to go on untouched, month in and month out, it is more than right-minded citizens will bear long when the same police are instructed to arrest preachers of the Gospel for the mere offense of reading the Bible in the public grounds. But as this course of official severity was tolerated by the town with no more than a mild complaint, the Catholic powers felt encouraged to go further. Of late there have been urgent measures by the church to withdraw children of their families from the public schools, and to largely multiply parochial schools under the exclusive care of ecclesiastical instruction. This movement has been understood to be pressed by the Jesuits—that particular branch of the church which has made itself so obnoxious in countries abroad and also very recently in a part of Canada, so as to be banished from their borders. Whether these were the aggressive offenders in Boston I do not know certainly. But, anyhow, a few months ago one Father Metcalf made complaint to the school board against a teacher (Mr. Travis) and against a school book ("Swinton's Outlines of World History"), demanding that both should be removed from their places in the public schools of Boston. The objection to the book lay against a single paragraph, which tells of the sale of papal indulgences; and the objection to the teacher was that he explained the paragraph to the scholars after the manner that Protestant history has usually.

Had the Congregationalists of Boston demanded that all pages, paragraphs, and instructions in history concerning the burning of witches and the persecution of Quakers and Baptists in early time should be expunged and omitted, there is small ground of suspicion that these gentlemen of the school board would have spent an hour in considering their request. But when the Catholic church, to which they owed their election, ordered Swinton and Travis to be dishonored and disciplined, the same gentlemen made haste to obey. Here the forbearance of the public broke down and a great disturbance arose. Pulpit after pulpit has been speaking, and some of the strongest newspapers in the city have dealt unsparing criticism on the conduct of the board. Now the movement has developed into mass meetings, and there was a gathering in Faneuil Hall last week, the like of which has not been known since the stormy days of Abolitionism before the war. The old Cradle of Liberty, as the historic hall is fondly called, was made to rock after the most violent fashion of former days. Every inch of room was occupied by men and women who —as there were no seats—stood through a protracted meeting in forgetfulness of fatigue, and went wild with enthusiasm over every utterance of the speakers which criticised the school board. Particularly strong feeling was evinced against Rev. J. T. Duryea, pastor of a Congregational church, who has been prominent in yielding to the demands of the priests. His election to a place on the board followed closely after a sermon in which he went out of the way of the subject to exalt the excellencies of the church, and this, followed by his course in the present conflict, put the audience in such a temper as that they refused to listen to a word of explanation which a friend sought to utter in Dr. Duryea's behalf.

To just what the agitation may come no one can tell. But there is enough revealed now to make it evident that the American people will not endure open or secret effort of any church to control public affairs. As to his religious belief every citizen has a right to hold what suits him. Jew and Gentile, Christian and skeptic, Protestant and Papist must not be denied their freedom of faith. But just as soon as any church is clearly seen to be plotting for political power in order to subject the life of the people to the law of a particular sect, the people will rise in their strength and consume the scheme with their indignation. Let all church leaders in all cities take notice that the wildly excited mass meeting in Faneuil Hall, Boston, last week meant very much!

DR. M'COSH ON SECRETISM.

The venerable Dr. James McCosh closed his term of twenty years as president of Princeton College on the 20th inst, the commencement day of the college year, by a farewell address. It is published by Charles Scribner's Sons. The career of Dr. McCosh has been signalized for its eminent success during these twenty years, and he retires from his position with more honor, perhaps, than any who have preceded him. His farewell address consists mainly in a brief review of his work and its immediate results as far as known. The number of students has more than doubled since he was inaugurated in 1867, and there has been a steady improvement in the efficiency of the college. We cannot but admire the constancy of purpose and labor, the high moral principles and the consecrated scholarship and ability with which Dr. McCosh has fulfilled his mission to this country.

As an example of the rectitude with which he governed the college we have in this address a brief account of his administration in reference to those secret societies which are so often the source of annoyance and wrong in our colleges. We present our readers with his brief narrative on this subject:

"When I became connected with Princeton, the secret Greek Letter fraternities had considerable power in the college. The trustees years before had passed a law requiring every entering student to come under a solemn obligation to have no connection whatever with any secret society. I felt from the beginning that the college was in this respect in a very unhappy position, the students signing a pledge which a number of them knowingly violated. On inquiry I discovered that while some of the societies did mean to foster pleasant social feelings and to create a taste for oratory, yet that their influence was upon the whole for evil. I soon found that the societies sought to get the college honors to their members and to support those who were under college discipline. I felt that, as the head of the college, I must put an end to this state of things. I was powerfully aided, or rather led, in carrying this out by the late Dr. Atwater, who had more credit than I in suppressing the secret societies.

"One courageous student set himself vigorously to oppose the attempt to get the college honors to members of the fraternities. The difficulty was to get evidence. But certain lodges got photographs taken of their members. These fell into our hands. The offenders stood clearly before us. I summoned them before the faculty. They did not deny the charge and we sent them home. In a short time each sent in a paper in which he promised to give up all connection with secret societies. I retained these papers for a time to secure that the promise should be kept, but I have shown them to no one. The faculty restored the students who, I believe, kept their word. Now the great body of the students would earnestly oppose the reintroduction of these fraternities into our college. Most of the professors in the American colleges profess to lament the existence of such societies, but have not the courage to suppress them. I am sorry to find that of late some eminent men belonging to other colleges have been defending these secret organizations."—Christian Instructor.

THE RAILROAD LODGES.

The great meeting of the secret unions of locomotive engineers, firemen, brakemen and switchmen at St. Joseph, Mo., closed last Wednesday. It was a meeting of great secrecy; nothing appearing in public print except such items as the officers chose to make known. An audacious reporter had concealed himself overhead by a chandelier, but was discovered and marched off to jail.

The meeting seemed to be entirely controlled by the hot-heads of the orders. Uncompromising war was declared on the Burlington road, and nothing but an absolute surrender to the strikers was approved.

One of the objects of this meeting was to arrange matters financially pertaining to the strike. It has been claimed by many that the Brotherhood treasury was depleted, and that the Eastern men were in favor of declaring the strike off in order that the assessments for the support of the strikers might be discontinued. It was stated positively by the press committee of the brotherhood that the Eastern men are heartily in favor of a continuance of the strike and that sufficient finances were arranged for to carry the strikers until the four organizations are federated. The federation plan was indorsed by the meeting and it is quite certain that in less than four months the scheme will be in force. Each of the four brotherhoods will hold conventions as follows to consider the matter: Brotherhood of Engineers, at Richmond, in October; Brotherhood of Firemen, at Atlanta, Ga., in September; the Switchmen, at St. Louis, in September; Brotherhood of Brakemen, at Columbus, Ohio, in October.

None of the managers of the organizations concerned were present, with one exception, and he suddenly left the first day. There is much dissatisfaction openly expressed with "Chief" Arthur's conservative management. The Eastern engineers are represented to incline to his views, and to note with distrust the movements of the Western lodges. The movement is greatly weakened by the absence of the leaders, and may not succeed.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

THE JESUITS AND MASONRY IN BOSTON. QUINT TRUE TO HIS COLORS.

BOSTON, July 25, 1888.

I want to make special mention of the kindness shown me by Captain Jones and his family, Mr. McCloskey and Mr. Lincoln since my arrival in this city. I have done an immense amount of tramping in the past three days, and to how much purpose remains to be seen. Most of the pastors are absent, and those who remain are absorbed in the Anti-Catholic, Free-school and Free-speech question. The general press says little, and one would scarcely suspect from reading the current news the deep feeling that stirs the blood of reformers since the development of what they believe to be a deep plot of the Jesuits to control Boston, including its parks, pulpits and public schools.

Since the onslaught on Dr. Gordon, Bros. Hastings and Davis for preaching on the Common, and the demonstration about Faneuil Hall by Irish Catholics, to prevent British Americans from celebrating Queen Victoria's Jubilee, two papers have been started in the interests of constitutional and religious rights. The British American Citizen deals hard blows and is said to have a strong backing. I met its editor, Mr. Long, yesterday and endeavored to secure the insertion of an article opposed to the lodge system. He assured me that he was not connected with any secret lodge, but evidently thought he had as many evil spirits as he could corral at present. The Free Press is not so large as its neighbor, but equally spicy and vigorous. A brief article from its issue of the 7th inst. will recall some truths that have been told in a plain way in the Cynosure about the Rev. gentleman mentioned:

REV. DR QUINT REWARDED.

Rev. Alonzo H. Quint is well known to many of our readers. He is known to them as the man who justified the city authorities in arresting and punishing a Christian minister for exercising the time-immemorial right of free, unlicensed preaching of the Gospel upon the Common. He pleaded for the Mayor, and smote a servant of Jesus. The Globe made great capital of the Rev. Dr. Quint's opinion, and the hands of the wicked were strengthened in their wicked ways. That was a service not to be forgotten, nor to be allowed to pass unrewarded. And so we read, at the Boston Theatre, on the 4th, His Honor, the Mayor, presented himself on the platform, accompanied by three other gentlemen, one of whom was Alonzo H. Quint. We read in the Herald: 'The Mayor briefly introduced the Rev. Mr. Quint, who offered an appropriate prayer." "Verily," says Jesus, "I say unto you, they have their reward.' Let us rather side with Christ and his Gospel; standing for our rights and liberties as members of a free nation, and having the consciousness that we are with God and that God is with us.

When talking with Bro. Davis I said, "Do you think Masonry had anything to do with your arrest?"

He replied: "Most assuredly I do. It was at the bottom of the whole affair. I had spoken against the lodge on the square in Chelsea, and on Boston Common I showed the relation of the secret empire to civil government, and was arrested for that sermon. When brought into court I objected to there being any Masons on the jury, and offered to show cause. The judge overruled and I was sentenced on four counts in the extreme penalty of the law—three months on each count—which my attorney tells me is the severest sentence he has ever known in the city courts."

Rev. A. H. Quint, 32° Mason, says, "So mote it be." And, by the way, I have learned of a Rev. gentleman who boasts of belonging to many secret lodges, and indorses the arrest of God's servant for preaching the Gospel, and says, "They served him right. He deserved it."

Bro. Hastings is, of course, on the war-path, and by extra illustrated issues of his paper, the Christian, is making it interesting for the Jesuitical crew. That the lodge is a power capable of doing immense damage in this city is evidenced in the fact that a list of 571 secret lodges is given in the Boston Directory for 1888, while the number of churches is 223—only thirty-seven of which are Catholic.

At the Congregational Publishing House yesterday, the first man I met, seated at a secretary's desk, sported a keystone (H. T. W. S. S. T. K. S). I spoke of Dr. Langworthy and Dr. Tarbox, who are now dead, and referred to their interest in the anti-lodge work, and how much such men are needed in these apostate days to meet the increasing flood of false worships, etc., but received only silence in return. When the American people get at the bottom facts they will find Jesuitism and Freemasonry "hand and glove," and perhaps the latter more dangerous than the former to our liberties, and more difficult to eradicate, since the betrayers and unrepentant deniers of Christ in the lodge sit at the receipt of customs and occupy the highest seats in Protestant churches. The god of this world will HONOR his own, as seen in the case of "His Honor, the mayor," introducing "His Reverence" at the "Boston Theater."

Bro. McFall is in ill health, and with his family is absent from the city. The latest word is encouraging, and his devoted congregation are hoping for his speedy and safe return. The ranks have been thinned since I came here first to meet Father Green, but younger men with less experience are coming up to fill their places, and the duty of those who know the truth to turn on the light is more and more apparent. Along with the opportunity may God give grace to do all he requires. J. P. STODDARD.

THE COLORED BAPTIST STATE CONVENTION OF LOUISIANA.

CASTE AND SECRETISM.

BOYCE, La., July 19, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I left Shreveport Tuesday. Rev. W. H. Bolding preached the introductory sermon before the Baptist State Convention, and Rev. A. S. Jackson preached a sermon on sanctification. Both sermons were powerful. Friday, the 13th, was quite a busy day. The new officers were properly installed and filled their places with honor.

I distributed many tracts and copies of the Cynosure on Friday and Saturday. This excited the secretists, and many of them denounced my actions, but would not talk to me; while others demanded that I prove that secret lodges were devilish. Bro. Thompson seemed more prejudiced than any one else. Grand Master Ladd and Bro. Antoine Robinson both acted like Christians. They thought I had a right to distribute any kind of literature I chose. Rev. V. Chapman had a lengthy article in the Shreveport Monitor of the 7th inst., entitled "The Needs of the Negro." Among other truths he spoke of the need of exercising economy and ceasing extravagant expense, and he continued: "The Negroes have flocked and are flocking to secret societies for protection, equality, money and fine burial. They are taught to throw up their distress signs, which are license for laziness. Thousands of dollars are paid monthly unto the treasury of the different secret societies, and a few worthy superiors, or dignified officers, are feasting on the fat of the land; and a great many are suffering in their homes. The cause of Christ is suffering financially, and the Christian church must stoop to many schemes which are not honorable, simply for financial success. I pray God that I could hear ten thousand voices thundering from the sacred desk against this monster." After I had read the above I very heartily endorsed it, and that seemed to kindle the angry fire of some of my North Louisiana brethren and they began a tirade.

Rev. Dr. Pennix, pastor of the First Baptist church of Shreveport (white), was introduced Friday morning and made a speech in which he urged the unity and co operation of the white and colored Baptists. He is president of the white Baptist State Executive Board. If Bro. Pennix is a secretist, he certainly offended the dignity of his clan in his speech. Although his church corner-stone recognizes Masonry, yet I am inclined to believe from his remarks he is an Anti-mason. Rev. Dr. Boone, editor of the Baptist Chronicle, of Shreveport, was next introduced, and his remarks were similar to those of Dr. Pennix, but radical respecting a separated ministry. Dr. Wm. J. Simmons was next called on to speak and he filled the whole audience with joy. Rev. A. R. Blount preached a very able sermon on missions. Although a Mason, he certainly preached the truth.

The following letter was received and read with joy to the convention:

MANSFIELD, La., July 12, 1888.

To the Colored Baptist State Convention assembled at Shreveport, La.:

DEAR BRETHREN.—At our recent session we adopted unanimously the following resolution:

Resolved, That we extend to our colored brethren much sympathy in their efforts to better their condition religiously; and pledge ourselves to give to them any information or instruction we can in this direction; and that it is the sense of this Convention that our pastors make opportunity to preach to them Fraternally,

G. W. HARTSFIELD,

Recording Secretary of the Louisiana Baptist State Convention.

P. S.—If my engagements had not prevented I would have been pleased to attend your session in Shreveport.

G. W. H.

The above was received with much enthusiasm. We are glad to see that our white brethren of the South are gradually beginning to remove the color line prejudice in religious circles. Rev. A. S. Jackson answered the letter by making a fifteen-minute speech, praising God, for his mercy endureth forever. We have always been ready and willing to co-operate with our white brethren of the South, but they have heretofore kept up the rail of prejudice. Our pulpits, churches and homes have always been open to them.

Rev. A. Hubbs preached at Antioch Baptist church Sabbath. He gave the secret empire all it could stand and appealed to the ministers to be separate and preach an unadulterated Gospel. His sermon was forcible, and old Baal trembled in his secret boots. Loud and many were the responses, "Amen!" A good work has been inaugurated in Shreveport. The tracts distributed and Cynosures have surely set the people to thinking. Dear Northern friends, how can you withhold the Lord's money when so much work can be done among these poor people and thousands be saved from the secret pits of lodge deviltry by sending Cynosures South?

Revs. B. Dorsey and H. C. Green preached at Evergreen Baptist church Sabbath evening. The lodge also received a blow from God's Word by those two faithful ministers.

I made the acquaintance of many warm-hearted Christians in Shreveport I made a mistake in my last letter. The majority of colored people here own their own little homes and are doing moderately well. If rum and secret societies were excluded the people would do much better. I have found many opponents to lodgery, but as in other cities, they fear the lodge grip and dare not speak against it.

The Baptist State Convention closed Monday evening. During the executive session Monday the question of the Christian Herald, the Baptist State organ, came up. This caused quite a sensation for a while, as brethren Blount, Parrow and Ladd all fought valiantly to defeat the paper, because it has taken a strong stand against lodgery; but after the secretists saw we were determined to have the paper despite their opposition, they agreed to support it.

I preached here Tuesday night at Williamson's Chapel M. E. church, Rev. A. B. Venabel, pastor. This church is about five miles from Boyce in the hill country. Crops are not very good in this section. Boyce is a new town, settled since the railway came through, with about 250 inhabitants. There are two secret lodges here, the Farmer's Alliance and the Seven Stars of Consolidation. Many people are united with these secret lodges, but with the tracts and Cynosures distributed I think the lodge has received a stroke of paralysis. I preached against lodgery Tuesday night and have distributed a great many tracts.

The harvest is fast ripening all over the State. Rev. A. B. Venabel and Rev. Isom Jordan are both free from the secret lodge grip.

I go from here to Walnut Hill, thence to Alexandria and Chaneyville. Pray for God's blessing on our Southern work. Francis J. Davidson.

RENEWING OLD WISCONSIN ACQUAINTANCE.

Milwaukee, Wis., July 23, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—If any should wonder why a great rich city has grown up here, he has only to visit the magnificent country, the beautiful scenery, and the splendid harvests that are in the immediate vicinity. This, together with the little river that forms a natural harbor, has made this the second city of the Lake. As I have considered its numerous railroads, its grand avenues and costly buildings, I could but regret that its most important "industry" should be the manufacture of lager beer, and that much of this abounding wealth is the price that men have paid for that which impoverished and debased them. That so strong a man as President Cleveland should have weakly consented to publicly drink with these destroyers, and practically consent to and endorse their nefarious business, is surely deplorable.

No crop is raised so largely in this part of the State as barley. Just now an immense area is being harvested with an ample yield, and is morally certain to be made into beer. The perversion of a useful grain to a vile purpose is not so great an evil as the perversion of conscience that it induces. It brings the farmer into intimate relations with the brewer and saloon-keeper, and leads him to instinctively feel that the demand for prohibition is a direct attack on his most profitable business. There are many good men who raise barley—there are few that see to it that it is used for a legitimate purpose.

After a pleasant visit with our steadfast friend, Dea. M. R. Britten, I was kindly taken to Burlington, Wis., and came to this city. Here I was disappointed in finding no one who is interested in our work, nor any mail in the postoffice. I was, after long walking, thoroughly tired and quite unwell. I seriously thought of going back to Chicago for rest and recuperation, but finally concluded to go to Waukesha. There I was most kindly received and entertained by Mr. J. F. Ike. Quite unexpectedly I found my brother and his wife, who reside in Neenah; also Rev. Isaiah Faris, of Vernon, who kindly took me out to his parish and introduced me to most of the families of his congregation.

At night (19th) I listened to an able address on prohibition by Rev. M. A. Gault, and by invitation added a few remarks. It was soon arranged that I should give a lecture on the secret lodge system the next evening. On the 20th Rev. M. A. Gault came and took me to see a large number of families. I also visited Rev. J. B. Galloway, who invited me to remain over Sabbath and preach in the U. P. church. At night I found a good congregation who listened with excellent attention to my arraignment of the lodge.

There is scarcely one in the entire community who does not sympathize with our reform. Nearly every family is of Scotch origin, and belongs to either the United or Reformed Presbyterian church. Pastors Faris and Galloway have not been remiss in instructing their people, and have faithfully upheld the principles of their denominations. Would that all pastors were alike faithful!

On Saturday I rested. On Sabbath listened to an excellent discourse from Bro. Galloway, and in the afternoon visited with him the county poor farm, where we had an interesting meeting with the inmates. Some of them were professed Christians and persons of considerable education. They were pleased with our visit, and several of the men expressed some knowledge of and sympathy with the anti-lodge work in which I am engaged. One old woman, reputed to be 100 years old, had been a slave in the State of New York; had seen General Lafayette and remembered him well. She was the only colored pauper, and was a person of good mind and fervent piety. I was glad to see that all seemed comfortably fed and cared for.

At night there was a threatening of rain and the congregation was not large. I spoke on the colored people of the South and their relation to the secret orders. Excellent attention and much sympathy was manifested. Pastor Galloway made able remarks in the enforcement of what I had said. Sixty-three dollars in money and pledges were received in this community; and $108 since I came into the State. Up to date there has been received for the New Orleans work $375. There is every reason to think the $1,000 asked for will soon be made up. I cannot speak too highly of the great kindness and hospitality of the Christian people of Waukesha county. I go, D. V., to Waupun.

Yours in the Lord, H. H. Hinman.

SOWING AND REAPING IN IOWA.

Dear Cynosure:—From Earlham I went to Stuart and spent the Sabbath there. I spoke twice in the Friends church in the city, and once at a meeting three miles in the country. I returned from Stuart to Earlham to finish my canvass there, and then went to Casey and met with the Friends in their Fourth day meeting. The hurry of harvest made their meeting small, but the Lord met with us and "manifested himself to us as he doth not unto the world." I preached the word to them, and then took the cars and came on to Atlantic, in Cass county.

I called upon Rev. Mr. Truesdale, the pastor of the United Presbyterian church, who readily subscribed for the Cynosure, and expressed himself in hearty sympathy with the work of the Iowa Association. In the country towards Cass Center, some eight miles from Atlantic, I took four subscribers, and Mrs. Graham hospitably entertained me. The next day I returned to Atlantic and secured one donation to the work, and three other subscriptions. This increases the number of Cynosure readers secured in the three weeks of labor since my visit home to forty-one; eight of whom are ministers of the Gospel, and seven of them ministers in the Friends church.

The evidence continually accumulates in proof of the fact that Odd-fellows, as well as Masons, are cherishing the delusive hope of climbing up to heaven by their own inventions, forgetting that "there is no other name given under heaven, or among men, whereby we can be saved," but the name of Jesus. How artfully has Satan contrived, through the secret lodge system, to build men up in their own righteousness and delude them into cherishing false hopes of heaven. The evidence of this constantly accumulates as I go forward in my work.

If we could close our eyes to the fact that the administration of justice is perverted by the obligations administered and the clannish spirit created in the lodge, we would still be confronted by a gigantic conspiracy to supplant Christ as the one only way to God and heaven. How Christians, who are taught in the Word of God, "Whether they eat or drink, or whatever they do, to do all in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ," can unite in a confession of faith that ignores Christ, our Lord, and in a ritual of worship that ignores that name through which alone we can come to God, is a mystery to be solved only on the supposition that they do not realize what they are doing.

Christians in the lodge are yoked with unbelievers. They are positively forbidden to be thus yoked. The authorized worship of the lodge is Christless; and, therefore, false, deceptive, Satanic. Satan is the inspiration of all false worship. Satan is, therefore, the god of the lodge. How can Christians combine with unbelievers in the worship of devils? May we not pray for them as Jesus prayed for his murderers while hanging on the cross, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do?"

When such Christians awake to the enormity of their sin in countenancing and encouraging the false worships of the lodge, by refusing or neglecting to renounce the covenants that bind them thereto, and do at last come out from among them and separate themselves to Christ, as they are commanded to do, they will doubtless, like Paul, exclaim, "I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly." It is not conceivable that they could, Judas-like, play the double role of friendship to Christ and to his enemies with their eyes open to what they were doing, and afterwards come to true repentance towards God, so as to obtain mercy through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Christian reformers, let us preach the gospel of separation from sin and the world to Christ. Satan must not be permitted to dominate our churches through the agency of the secret lodge system. We must liberate the churches and unite their testimony against the lodge.

Next year, when the din of political strife has ceased, and the smoke of battle rolled away, the churches should hold another congress, like the one at Chicago last year, to consider the lodge question. The fact, that from seven hundred thousand to one million church members were represented by delegates at the first congress of churches to consider this question has awakened the attention of many. President George, who presided over the first congress, favors the calling of another such convention.

MEETING OF THE MAINE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

A special meeting of the Maine Christian Association, followed by a Holiness Convention, was held in Journal Block Hall, Lewiston, June 19, 20, 21, 22. The attendance was not large, but an excellent spirit prevailed. Elder L. E. Pendleton preached on the State of the Church, I. D. Haines on Divine Healing, and S. C. Kimball on Practical Holiness. Elder Kimball also gave a lecture showing the relation of secret fraternities to the church. Elder F. G. Folsom, a seceding Freemason, fully explained the wickedness of Masonry, and its sharp antagonism to the Gospel. The Dexter church invited the Association to hold its next annual meeting there, and the invitation was accepted. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we hereby express our sympathy with Rev. Wm. F. Davis, now confined in Charles street jail, Boston, for no other offense than preaching the Gospel to the poor on public ground, and we respectfully ask Gov. Oliver Ames to set him at liberty unconditionally, and immediately.

Resolved, That we acknowledge Bro. L. E. Pendleton to be a humble servant of God, and commend him, as our State missionary, to the confidence and support of all Christian people.

Resolved, That we recommend the Christian Witness, published at New Market, N. H., as a safe family paper, and will pray and work for its continued prosperity.

Resolved, That we disapprove of all secret societies, and believe that the Bible teaches that it is a sin for Christians to join in any worship that excludes Jesus Christ. I. D. Haines, Secretary.

We have a good report from Elder L. E. Pendleton, Maine State missionary and evangelist. He has recently visited one hundred families, distributed about four hundred pages of tracts, introduced a good number of Christian papers, and held several meetings. Friends in Maine should at once take measures to support Bro. Pendleton in his blessed work of preaching a pure Gospel to the poor. Offerings for this work may be sent to L. E. Pendleton, West Winterport, Me., or N. W. Goddard, treasurer M. C. A., West Sidney, Me.—Christian Witness.

TEMPERANCE AND THE GOOD TEMPLARS.

Dear Cynosure:—It costs to espouse any one of the reforms of these times. To embrace them all costs more. By the help of the God of all reforms I consecrate myself to them all—all that I see. What must we do to be saved in such a profligate age as this? "When the Son of man shall come shall he find faith on the earth?" Where are the clean men? "Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth and the faithful fail from among men."

Oh, brother, is not this sadly true now? Our world overflows with pious cant, but where are the godly men? Men suppose if they embrace one of the reforms of this age of general apostacy they are grand reformers. Temperance in the Bible means more than to close our mouths against intoxicants —all intoxicants. How few temperance men, so called, do even this? Temperance demands universal and perpetual restraint of all sinful passions. Our five or our six (more or less) senses are all grievous sinners, and need more watching than thieves and robbers that only rob the purse. "Touch not, taste not, handle not." Turn away mine eyes from beholding iniquity." Many will suppose if they vote against rum they deserve a martyr's crown; and some who do so may get the martyr's death whether they get his crown or not.

Men who vote Prohibition and die in the cause may be great sinners. To live godly in Christ Jesus leads to persecution certainly, peradventure to death, and then surely to the martyr's crown. See Bible proofs here and then say, amen.

Our Lackawanna county, Pa., tent has just left us for Carbondale. We hope for some good from its three days' visit here. Many important facts and principles were developed, and I trust some good done. The main speaker of Saturday evening (14th inst.) left the impression, inadvertantly perhaps, that the Good Templars were the champions of "moral suasion" and made their failure very conspicuous—seeming to set forth that only a very few out of a vast multitude were saved by that organization. Still he declared himself a Good Templar. He ignored the old Washingtonians, who, perhaps, did far more by moral suasion than any society up to the time of the grand, effective W. C. T. U. Your humble correspondent worked with the Washingtonians, as lecturer, before that child of Masonry, the I. O. of G. T., was heard of. The W. C. T. U. was not recognized in the work of moral suasion by this speaker. Preachers Allen and Scull of the M. E. church did good work in the tent Sunday morning and evening, with which we co-operated in prayers and remarks. Some anti-prohibition arguments turned up: such as egg-nog on the roof of the tent, whisky and beer wailing, swaying the tent by its ropes, etc.; no actual and destructive demonstrations as in South Gibson and Montrose occurred.

Now as "Prohibs" are embarked in the work of genuine reform, let every man of them see that he deports himself as a reformer is expected to do. The old parties are "license" parties, and are in favor of "liberty" to do many things which would be totally out of character with us. Scores of things may be practiced with impunity by the dominant parties, any one of which would sink a reform party into the "bottomless pit" of political filth. If St. John had been found guilty of being bribed, he would have found a level with others in the old parties. When the old parties look for better things in us, they pay us a high compliment. Let them not look in vain. As an old soldier, who has worked against slavery and rum from the year 1839 and from 1872 against lodgery, till this hour, I have to say to the veterans of the grand army of the Redeemer, "Let [our] moderation be known to all men." Right here let me say to all true reformers, to whom this may come, let us not perpetrate the popular political follies.

1. Ill-chosen political anecdotes, which tend to put sacred truth and the Bible into bad company; which excite mere levity in the hearer. Nothing but truth in her sacred, dignified dress is needed in a holy cause. To preserve the purity of home is the holiest of causes, and that is our work. Don't let us limp after low politicians in telling low and polluting stories to excite nothing better than laughter, which the bar-room can echo better than we. Jesus and the apostles never did it.

2. Excessive and ill-deserved applause is clear below the grave and dignified character of our work. Let the fate of old Herod warn us against applauding human beings, however competent and eloquent. God has worms to eat the flesh of kings when they give not God the glory due to him. We think of Herod "who was eaten of worms and died," when we see the cheap applause so popular at the great demonstrations. Say we, no harm is meant? Perhaps not. But what is the tendency? It is to divert the mind from God to man, to fan his pride and arrogance. "Let him that glorieth, glory in the Lord."

3. How about badges? Did any of the primitive saints ever wear a badge? Paul did, but it was a chain. My badge is my ballot.

NATHAN CALLENDER.

DR. JACKSON, THE OLD ABOLITIONIST.

DEAR EDITOR:—I send you the farewell words of one of the old dying Abolitionists; one who was in at the forepart of that famous battle; one of the most earnest, untiring, eloquent and logical, of all the early advocates of emancipation in this country. He was a compeer of Garrison, Phillips, Lydia Maria Child, Abby Kelley, and the most able of the so-called "Garrisonians;" but soon left that branch of the Abolition army because of their non-voting doctrines, and united with the Liberty party for political action as well as moral suasion against slavery, and was then and thereafter associated with Wm. Goodell, Alvin Stewart, the Tappans, Wm. L. Chaplin, Gerritt Smith and others who supported Birney for the Presidency in 1840. He was also editor of the Madison county Abolitionist and associate editor of the Albany Patriot.

Broken down in health while laboring in the anti-slavery cause, he established the famous water cure at Glen Haven, N. Y., which has become the largest and most famous sanatarium now in the world, and now located at Dansville, N. Y., and from whence is issued that able and instructive magazine, The Laws of Life and Health

The doctor would have died years ago, so broken down and diseased was he, had it not been for his strictly hygienic living and hydropathic treatment. His malignant cancer has been held in check and his useful life preserved by the successful treatment of Dr. Brown of North Adams, Mass., under whose care he has been for a few years past. The doctor is now 78, but has been wonderfully forciful and active up to within a short time, and would have years of usefulness before him yet were it not for this relentless foe that is eating out the vital forces of his life. But the over 20,000 patients that have listened to his able and instructive lectures on the laws of life and health and have not taken treatment at his "Cure," and the thousands who have heard him on the crime of human slavery, will never forget Dr. James C. Jackson; nor will those who see this article forget to pray for him in this last terrible struggle of his life, nor will they fail to rejoice with him in his Christian resignation, his Christian faith and Christian hope. If, in the Providence of God, we meet never again on earth, with heart and soul I respond, "Good-bye, dear comrade of the days of old!" But we have formed those bands above which time can never dissever; and since "parting in a Saviour's love we part to meet forever!"

GEO. W. CLARK.

NORTH ADAMS, Mass.

....Now for my story of myself. I have been shut up longer this winter than at any previous winter. During the entire time, more than four months, I was not out of doors save a few times. When spring came I began to go out leisurely, and I ride out daily every fair day; but I am so feeble as yet that I dare not venture to go to Dansville, lest the journey would fatigue me to exhaustion, and that would end me. My face at present is quiescent, but one-half of my nose is gone, and if I live long enough the other half will go. My last operation, which was in November, almost killed me. Not because of suffering, but by reason of its reflex influence on my organic diseases. It took away strength and left me permanently debilitated. I have not recovered and never shall till I put off this mortal, and "death shall be swallowed up in victory."

I do not murmur nor repine. Why should I? Considering what sort of natural, physical constitution was given me, what kind of early rearing I had, what an environment up to middle life was mine, what the character of the age in which I have lived and agitations which I have helped to inaugurate, I can only say, as I examine myself and compare my present state of mental enlightenment and of moral and, especially, of spiritual perceptions of truth along her higher ranges, with the state in which I was ten years ago, Behold what Christ has wrought! I look forward, not backward, upward and onward, not merely around me and on earth's plane. Unless you should come East, I shall not see you more till we meet on the shores of the sea of glass, where only delectable things live undecayingly.

Good bye, my dear comrade of the days of old! We have lived and labored and loved the right and the true together. A checkered life ours has been, but rich in divine consolations of brotherly love. Few men can say what we can say, that nearly fifty years of life have passed of uninterrupted, loving associations. Good bye!.... JAMES.

PITH AND POINT.

WORSE AND WORSE FOR THE NEW YORK CANDIDATE.

As to W. Martin Jones, of Buffalo, Prohibition nominee for Governor of New York State, he is both an Odd fellow and a Mason. In 1885, when he was nominated by the party, I wrote to him asking him how he stood on the secret lodge question. He answered very promptly and unhesitatingly that he was a member of both the above named organizations.—PETER D. MILLER, Wright's Corners, N. Y.

A KENTUCKY PASTOR AT WORK.

I received the tracts and papers, or pamphlets, you sent me against secret societies. I sincerely thank you for the same. I am a colored minister in charge of four churches. There are two secret societies on my work. I will endeavor to make a judicious use of them among our people. Please send the Christian Cynosure to me if you possibly can. I have more than 240 members under my pastoral care. We have a great many petty secret societies in some counties among our people. We now have quite a number of Odd-fellows. Can you send a good book against them. I need one very much at this time.—E. J SIMPSON, Weston, Ky.

PAUL AGAINST THE LODGE.

The word of God through the instrumentality of Paul is not at peace with lodgery. Christians need the light so as to be in harmony with God and his Word on the secrecy question. Paul says, 'Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret." Brethren should examine their hearts carefully and see to it that they are in harmony with God and his Word on this line. To accord with the Word and Spirit of God you will feel in your soul that you would "rather reprove them" than those who fight the lodge.—CYRUS SMITH.

A FRIEND IN GLOUCESTER, ENGLAND

I hope to be able to renew my subscription when the time expires, and to do all I can in the other country to expose a system so detrimental to the interests of one common Christianity. My late husband was deeply interested in the anti-secret movement, and labored to promote its principles.—SARAH B. HART.

LITERATURE.

HISTORY OF SECRET SOCIETIES, and of the Republican party of France from 1830 to 1848. By Lucien de la Hodde. Translated by an American. Pp. 479. Price, $1.00, postage 20 cents. For sale by the National Christian Association, Chicago and Washington.

A brief history of this remarkable volume will be of more value to our readers than a review of its contents. Before the Fremont campaign in 1856 put the Republican party upon its feet, General J. W. Phelps, then an officer in the regular army, relieved the tedium of camp life by translating this volume from the French. He already saw the revival of Freemasonry, which many supposed to have been dead since 1832–3, and marked that its old Satanic nature remained, and that as Washington said, its organic structure allowed of its being used for the worst of purposes. In this history of the operations of French Masonry to produce revolution, he hoped the American people might see a picture of what he feared was already preparing for our own country. But he was disappointed. His fellow officers either belonged to the lodge, or were indifferent to its evils, and the general public were too deeply absorbed in checking the growth of slavery to note by what means it might conspire for rebellion.

The volume was published by the Lippincott's of Philadelphia, and bears their imprint, though the whole expense was borne by General Phelps. In 1864, after he had resigned from the army, he again gave some attention to this volume, having seen new evidences of the danger of the lodge to American liberties. He took part of the unsold edition, rebound it, gave it a new title, "THE CRADLE OF REBELLIONS," a new title page and preface. Of the successful sale we are not able to speak positively, but presume the edition was exhausted. A number of volumes of the book, as originally issued, have been purchased by the National Christian Association and are for sale as above. As this valuable book is out of print and the quantity for sale is not large, those who order early will only be sure of securing it. Some idea of its value may be gained from the following extract from the preface:

"The reader will see the agencies by which the government of Louis Philippe was overthrown and a military despotism established in its place, the same agencies which Joel R. Poinsett had previously established in Mexico under the name of the Secret Societies of the Escoseces and Yorkinos, which hastened the ruin of republican government in that country, and prepared the way for the admission of despotic government from France. They were the same agencies that contributed largely toward the annexation of Texas, that have sustained slavery so long against the moral convictions of an unsophisticated people, and without which the present rebellion could hardly have been incepted Even those so called charitable institutions, designed as means of secret benevolence, the Freemasons and Odd-Fellows, have been used, often against their own knowledge or consent, by the great masters of secret political associations, as so many subordinate cog-wheels in the great machinery of insurrection and rebellion. Even many of the industrial pursuits of the free States were overruled, unconsciously, to the same end. It is a merit, a charitable act, to protect the weak against the strong. Slavery, in its contest against the virtues of a republican people, was weak; and it was therefore right and just in the knight of subterraneous craft to labor for its defense! Slavery was as weak as it was just; and every act, therefore, done in its behalf, however villainous it might be, was sanctified by the end proposed, and sanctified the knight who did it! Such has come to be the spirit of secret associations in the United States.

"The American people, animated by that candor and openness which flows naturally from their all benevolent institutions, are unsuspecting as yet, in the mass, of those dark and covert machinations by which their liberties are endangered, and of which this History gives a striking example. Indeed, it is believed that political education has become necessary, to every voter, for the preservation of our government, and that it can hardly be completed, at the present day, unless by some such insight of political baseness and craft as is herein disclosed. None, we may say, can so readily understand the present rebellion, the immorality, political depravity and infamy that have led to it, as they who, through the perusal of these pages, shall become acquainted with those mainsprings of action that brought about the French revolution of 1848."

Miss Alice French, of Iowa, whose literary cognomen, "Octave Thanet," is becoming well known in magazine literature, has a very well written story in the August Scribner's Magazine. It describes the working of the labor unions, and especially the Knights of Labor, in a graphic and truthful manner. Her characters are strongly delineated, and the story well told. But we are more interested in the courageous exposure of the false pretenses of these secret orders. The Railway Series is continued in this issue with an acute and luminous account of the evolution and present wonderful perfection of "American Locomotives and Cars." The author, M. N. Forney, secretary of the Master Car Builders' Association, is one of the most widely-known railroad men in the United States. The opening pages of the article are a brief historical narrative, embracing the stages in the development of the modern 'Decapod" from the primitive locomotive built by Peter Cooper. The question of the number, size, and position of the driving wheels with reference to the speed and pulling capacity of the locomotive is carefully discussed; the half-hundred attachments in the locomotive cab by which the engineer works the machine are indicated. Among the forty illustrations are a number of antique types of locomotive; a selection from the best modern patterns; and views of a round-house and large locomotive works which are both accurate and picturesque. There are a score of illustrations, showing some of the most romantic scenery in this country, in Professor N. S. Shaler's paper describing "Rivers and Valleys." The practical problems connected with valleys like those of the Mississippi and Ohio are reviewed, making this among the most entertaining of Professor Shaler's papers on the surface of the earth.

An article which grape-growers will read with interest in the August number of the American Agriculturist is entitled "The Home and Story of the Concord," the famous fruit known as the standard, hardy and prolific grape of the continent. It is illustrated with a beautiful engraving of the original grower of the grape, Ephraim Wales Bull, standing among his luxuriant vines—a straight and robust-looking old gentleman, now eighty-two years of age, and still living in his cottage close by the original Concord grape-vine.

OBITUARY.

Died, at his residence, six miles west of Lawrence, Kas., Henry Stevens, aged nearly 76 years.

Mr. Stevens was a native of Rutland county, Vermont. When but a youth he came West and located in Rock Island county, Ill., where he engaged in farming and stock raising. Upon the death of his wife, having had two children, he married Miss Mary Stanley, by whom he had eight children. Six of the latter are living and one of the first family.

In 1874 Mr. Stevens moved to Kansas, and having been successful in his calling all along up to his death, he has left to his heirs quite a competency of an estate.

When but a boy he was converted, and as is frequently the case with men most successful in business, he enjoyed the sweets of religion more when a wage-worker, and poor, than in after life, when the "cares of this world and deceitfulness of riches" pierced him with many sorrows, and kept him in a life of conflict. A few days before his departure his soul seemed to settle down upon a faith of assurance, and without fear or pain, passing through the valley of the shadow of death he feared no evil, God's "rod and staff" comforting him.

Mr. Stevens has been a constant subscriber and reader of the Cynosure, and often sent for anti-secrecy literature and scattered it among the college boys attending the State University at Lawrence.

He and his companion were regular members of the U. B. church for many years, until for convenience for the last three or four years they have worshiped with the Friends. May the providence and grace of Him who visits the fatherless and widow in their afflictions comfort the bereaved companion and children, and lead them all to everlasting life. D. Shuck.

LODGE NOTES.

The Grand Council of Illinois of the Improved Order of Red Men met some while since in Chicago. They attended a theatrical performance, had a banquet, and had the small satisfaction of seating our Mayor Roche, who was once supposed to represent the moral character of Chicago, as one of the seventy-five "great chiefs."

The Inter Ocean says that William P. Crooks, of Jersey City, Grand Secretary of the order of Good Templars for the State of New Jersey, and Deputy Right Worthy Grand Templar, who stumped for St. John in 1884, returns to the house of his fathers which he then forsook, and will put in his best licks for Harrison and Morton.

The National Grand Lodge, United Brothers of Friendship, one of the largest organizations of colored men in America, were in session at St. Louis last week, and was very largely attended. In conjunction with the "brothers," the "Sisters of the Mysterious" (the female branch of the society) were also in session, and gave a parade Thursday with 3,000 people in line. There are a number of prominent colored men connected with the order, which is claimed to be non political.

This week the Odd-fellows claim the attention of Cincinnati. They began to arrive Monday to attend the cantonment of the patriarchs militant and the special session of the Grand Lodge of Ohio, which was held on Wednesday. Competitive drills for prizes between individuals, cantons and batallions continued until Saturday. On Thursday afternoon there was a general parade over a short line of march and a review in front of the Custom House. William White, of Albany, N. Y., the grand sire of the Sovereign lodge, arrived Tuesday, and on the same evening the grand decoration of chivalry was conferred at Music Hall.

A telegram from Pittsburg to the Chicago Herald says: The election of delegates to the General Assembly of the Knights of Labor now taking place throughout the country, shows conclusively that there has been a great falling off in the number of members. Scarcely a district so far as heard from has elected as many delegates as last year. Each district is entitled to one delegate for every 3 000 members. Last year District 3, of Pittsburg, elected four; this year only two delegates have been chosen. The membership of District 3 is not much over 6,000. Last year it was over 10,000. Several assemblies have been cut off and added to new districts, but barely 4,000 members remain. Those in a position to judge with some degree of accuracy state that the present membership of the order is not much in excess of 150,000. Last year the membership was at least 400,000.

At last, after years of uninterrupted lawlessness and outrage, the White Caps, of Crawford county, have been met by a few resolute men and punished in a manner befitting their own bloody actions. On Monday night, July 23, a crowd of these law-breakers visited the house of two girls named Wiseman, living near Marietta, a small hamlet situated in the hills of Crawford county, Indiana. The girls, who were accused of being unchaste, were taken from their home, tied to a tree and brutally whipped. Their screams aroused some of their friends living in the vicinity, who immediately took measures to avenge the outrage on the persons of the regulators. It is the custom of the White Caps, after administering punishment, to ride up to a house near by and notify those living there of the action they have taken, and command them to inform the neighborhood. The friends of the girls, knowing this, formed an ambush in a dense wood beside the road, and when the gang rode by fired into the party, putting them to flight. Yesterday morning it was found that one of the White Caps, a man named Sanders, had been wounded, and that Brair Gregory, who keeps a store at Marietta, must have been hurt also, as bloody tracks had been found leading to his residence, and he himself had not been seen since. This is the first time any opposition has been shown to this band of law-breakers, and there is much excitement in the neighborhood as to what the outcome will be. It is hard to get information, as one cannot tell whether he is talking to a plain citizen or a White Cap.

My love was like a lily fair,
Low drooping in the sultry air,
My heart was rent with grief and care.
I loved her well.

But lo! The wonder grows and grows;
My love's now like a blooming rose.
How bright her face with beauty glows,
I dare not tell.

The wandering bee would stop to sip,
The nectar of her perfect lip.
'Twas Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescrip-
Tion wrought the spell.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

Rev. Thomas H. Stockton, D.D.:—Religion is as open as the sky and bright as the sun. As a man, an American, and a Christian, I love true manhood, true Americanism and true Christianity too well to approve of secret institutions of any kind.

L. L. Hamline, Bishop M. E. church, in his diary, 1848: "North Ohio Conference has progressed very rapidly till this time, but Masonry and Odd-fellowship have arrested us." At another time: "I have enjoyed and suffered much during its session. Masonry and Odd-fellowship, a bane in the midst of us, have done us much evil."—Life, pp. 323, 4.

A. M. Milligan, D.D.:—Thus I have shown that Masonic oaths and obligations are not obligatory; that God has no part in them; that they are a profanation of his ordinance of the oath, and a usurpation of the prerogative of government under the wrath of an insulted God and the ban of outraged society: a great sin to make them but no sin to break them.

Rev. J. P. Lytle, D D.:—We could fill a volume with extracts of the same tenor, showing, as these have shown, that Freemasonry is a distinct and positive religion with a promise of salvation; yet rejecting and denying the Lord Jesus; a religion which claims to have borrowed its principles and rites from those heathen institutions so abhorrent to God and corrupting to men.

Rev. Joshua Bradley, a renouncing Mason:—A lying spirit is abroad, and speaks through all Masonic presses, and this spirit influences all who hate the truth, and will make them wax worse and worse, till sudden destruction shall overwhelm those workers of iniquity, to the astonishment of every beholder. Then Masonry will rise no more to trouble Zion, and spread delusion and death amid civilized nations.

C. B. Ward, missionary in India:—When men get saved out here they get out of the lodge of necessity. We are personally acquainted with a barrister, a doctor, a locomotive fireman, a station-master on a railway, a principal of a high school, a commissary officer, a military officer, and others who when saved at once quit the lodge for Christ's sake without any one saying much to them. The evil of the institution is too apparent to need pointing out in India.

Joseph S. Christmas, Pastor Bowery Presbyterian church, New York, 1830:—If these remarks should meet the eye of any follower of the Redeemer who still worships at the altar of Masonry, I beg him once more to consider whether, imposed on by the mock solemnities of the lodge and the pompous pretensions of the craft, he is not really attempting to effect a concord between Christ and Belial; and whether he does not owe it to the souls of Masons, to the honor of the church of Christ, and to the good of mankind, to come out and be separate.

Drs Leonard Woods, Ebenezer Porter and Thomas H. Skinner, Professors at Andover to the Massachusetts Legislature:—Praying for a full investigation into the nature, language, ceremonies, and form of rehearsing extra-judicial oaths in Masonic bodies; and if found to be such as the Memorialists describe them, that a law may be passed prohibiting the future administration of Masonic, and such other extra-judicial oaths, as tend to weaken the sanctions of civil oaths in courts of justice; and pray also for the repeal of the charter granted by this Commonwealth to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts.

Rev. Moses Thatcher:—Our Saviour declared to the Jewish high priest, "I spake openly to the world; and in secret have I said nothing." What now would be thought of the church if she should "tyle" her doors, impose obligations in secret, and place a perpetual seal upon the lips of her members? Would it any longer be believed that her sole object is to promote the religion of the Gospel? Now if the church, which is the purest body on earth, could not and would not be trusted as a secret society, who can blame conscientious and judicious men for drawing the conclusion that any secret society, of whatever description, is altogether unnecessary and cannot exist without becoming an object of suspicion, if not an engine of wickedness.

HOW STAND YOUR CANDIDATES?

NOTES OF THE ANTI-SECRECY LEAGUE.

General Fisk, the Prohibition candidate for President, has in a frank and Christian letter given to his constituents his position on secretism; and so soon as fishing trips are over, and tariff bills are settled, and his letter accepting the nomination at St. Louis is written, President Cleveland will doubtless send on his views of this important question, in reply to the respectful request of the committee.

It is among General Harrison's most excellent qualifications for the high office to which he is nominated, and which we believe he would fill with honor, that he is a man of the people, easily approached, and of broad and ready sympathy. In the incessant interviewing which he is undergoing, and which even threatens his health, he is daily unbosoming himself to the people. It must be regretted, however, that he allows political friends to impose themselves upon his Sabbath time, and frequently of late, after attending church in the morning, he entertains such company. Let him declare a strike against such imposition. Seven days' work should no more be required of a candidate than of a plow-boy or a street-car horse.

But aside from this a large majority of the Christian voters of the country will read with some satisfaction the following from General Harrison's reply to the letter of the League committee:

"In answer to your question, permit me to say that I have never been a member of any secret society, except a Greek literary society in college and the G. A. R, if the latter can, with any propriety, be called a secret society, though I do not think it can. Very truly yours, BENJ. HARRISON."

From this reply we infer that General Harrison's strong good sense and high views of American patriotism incline him to disapprove secret societies in general. The order to which he now belongs, and whose badge, he wears he does not regard as a secret society; and possibly, like the lamented Garfield, who was on principle opposed to the lodge but went into Masonry to please his army comrades, Mr. Harrison has become somewhat attached to the orders rather to please his friends than himself. We incline to such a construction of his position, and respectfully request that before he takes up the duties of the Presidential office he make a more careful inquiry into the dangerous and un-American tendencies of the whole secret order system. It would be an infinite pleasure to place his name with that of Washington, Adams, Madison, Marshall, Hamilton, Weed, Seward, Sumner, Chase, and a host of like names of great Americans.

ILLINOIS STATE TICKET.

When the letters of the Illinois State Prohibition candidates were printed, no response had been received from Mr. Harts, who is honored with the first place on the ticket. The first letter of the committee went astray. To the second he promptly replied:

"I BELONG TO NO SECRET ORGANIZATION.

"Very Respectfully, D. H. HARTS."

Let such a man be our Governor. The Prohibitionists of Illinois are to be congratulated in their selection. With the exception of Mr. Copp, Jr., who seems to be a lodgeite "to the manner born," there is the ring of good American metal every time the ticket is touched with the testing hammer.

VERMONT.

The Green Mountain State has made an unfortunate selection for Auditor on the Prohibition ticket. Mr. C. S. Parker, who writes below, has the merit of frankness, and whatever he has learned to conceal he is open-handed about his Masonry—and his grips. He writes:

"I have the honor to be a member of M. Vernon lodge of Free Masons. If you would come this way would give the grip. Truly, C. S. PARKER."

Thank you, friend Parker; if men have no better business than swapping grips, they had better be dead and forgotten.

Unless there is a change in their relations Mr. Parker's name should be put with Copp's, of Illinois, and Jones's, of New York, along side the match box, where they can be well scratched.

—Secretary Stoddard, writing of the intimate relation of the saloon and the lodge, says: "The 316 lodges must be cleaned out of Washington before her 1,500 dram shops can be dried up, and some of the real temperance workers are beginning to acknowledge that wine suppers in lodge rooms are not conducive to wise legislation, when indulged in by Senators, Representatives, church members and bar tenders in the promiscuous revels of the night brotherhoods. Put the lodge men out of power and the saloon will soon go."

N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

The first quarterly meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Christian Association, under its new arrangement, met on Thursday forenoon, Rev. Alexander Thomson in the chair. There were present brethren Thomson, Stratton, Worrell, Sutcliffe, Chittenden, Fischer and Milton.

The record of the N. C. A. annual meeting, which was referred to the Board for approval, was read and approved.

The report of the Publication committee presented a sketch and ritual of the Sons of Temperance by Mr. H. M. Hugunin, with approval. The Board voted to purchase the manuscript and refer it to the editors of the Cynosure, and when published in the paper plates to be made from the type. The committee also reported some inquiry respecting a Washington agent. The report was accepted and the committee was continued.

The committee on engaging other agents in the South reported, their report accepted and the committee continued. Correspondence is being had with numerous institutions in the South, many of which have not been visited by an N. C. A. agent, and it is probable that another worker can be sent South without great expense to the Association.

The report of Mr. S. A. Kean, auditor for last year, was read, approving the accounts of the past year, and recommending the settlement of old accounts of some years standing. The report was ordered filed and the recommendations referred to the Finance committee.

The Finance committee reported their examination of the Treasurer's accounts for the month of June and gave their approval. They reported the expenses of the Association were at present largely in excess of its income.

The publisher of the Cynosure reported the financial standing of the paper. The report was approved and ordered filed.

The report of Secretary Stoddard of the engagement of Miss Flagg as New England agent was heard and approved under the conditions made in January, which were to the effect that the expense of the agency should be raised in New England.

Bro. F. J. Davidson of New Orleans was continued as colporteur agent, his former engagement having closed June 1.

The Board adjourned after prayer.

—The Christian Reformed church, formed by the Hollanders of Michigan who refused longer to attend the Reformed General Synod, because of its complicity with the lodge, has made overtures to the United Presbyterians. Dr. W. T. Meloy, of this city, writes in the Midland of this body of reform Christians, and among their other good qualities, says they "exclude all members of the Masonic and Odd-fellow fraternities." Dr. Meloy should hardly have been so particular. The Hollanders exclude all the lodges: those which are bound by oath, according to the United Presbyterian standard, as the G. A. R.; and also the pledge-bound, as the Odd-fellows, etc.

—Dr. J. E. Roy, Western Secretary of the American Missionary Association, having in mind a Southern tour for Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, with his great "sun" pictures of sun worship, went last week to Lyons, Iowa. He heard one of Bro. Arnold's illustrated lectures, and gave one himself on intemperance in the tent, illustrated with telling pictures against the drink traffic. He finally engaged Bro. Arnold to go down the Mississippi on a boat to New Orleans, stopping on the way at every point where an audience could be obtained. Another plan, which would be excellent, was for Dr. Roy to travel with Bro. Arnold for a short time among the colored institutions in the South, giving their lectures on temperance and secret societies, the latter to continue alone through the whole winter.

—The Birmingham Free Press announces that its editor, Rev. George Warrington, has purchased property and will build at Beaver Falls, Penn., near Geneva College, whither he will remove with the Psalm-Singer. The Free Press may be for a short time suspended, until some one can be found to take up the burden Bro. Warrington has so nobly borne. Under his care the Free Press has been one of the ablest Anti-masonic journals in the country, discussing the lodge fearlessly and with signal ability. For a local paper of its circulation it might safely challenge the nation for originality and ability. Dr. J. N. Norris, the associate editor, and other Birmingham friends will doubtless carry on the paper, and under their management it must gain new victories for good government and Christ in Iowa.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—George Heaton, our seceder friend of Fairfield, Iowa, is chosen to lead the Fisk and Brooks club just organized in that city.

—Rev. E. B. Graham, the "Fanatic" who wrote "In the Coils" and editor of the Midland, has resigned the pastorate of the First United Presbyterian church of Omaha.

—Miss Joanna P. Moore, of the faculty of Leland University, New Orleans, and missionary of the Woman's Baptist Home Missionary Society, was in Chicago last week and kindly called upon the Cynosure family.

—A great Prohibition camp meeting has been held at Decatur, Ill., and has been addressed by St. John, Brooks and others of the ablest speakers in the party. Last week Tuesday Bro. L. G. Jordan, or Texas, made the principal speech.

—Rev. Halleck Floyd, of the Christian Conservator, Dayton, has undertaken an important agency for Hartsville University, Indiana. The institution is some $12,000 in debt, and the creditors are pressing; but if about $5,000 can be raised within a few weeks the crisis will be passed. Such an institution as Hartsville should be put on substantial footing, and Bro. Floyd has a work to which he can give heart and soul.

—Rev. Dr. Wm. Johnston, of College Springs, Iowa, has been afflicted sorely with an optical inflammation for some six weeks. He is unable to use his eyes in reading, and facetiously writes that he may not be able to vote for the Prohibition ticket and platform on the ground of illiteracy, being able neither to read or write. His condition also suggest an unusual relation to the lodge for so good an Anti-mason, as he is obliged to seek darkness and avoid the light. May his eclipse be soon over.

—A few months ago Mr. Joseph Hart of Richmond Villa, Gloucester, England, removed with his family to Olathe, Kansas. A few days since his devoted wife wrote of his sudden death after an illness of but three days. He was a devout Christian and had walked in the good way of life for over fifty years. He was one of the few readers the Cynosure has in England, and as Mrs. Hart returns to the old home she wishes to continue the paper her husband loved to read. Her note in another column shows that this reading was not without profit.

—Some time since a note from Chambersburg, Pa., told us of a heavy grief come upon the household of our brother J. S. Yaukey, in the death of a darling child, Frank Blanchard, on the day he was six months old. The letter was accidentally mislaid, and we regret that an earlier notice was thus prevented. The sympathy of many of our readers who remember Bro. Yaukey as one of the warmest supporters of reform in southeastern Pennsylvania, will be given the bereaved parents as this note is read. The dear child had gained a large place in their hearts by his bright and loving ways; and many saw him with joy as they marked the signs of intelligence and useful character which they hoped years might develop in him. How much more rapid and beautiful must be the development of that nature in all holy excellence in the presence of the Saviour by whom he was redeemed!

If the Harrison men of 1840 do not step into line for the grandson any better elsewhere than in Birmingham, the Republican party had better not say much about it. Here is a list and the probabilities of how they will vote next November. Will vote for Harrison and Morton; William Birch, John Filson, Geo. R. Pettit and C. D. Skinner, just four. Will vote for Cleveland; C. C. Pleasants, D. M. Dudley and J. B. Walgamot. Will probably vote for Fisk; Dr. J. B. Spees, Dr. J. N. Norris, Rev. A. Pattison, S. G. Torrence, Newton Calhoun, J. S. Culbertson, and Hiram Barnes. Some of these did not vote in 1840, because Iowa was a Territory.—Birmingham, Iowa, Free Press.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, July 27, 1888.

On Saturday last the famous Mills tariff bill, which circumstances have made the chief and almost the only issue of the Presidential campaign, passed the House of Representatives by a majority of thirteen. The bill was sent to the Senate on the same day, and was immediately referred to the Senate Finance committee. It would be unsafe to venture a prediction just now as to this committee's disposition of the measure, besides, you may know what has been done by the time this reaches you. When Representative Mills arose to close the tariff debate on the final day, the scene in the House was similar to that on April 17th, when he stood in the same place to open the long discussion. Every member of the House in the city was present. There were no empty seats. The galleries were thronged and the crowd overflowed into the corridors. The speech lasted just one hour. At its close the orator was heartily congratulated, and shaken by the hand by his Democratic colleagues who gathered around him, and it was noticed that Mrs. Cleveland, who had entered with her mother while Mr. Mills was speaking, violated the rules of the House by applauding from the gallery.

The next demonstration, however, was in favor of the Republicans. Before the vote was ordered on the passage of the bill, there came a message from the sick room of the man who had more to do with controlling the fate of tariff legislation than any other in the country, and it created quite a sensation. The clerk read the letter so that not a syllable of it could escape the dullest ear in the most remote part of the gallery. As he read the words in which Mr. Randall said that he was not willing to be misunderstood, and declared emphatically that he was opposed to the Mills bill, the Republicans raised a great uproar to signalize their triumph.

Then the voting began. Every person who could obtain a roll of the members' names had it, and watched closely and listened eagerly as name after name was called, and the answer came "aye" or "no." Interest was high and curiosity was strained to know how the doubtful members on both sides of the House would vote. Each party was ready to send up a great salvo of applause, whenever a vote came over from the opposite party. In the alphabetical list Mr. Bliss stands first among the names of those who did not vote according to party. When he voted "no" the first point was scored by the Republicans, and heartily they showed their appreciation by applause. Then it began to look bad for the bill, because, although Mr. Bliss is a Protectionist, it had been expected he would vote for the bill. His vote was therefore a surprise and it inspired the anxious listeners to imagine all sorts of unexpected possibilities. Interest grew intense. A few members failed to answer to their names. That might mean that they were absent and paired; or that they were wavering, and waiting for the second roll call before making the plunge. Mr. Fitch's name was reached. He was a Republican, and when he voted "aye" it was the Democrats' turn to clap.

Finally, when the vote was made up and announced, there was much rejoicing on the Democratic side. Members rose to their feet, cheered and waved bandanas in the air. The President's wife looked as much elated as any one, and again joined the triumphant demonstrations by clapping her hands.

By the way, it was Mrs. Cleveland's birthday. She had just entered her twenty-fifth year. It is now a proper time to present the first lady of the land in her new role, which is active church work. She has been pictured as a fair young school girl, as a blooming bride, the gracious hostess doing the honors of the White House, the patron of art and of charity, as a mild athlete in the tennis court, and as handling the ribbons like a skillful horse-woman. She now appears in a new light. Mrs. Cleveland will act as treasurer for the fund for the construction of an American church in Berlin, and will solicit contributions and personally acknowledge by letter all donations. This church work in Berlin was begun eight years ago for the benefit of American students, who number yearly 400 in that city, and for American tourists from every State in the Union, who come by thousands every year. There are three American churches in Europe. These are in Rome, Paris and Dresden. The American church in Berlin is non-sectarian, and has for its doctrinal basis that of the Evangelical Alliance. *

—The General Conference (German Lutheran) has passed a law forbidding members of secret societies to join that church.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN THE NORTHWEST TERRITORY.

Cincinnati, July 18, 1888.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Last April the Centennial of the settlement of the Northwest Territory was celebrated at Marietta, O. The leading feature of that occasion was the oration by Senator Hoar of Massachusetts. At the same place, from July 15 to 19, the centennial of the establishment of the civil government of this territory is being commemorated. The important feature of this celebration was the oration of Senator Evarts of New York. Distinguished visitors were there from all the States of the Northwest. On Sabbath, just one hundred years after Gov. St. Clair was inaugurated in that place, Gov. Foraker introduced the exercises. He said: "Our forefathers brought religion with them to New England; they carried it with them through the struggles for American independence; they brought it to the Northwest Territory; they wrote it in the Ordinance of 1787 that religion among other things was essential to good government. We have prospered and succeeded as we have, because we have recognized religion in all our public government affairs." The Catholic Bishop Gilmour, of Cleveland, addressed 6,000 people on "Religion and Civil Government." On Monday Mrs. Mary A. Livermore spoke of woman's part in the early settlement of the Northwest.

On Tuesday Senator Evarts spoke. He maintained that this is a land of Providence. God allowed slavery to be in the South. Our fathers were by that institution kept from settling on the rich lands of the South. They were compelled to occupy the cold and rugged North. Saved from the enervating influences of the South, they developed the better elements of human character. They brought these stern virtues with them to the Northwest.

"The New England settlers would not come to Ohio unless their institutions were complete and sure. Land and liberty for our ancestors meant also justice and the dignity of labor in the great body of the people. Mr. Jefferson had proposed in 1784, and he was followed by a large part of the States in the Continental Congress, though it never was completed, that twelve years after the settlement of Ohio in 1800 slavery should be excluded from the territory west of the Alleghenies. This might seem at first to have been wider and more benevolent than that which was afterward to secure free labor to only the Northwest, but those well disciplined and thoughtful men said: 'We will take no chances after twelve years. Now with us is the accepted time—now is the day of salvation.' And wasn't it the day of salvation for this great Northwest and for its greater people, that now, from one end of it to the other, knows not a slave, and, by the grace of God, intends that the dignity of labor shall be maintained over every inch of it forever? Our prudent New Englanders were not to be enveloped in a misty future and the promise of a greater benefit twelve years later. They knew that a tide of population would follow them. They knew if one universal rule were made they would have to fight for the whole of it, and they trusted to their hands and their hearts and to that surveillance of Providence that had brought them from Europe to the Atlantic shores, if they held faith to human nature and home duties before they enlarged the sphere of their exercises. And so it was arranged that we should come here and forever be free from any contact with the debasement of slavery or the exercise of unholy oppression by the solemn promise of all the old States, North and South, slave and free.

"There came a time when a relaxation of this inexorable law was asked that the French settlers and some of the overflow from Virginia might come in. They were rejected. See what a strip there was to be occupied, from the Ohio river to the Rocky Mountains! John Randolph said there would not be a settler on the Mississippi river in a hundred years, and yet in sixty-two years after the crossing of the Ohio our people were in full possession of the Pacific slope and of all intermediate regions. Sixty-two years have filled the prairies, have hewn down the forests, have occupied the vast spaces up to the Rocky Mountains. So much for the wisdom that Providence was going to display before these trusted people that had held to him with both hands in poverty and in weakness to the strength of faith in God and love of man."

Mr. Evarts' closing periods were very fine. He said: "Slavery is a remorseless coveter of new land. But by this wise providence its lines were drawn. We had the greater tide of people. But the South had the greater spaces that were to be filled up at some time or other Texas was coveted for slavery, and when it was annexed without the consent of its parent State, Mexico, war went on, and so the providence in it all appears. I heard a homely maxim which says: 'No work in progress should be seen by fools or children.' It is said that in the great structure built to Mahomet the visitor is regaled with the most exquisite perfume of attar of roses, the source of which is not visible.

"Inquiry reveals the fact that the workmen mixed it in the mortar with which they cemented the structure, and that ever since this delicate perfume greets the worshiper as he enters the temple. This great wealth and power is but the assemblage of the great structure which we occupy. The cement which holds it together is perfumed by the virtues of the wide influences of the men and women that laid this structure. Let us never lose that perfume, for if we do that cement will crumble and the great structure be destroyed."

In the evening one hundred men marched through the streets in the costumes of one hundred years ago.

Last Sabbath evening I preached National Reform to 500 people in the A. M. E. church on Sycamore and Sixth streets. This denomination has about 500,000 members. About four-sevenths of them are in the three States of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. They have eleven bishops. They lately built an iron church in Hayti. This congregation worships in what was formerly a Jewish synagogue. Their property is worth $75,000. They have basement, sub-basement, audience room, gallery on their sides and second gallery. Their membership is about 500. Their pastor wishes me to return and give them some more National Reform. In the morning I preached in the Third Presbyterian church.

THE CINCINNATI CENTENNIAL.

July 25.—In the religious department of the Centennial Exposition are some interesting statistical tables. Let me give you a few items: The population of the world is 1,500,000,000. Buddhists, 400,000,000; Confucianists, 250,000,000; other Pagans, 200,000,000; Mohammedans, 200,000,000; Bible Theists, 450,000,000. Bible Theists include Protestants, Romanists, Greeks and Jews. The Bible is translated into every important language in the world. The population of the United States is 60,000,000—40,000,000 adults, 20,000,000 children. There are 15,132,657 communicants—one to three of the adults, one to five of the whole population. The Romanist population 8,000,000, the Protestant 40,000,000. Evangelical Protestant Christians since 1800 have given to foreign missions $75,000,000, and to home missions $100,000,000. There is one church for every 1,000 of our whole population. Ohio is the only State whose churches have seating capacity for all over ten years of age. In 1884, 79 per cent of the students in our colleges were American. The Sabbath-school scholars in the United States are 9,156,737 and in the world 18,419,961. The Baptists in the United States have 3,000,000 members, 31,891 churches, 20,477 ministers, 45 colleges, and church property valued at $67,680,474. The Presbyterians have 15,000 churches, 11,500 ministers, 1,500,000 members, 46 colleges, with 5,000 students, 20 theological seminaries with 900 students, 34 French seminaries with 4,000 students, and expends annually in her work $16,000,000. The Congregationalists have 5,000 churches, 4,500 ministers, 500,000 members, and expend annually $7,000,000. The Lutherans have 57 synods, 4,217 ministers, 8,104 churches, 1,023,575 members, 21 theological seminaries, 26 colleges, 33 classical seminaries, 11 ladies' seminaries, 5,680 students. The Protestant Episcopal church has 4,700 parishes and missions, 69 bishops, 3,766 priests and deacons, 440,000 communicants, 38,415 Sabbath-school teachers, 349,598 scholars, and contributes annually $10,000,000. The Methodist Episcopal church, including all branches of Methodism, has 30,400 ministers, 44,000 local preachers, 32,000 churches, 4,500,000 members, and contributed in 1887 $30,000,000. They have 144 literary institutions, with an endowment of $20,048,000, and 26,500 students, Sabbath-schools, 24,000; officers and teachers, 269,237; scholars, 2,006,000.

An old Bible printed in 1613, a roll of the law in Hebrew, the Bible in French, Italian, German, Gallic, etc., articles from the Syrian mission sent by Miss Maggie Edgar, are among the interesting objects on exhibition.

The gondolas are here from Venice and a veritable gondolier to manage them. He shows us how they go through the streets of the city of the waters. The government exhibit seems to be Smithsonian removed from Washington to Cincinnati.

THE HOME.

TO-DAY.

To-day the sunshine freely showers
Its benediction where we stand;
There's not a passing cloud that lowers
Above this pleasant summer land;
Then let's not waste the sweet to-day—
To-morrow, who can say?

Perhaps, to-morrow, we may be—
Alas! alas! the thought is pain—
As far apart as sky and sea,
Sundered, to meet no more again;
Then let us clasp thee, sweet to-day—
To-morrow, who can say?

The daylight fades; a purple dream
Of twilight hovers overhead,
While all the trembling stars but seem
Like sad tears yet unshed;
O, sweet to-day, so soon away!
To-morrow, who can say?

THE STORY OF A BIBLE.

"Did he leave any message for me?" "Yes, and he cursed the day that he ever saw you."

This was the answer given by a nun to a lady in London, under the following circumstances, which were related to me by a gentleman of culture and piety, as we were sailing along the coast of Norway, from Trondhjem to Bremen, in and out among the beautiful fords and snow-capped mountains.

Monsignor Capel was asked by a lady of position in London, "How can I find peace of mind?"

Instead of pointing her to Christ, and telling her that he atoned for our sins on the cross, he bade her dismiss such unwelcome thoughts, and attend places of amusement.

One day she followed a crowd of people into Exeter Hall, expecting to have her mind diverted from serious thoughts about the future by a musical entertainment. She was surprised when she found herself in a great religious meeting. Annoyed at this she attempted to get out, but in doing so she knocked some umbrellas onto the floor, and, abashed, took her seat.

Her attention was soon rivited upon the speaker. He explained our relation to God, as under condemnation already, and spoke of Christ's suffering on the cross as an atoning sacrifice, and of God's willingness for his sake to pardon, and by his Holy Spirit to change our hearts and fit us for heaven. She was deeply moved, and at the close she said to some one near, "Can I speak to the gentleman who has just addressed us?"

Soon after, in conversation with her, he said, "You will find the truth which I have mentioned often repeated in the Bible."

"But I have no Bible," she replied.

He quickly handed her his own, saying, "I have pleasure in giving you mine."

Sometime after this, the high Catholic dignitary, remembering the advice he had given this lady, sent a priest to inquire about the state of her mind. Instead of needing his help, he soon found that she was able to direct him in the way of life.

Before leaving, she gave him the Bible that had been given her at Exeter Hall, and begged him to read it with prayer, and to trust in Him who "bore our sins in His own body on the tree."

Sometime after she received a note from the priest, asking her to call upon him.

As she was about to take her son to Eton College, she did not accept the invitation at the time.

When she called, some weeks after, she was shown into a room where there was a coffin, and in it the body of the priest. Beside it a nun kneeling in prayer. The lady approached and asked, "Did he leave a message for me?"

"Yes," was the reply. "He wished me to say, if you called, that he died in the full faith of the Catholic church, and that he cursed the day he ever saw you."

The poor lady turned away, greatly distressed, saying to herself, "If I had gone to his bedside when he sent for me, I might have pointed him to Christ, and he might have been saved through faith in him; but now, alas! it is too late. I fear, through my negligence, he is lost forever."

This reflection produced such an effect upon her that it destroyed her peace of mind, which she sought to overcome by foreign travel.

One day in Rome a lady approached her and said, "Do you remember standing by the coffin of Father ——, and the dreadful message delivered to you?"

"Yes," she replied, "and it has followed me night and day."

"But it was not a true message. The words he bade me to deliver to you were these, 'Tell her that I bless the day I ever saw her, and that I die in the full faith of Jesus Christ. Tell her that the Bible she gave me was the means of leading me to trust alone in him for pardon. Tell her I shall meet her in heaven.' And then," added the nun, "he gave me that precious Bible, which has also been the means of leading me to see myself a lost sinner, and Christ as my only Saviour. Will you forgive me for telling you that falsehood?"—Morning Star.

THE LIFE-GIVING WORD.

What encouragement, what hope, may be drawn from seeing how precisely the words of one part of Scripture meet and supplement words of other parts, promise meeting supplication, encouragement meeting despondency, light driving away darkness, love casting out fear. Let us take, for instance, that most heart-broken of utterances, that "prayer of the afflicted when he is overwhelmed," the first twelve verses of the one hundred and second Psalm, and hear how God answers from his Holy Word:

PSALM CII. (A prayer of the afflicted, when he is overwhelmed and poureth out his complaint before the Lord.)	ANSWER OF THE HOLY SPIRIT THROUGH THE WORD OF GOD.
1. Hear my prayer, O Lord, and let my cry come unto thee.	He will fulfil the desire of them that fear him he also will hear their cry and will save them. Psa. 145: 19.
2. Hide not thy face from me in the day when I am in trouble; incline thine ear unto me; in the day when I call answer me speedily.	He shall call upon me and I will answer him: I will be with him in trouble; I will deliver him and honor him. Psa. 91: 15.
3. For my days are consumed like smoke, and my bones are burned as a hearth.	A bruised reed shall he not break and the smoking flax shall he not quench. Isa. 42:3.
4. My heart is smitten and withered like grass; so that I forget to eat my bread	Thy words were found and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of my heart. Jer. 15: 6.
5. By reason of the voice of my groaning my bones cleave to my skin.	And the Lord shall guide thee continually and satisfy thy soul in drought and make fat thy bones: and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not. Isa. 58: 11.
6. I am like a pelican of the wilderness; I am like an owl of the desert.	I give waters in the wilderness and rivers in the desert, to give drink to my people, my chosen. Isa. 43: 20.
7. I watch and am as a sparrow alone upon the housetop.	Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings? and not one of them is forgotten before God. Luke 12: 6.
8. Mine enemies reproach me all the day; and they that are mad against me are sworn against me.	Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Matt. 5: 11.
9. For I have eaten ashes like bread, and mingled my drink with weeping.	To give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning. Isa. 61: 3
10. Because of thine indignation and thy wrath: for thou hast lifted me up and cast me down.	For yet a very little while and the indignation shall cease. Isa. 10: 25.
11. My days are like a shadow that declineth; and I am withered like grass.	Cast down, but not destroyed. 2 Cor. 4: 9.
12. But thou, O Lord, shalt endure for ever, and thy remembrance unto all generations.	The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand forever. Isa. 40: 8.
	And a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels. Mal. 3: 16, 17.

Observe how, as the soul, like an over-tired child, utters all its complaint, going on from grief to grief, each one more hopeless than the former, the Spirit gently, tenderly, encouragingly replies, giving back word of cheer for word of woe, until finally, in spite of herself, the soul breaks forth into exultation, "But thou, O Lord, shalt endure forever, and thy remembrance unto all generations," and then goes on to anticipate the mercy and the glory that shall be revealed. It is "the prayer of the afflicted" still, through the remainder of the chapter, but it is no longer "complaint;" it is what true prayer should always be, the open communion of the soul with the Friend in whom she has all confidence, the God of all comfort.—Am. Messenger.

THE BIBLE TO ME.

The Bible is my church. It is always open, and there is my High Priest ever waiting to receive me. There, too, I have my thanksgiving, my praise, and a field of promises; in short, all I can want there I find; and a congregation of whom the world is not worthy —prophets and martyrs and confessors.—Charlotte Elliott.

How delightful this Bible looks to me when I see the blood of Christ sprinkled upon it! Every leaf would have flashed with Sinai's lightnings, and every verse would have rolled with the thunders of Horeb, if it had not been for Calvary's cross. Now as you look you see on every page your Saviour's name. He loved you and gave himself for you, and now you who are sprinkled with that blood, and have by faith rested in him, can take that precious book and find it to be green pastures and still waters to your souls.—Spurgeon.

I have seen much of this world, but I never knew how to live till now. All the comfort I have, and what is more than the whole world can give, is feeling the Good Spirit in my heart, and reading in this good book, the Bible. You are now in the prime of your age and vigor, and in great favor and business; but all this may leave you, and you may one day better understand and relish what I say to you, and then you will find that there is more wisdom, truth, comfort and pleasure in retiring and turning your heart from the world to the Good Spirit of God, and in reading the Bible, than in all the courts and the favors of princes.—Ozenstein, Chancellor of Sweden.

PLUCK.

Pluck was the son of a poor Bulgarian shepherd —not an American boy, as one would imagine from his name. I called him Pluck because it was so characteristic of the boy, and because I could not recall the Bulgarian name Dr. Hamlin gave him. A little hut in Bulgaria made of mud and stones was Pluck's home; and his father was so poor that he could hardly get food enough for his large family. Their clothes cost but little, as they all wore sheepskins, made up with the wool outside. Just imagine how funny a flock of two legged sheep would look. Pluck was a bright, ambitious boy, with a great desire for study. And when he heard of Robert College at Constantinople, he determined to go there. So he told his father one day, when they were away together tending sheep, that he had decided to go to college. The poor shepherd looked at his son in amazement, and said:

"You can't go to college; it's all I can do to feed you children; I can't give you a piastre."

"I don't want a piastre," Pluck replied, "but I do want to go to college."

"Besides," the shepherd continued, "you can't go to college in sheepskins."

But Pluck made up his mind, and he went—in sheepskins and without a piastre. It was a weary march of a hundred and fifty miles to Constantinople, but the boy was willing to do anything for an education. He found kind friends all along the way, who gave him food and shelter at night. So Pluck trudged sturdily on day after day until he reached Constantinople. As he was not one to let the grass grow under his feet, he soon found his way to the college, went into the kitchen and inquired for the president.

Pluck asked for work, but the president kindly told him there was none, and that he must go away.

"Oh, no," Pluck said, "I can't do that; I didn't come here to go away." When the president insisted, Pluck's answer was the same: "I didn't come here to go away."

He had no idea of giving up. "The King of France, with forty thousand men, went up a hill and so came down again;" but it was no part of Pluck's plan to go marching home again; and three hours later the president saw him in the yard, patiently waiting.

Some of the students advised Pluck to see Professor Long. "He knows all about you Bulgarian fellows." The professor, like the president, said there was no work for him and he had better go away. But Pluck bravely stuck to his text: "I didn't come here to go away."

The boy's courage and perseverance pleased the professor so much that he urged the president to give Pluck a trial. So it was decided that he should take care of the fires. That meant carrying wood, and a great deal of it, up three or four flights of stairs, taking away the ashes, and keeping all the things neat and in order.

The president thought he would soon get tired of such hard work. But a boy who had walked a hundred and fifty miles for the sake of an education, and was not ashamed to go to college in sheepskins and without a piastre, would not be easily discouraged.

After a few days, as Pluck showed no signs of "weakening," the president went to him and said: "My poor boy, you cannot stay here this winter. This room is not comfortable, and I have no other to give you."

"Oh, I am perfectly satisfied," Pluck replied. "It is the best room I ever had in my life. I didn't come here to go away."

Evidently there was no getting rid of Pluck, and he was allowed to stay.

After he gained his point he settled down to business, and asked some of the students to help him with his lessons in the evenings. They formed a syndicate of six. That was good old Dr. Hamlin's way, so none of the boys found it a burden to help Pluck one evening in the week. It was a success on both sides; the boys were patient and kind, and Pluck was as painstaking and persevering in his lessons as in other things, so that he made great progress.

After some weeks he asked to be examined to enter the preparatory class.

"Do you expect," asked the president, "to compete with those boys who have many weeks the start of you?" "And," he continued, "you can't go into class in sheepskins; all the boys would cry, 'baa.'"

"Yes, sir, I know," Pluck said; "but the boys have promised to help me out. One will give me a coat, another trousers, and so on."

Nothing could keep back a boy like that, who overcame all the obstacles in his way.

After the examination the president said to Professor Long:

"Can that boy get into that class?"

"Yes," was the reply; "but the class can't get into that boy."

It was not all plain sailing yet. Although Pluck had passed the examination, he had no money, and the rules of the college required each student to pay two hundred dollars a year. That was a question in mathematics that puzzled the good president.

"I wish," said Professor Long, "that the college would hire Pluck to help me in the laboratory and give him a hundred dollars a year. He has proved himself very deft and neat in helping me there, and it would give me much more time for other things."

Pluck became the professor's assistant and was perfectly delighted with his good fortune. But where was the other hundred coming from?

President Washburn sent an account of Pluck's poverty and great desire for an education to Dr. Hamlin, the ex-president of Robert College, who was in America. The doctor told the story to a friend one day, and she was so much interested that she said:

"I would like to give the other hundred."

And that's the way Pluck gained the wish of his heart.

He proved the truth of the old saying, that "where there is a will there is a way." But this was so hedged in that no boy without a strong will and great perseverance would have found it.

Of course, such a boy would succeed. To-day Pluck is head master in one of the schools in his own country.—Independent.

GO AND TELL JESUS.

"His disciples came and took up the body, and buried it, and went and told Jesus."--Matt. 14: 12.

"Tell Jesus"—tell him everything
About yourself, and all
The daily cares that trouble you--
The great ones and the small.

None are too large for him to take;
He weighed them all before
He gave them you to bring to him,
That you should love him more.

None are too small to take to him;
He listens to a sigh;
He knows each wish, he sees each tear,
For he is always nigh.

"Tell Jesus" tell him everything—
The past, and present too;
He'll send new strength with every care,
And soothe and comfort you.

A CHILD'S WORK.

A little girl was anxious to be of service to some one. She asked her teacher what she could do.

"You could bring your father to Sunday-school."

The father was a drunkard and very profane. He had never been to Sunday-school. At first the girl's efforts were unsuccessful. She could not even get him to the door of the little log house where the school was kept. She quietly and kindly persevered. At last the father joined the school.

"What is the result?" asked Mr. Moody, as he told the story of the incident to illustrate that the weakest might do good service. "That father has planted 1,180 Sabbath-schools."

If a man will only start with a fixed and honorable purpose in life, and persistently attempt to carry it out to the best of his ability, undismayed by failure or delay, the time may be long in coming, but come it will, when that purpose will be achieved, however difficult it may seem at the beginning.

TEMPERANCE.

A NEW DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

[Henry C. Bowen, publisher of the Independent, has every year a celebration of Independence day at Roseland Park, Woodstock, Connecticut, that is in every way worthy its national reputation. Among the eminent speakers this year were Senators Frye and Platt, Prof. Goldwin Smith and Gen. Clinton B. Fisk. From the address of the latter we make the following extract:]

Alas! how true and terrible is this indictment of the saloon. Oh, that from every hill-top and valley, from mountain and prairie, from city and hamlet, from lakes to gulf, and from sea to sea, there might this day arise the united voice of our sixty millions of people in most solemn Declaration of Independence of this cruel king, whose injuries and usurpations threaten the destruction of our free government. As did our fathers when they resolved to throw off the absolute tyranny of a bad king, so let us give certain facts to a candid world. This monster, sitting supreme in the politics of this country, has enacted laws authorizing him to open in all our towns and cities slaughter-houses of men, women and children and of all virtue.

He has enacted laws permitting him to transform men into beasts.

He is the direct cause of nine-tenths of the woes and sorrows which blight and curse our people.

He, hiding his monstrous deformity under the forms of law enacted by his own vassels, over whose heads he cracks the slave-driver's lash in halls of legislation, maintains at our expense an army of miscreants, who, at the very doors of our homes and in the shadows of our sanctuaries, prosecute the work of murder and death.

He has despoiled labor, burdened property with excessive taxation, impoverished whole communities, hindered education, corrupted morals, fostered crimes, aided all classes of vice and wrong, and plunged his unhappy victims into shame and degradation.

He would have us transmit to our children a heritage of distilleries, breweries and saloons, and chain to the weary backs of society increasing burdens of paupers, criminals, idiots and insane.

He seizes and debauches innocent children, tears sons from the arms of sorrowing mothers, and bears them away to dishonored graves.

He wrings hot tears from the eyes of widows whose husbands he has sacrificed at the shrine of the drunkards' Moloch.

He sits supreme in the national Congress and makes laws in the country's capital.

He governs Courts of Justice, and makes ministers of the law and legislatures his lackeys.

He silences the preacher in his pulpit and muzzles the editor at his desk.

He wastes, directly and indirectly, in his revels, annually, more than a thousand millions of our dollars, and marshals in his staggering procession to death and hell a half-million of our people.

He is a cold, heartless, cruel murderer and assassin of the deepest dye.

He counts his victims by millions. His butcheries go on daily and nightly within sight of the portals of our homes. We can hear the shrieks of his victims and the wail of the bereaved.

He is the howling, prowling, destroying wolf, with scorching, fierce breath, descending upon every fold, slaying and devouring our best loved. Let us arise in our united might as did our ancestors in Old Windham at the call of Israel Putnam on Pomfret Heights in the last century. Let us hunt this wolf to his den and shoot him.

The time would fail me to tell the thousandth part of the evils, multiplying and destructive, that flow out of the infamous liquor traffic, and in all this vast throng this great evil has no friend. Dear friends, have we the courage this day to issue, and thereto affix our signatures in the pronounced handwriting of John Hancock, our new Declaration of Independence; and with a firm reliance on Divine Providence, pledge our lives and fortune and our sacred honor that from this day henceforth no word or act of ours may be construed into allegience to this felon king? He must be driven from his places of power and utterly overthrown. The conflict is upon us. It is a life-and-death struggle. Oh, for an uprising of righteous indignation, for an aroused American conscience, for patriotic devotion to home and country like that which gave inspiration and faith to Jonas Parker and his neighbors when they reddened the village green of Lexington with their blood on that glorious morning a century and more ago, when the old Revolution burst into magnificent blossoms as the shot was fired that echoed round the world; for an enlightened public opinion, the mightiest advocate of any question for the combined forces of Christian home, Christian church and Christian commonwealth in battle array against the traffic in theft and murder, until it shall be thundered from every political Sinai, national and State, "Thou shalt not, and there shall be no legalized saloon where floats the starry flag of the free." Not until then will the infamous business cease; not until then will we be delivered from its Satanic sorceries.

BEER SLAYS MORE THAN HEROD.

"At least 1,200 children under five years of age will die in Chicago between the first of July and the end of August," said the health commissioner of Chicago, Dr. O. C. DeWolf, the other day to a reporter, "and many of these could be saved by proper care and proper management. The heat is the great enemy of our young babies. The mothers permit themselves to be heated out of all reasonable condition, and the food that the infants get is vitiated and often fatal. But what are you going to do?

"You can't tell a working woman that she must not work. She must work, no matter what the consequences to the child may be. You can't point out to such a woman that after a heavy day's washing she is in no condition to supply food to her child. It is out of the question. You have got to take these things as they are, and there is nothing that science can do except to advise the mothers to get down to the lake front as often as they can and keep their children as cool and as well fed as possible.

"You must understand," the doctor continued, "that there are other conditions besides these which must be considered. Whenever there is a hot Sunday we always look confidently forward to an increased death rate among the German babies on the following Tuesday, and we have never been deceived. It follows from the peculiar conditions. The mothers drink a good deal of beer, and the babies are heated up beyond the point of endurance, and we see the result in the office here."

WHISKY WAR IN KENTUCKY.

There is a bitter fight in progress over the whisky question at Harlan Court House, Ky., which bids fair to end in much bloodshed. County Judge Lewis believes that a great deal of whisky is being sold in the town in spite of the local prohibition law. Several grocerymen were tried a few days ago on the charge, but no proof was produced.

Their arrest angered the accused, and as Judge Lewis rode out of town at evening he barely escaped being shot by John H. Harley, one of them. Lewis rode back into town and assembling the opponents of the tariff, proceeded to search the stores of John M. Blair, M. R Howard, and others suspected. They found liquor in several and rolled the barrels into the streets and emptied the contents on the ground. This was done under a guard of twenty men armed with Winchesters.

On Sunday the 23d the whisky men rallied and the factions met in the street. A hundred shots were fired, but nobody was killed. Five men were carried off badly wounded.

GINGER ALE MUST GO

Judge Couch at Waterloo, Iowa, July 19, filed an opinion in certain saloon cases, which were submitted to him at the last term of court in Buchanan county, which disposes of a question that has occupied the attention of all the courts for the past six years. The saloons for a number of years have been selling a beverage known as "ginger ale." It usually contains in the neighborhood of three per cent of alcohol. The justice courts in a number of instances have held this amount of alcohol was not intoxicating, and they were sustained by the District Court in this view. The Cedar Rapids chemists invariably testified that an ordinarily healthy person would have to drink a large quantity of it before it would produce intoxication. Judge Couch now holds that if there is any malt in the beverage, and it would produce intoxication if taken in any quantity, that it comes under the ban of the law. This decision knocks the last prop from under the saloon interests in this district. The court grants a perpetual injunction, and orders the Sheriff to proceed at once and close the saloons and sell the fixtures to meet the costs.

After we have tried prohibition there will be but little chance of its being set aside for the advantages, or rather disadvantages, of an open saloon.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON 7. Third Quarter.—Aug 12.

SUBJECT.—The Day of Atonement.—Lev. 16: 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Without shedding of blood is no remission.—Heb. 9: 22.

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1 The Reason for the Day of Atonement. vs. 1, 2. The two sons of Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, had ventured carelessly or ignorantly into the presence of the Lord with an offering of strange fire, and for their sacriligious act were smitten with death. How far they were responsible we do not know, but the operation of law cannot be annulled because men are ignorant or careless. The question which we have immediately to do with is the solemn one asked in Heb. 2: 2, 3. To be ignorant or careless of God's requirements is not less but even more dangerous than under the old dispensation. It is true that in Jesus Christ Deity comes very near to us, but the deepest love is always the most reverent, and not even among the glories of the ancient temple could a Christian feel so much that he is standing upon holy ground as when he contemplates the wonderful sacrifice made for his redemption. We offer the strange fire of worldliness and vanity when we make church-going in any way an occasion for personal display. A minister who preaches with a desire to show off his gifts of pulpit oratory more than to save men commits the sin of Nadab and Abihu. He offers before the Lord the strange fire of his own human ambition. The church which allows Masonic celebrations offers the strange fire of a false worship before the Lord, and courts spiritual death. The warnings of the New Testament are even more solemn than those of the Old. If they escaped not who trifled with truth revealed by an earthly voice, how shall we escape if we refuse to hear the truth which speaks to us from heaven? The enlightened age in which we live immensely increases our responsibility. The sin of Nadab and Abihu was probably committed in ignorance, and their act, however rash and presumptuous, periled no life but their own. But the American voter knows that with every vote he casts for license, high or low, or for men committed to license, he is signing the death warrant of souls, and giving over countless women and children to suffer and starve without redress. Which sin is the worst? Let Christ's own words answer: "He that knew his Lord's will and did it not shall be beaten with many stripes, but he that knew not his Lord's will shall be beaten with few stripes."

2. The Manner of the Atonement. vs. 3-6. Aaron had first to make atonement for himself. We need a high Priest who is "holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners." We need one "made like unto his brethren, who can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities." So Aaron takes off his hierarchial robes "made for glory and for beauty," and puts on the clean white dress of a common priest. We have only to study Hebrews, especialy from chapters 7th to 10th, to see how beautifully Christ's atoning work is here foreshadowed. But are there no practical lessons for ourselves? Every Christian is called to be a priest of the living God, offering up daily the "reasonable service" of himself with all his powers of mind and body. Then what manner of man ought he to be in all holy life and conversation? Paul tells us, "as Christ was so are ye in this world," and while we should be separate from the world in all matters of sinful conformity, we are most Christlike when we are most in sympathy with our fellow-beings; when we are willing to ignore artificial distinctions and be "made like unto our brethren." Masonic titles divide man from man. They encourage jealousy and suspicion on one side and pride and vain glory on the other. This would be enough to condemn Masonry as opposite to the spirit of Christianity. By virtue of his divine calling as king and priest to God, the Christian has a right to enter the holy place. For him the veil is torn away. Do we daily use this high privilege? "I will appear in the cloud over the mercy seat." It may be a cloud filled with showers of blessing. It may be a cloud of sorrow, of disappointment and trial. But all is one to the trusting heart, "for his bow shall be seen in the cloud."

—It is expected the next annual meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association will be in Dover the latter part of October. Rev. Dr. Edward Robie, Rev. A. A. Hoyt, Mrs. Dr. Odell, Miss E. E. Flagg, Miss I. D. Haines, Henry J. Pierson and wife have been invited to speak.

THE CHINESE WORK AT THE MARINERS' TEMPLE, NEW YORK.

During the month we have been called to look at the Chinese at play. Through the courtesy of our school we were invited to join them in their annual picnic, which is conducted conjointly by the members of the various schools. TheChinese pupils did it in a right noble and liberal manner. They chartered a large excursion steamer, and when we boarded we were surprised to find with their invited guests they numbered some 2,500 passengers. The sail up the Long Island Sound was made perfectly enjoyable by the beauty of the weather and the agreeableness of all the surroundings. At Routon Point, where we landed, one would have almost thought it the Fourth of July or else a day of mimic battle. The Chinese, with their innate and national love for firecrackers, literally made the woods and rocks ring. We came home more and more impressed that our home missionaries are doing a grand work in educating the Chinese. Evidences on that boat were many that the grace of God is not preached in vain.

June 25, at the Mariners' Temple, the scholars gave a reception to their friends. Miss Roundy played the piano and the scholars sang duets and choruses from sacred songs and solos. Who could doubt the utility of such education, especially when we noticed that for their services they read from the Old and New Testaments instead of, as is often the case at such entertainments, books and pieces which, to say the least, are more frothy than instructive.

A young man, who is studying medicine and who can speak the English fluently, exhorted the teachers to continue in well doing, declaring that their work among the Chinese in New York will eventually do more for China and the Chinese nation than far greater efforts in China could possibly produce; because the Christianized Chinaman, among the wonderful surroundings of such a city and nation, when he returns will have larger ideas and powers to interest and direct his countrymen in the good way.

J. F. Avery.

—It was stated in the World's Missionary Conference that the church of to-day "is confronted with a larger heathen and unevangelized population than in any former period of our history. A population of over 800,000,000 have never heard the name of Christ." The fact is that only a few outposts have been established on heathen soil. While the history of modern missions is something wonderful, yet the heathen world of one hundred years ago is still heathen. Africa, India, and China are unsubdued, and they are the great strongholds of Satan. The work calls for men and means, and not the least, for hearty co-operation on the part of missionaries and missionary societies.

—Rev. John F. Brooks, of the Presbyterian church, died last week at Springfield, Ill., aged 87. He was one of seven young men who banded together while in their theological course in New Haven for the establishment of a college in this State, and the Illinois college at Jacksonville is the result of their exertions. Mr. Brooks has been one of its trustees from the first.

—Mr. J. Crossett, in his letter in the New York Witness, urges that the Chinese of Honan province, who have lost everything by the great flood, are just in the right condition of mind to receive the Gospel. Liberal donations should be forwarded to the missionary societies which are working in China with the request to make a special effort tor Honan at this time. The China Inland Mission, of which Mr. J. Hudson Taylor, who took a prominent part in the late Northfield Convention, is one of the directors, is a noble institution. Its missionaries receive no stated salaries, but trust God entirely to supply their wants through the liberality of his people.

—Jeremiah Hubbard, the gifted Indian missionary, has been holding meetings, says the Christian Worker, on the "old feast grounds" in the Seneca nation, Indian Territory, for some time past, speaking through an interpreter. Five Indians have been converted and have joined the Friends, two men and three women. The Lord is leading and has blessed them greatly.

—Ramallah school and mission, near Jerusalem, founded by Eli and Sybil Jones, has been placed under the care of New England Yearly Meeting of Friends. The Mt. Lebanon mission is now left wholly to English Friends.

—The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Canada Yearly Meeting contains seventeen auxiliaries, and 219 members. They received last year from all sources $1,987.99. Three hundred and twenty dollars have gone to aid in Mexican work; the remainder will be devoted to Japan in support of William V. Wright.

—J. Hudson Taylor, the veteran founder and present leader of the "China Inland Mission," one of the most renowned missionaries of this age, visited Chicago last week. He spent the Sabbath speaking to large audiences, and addressed two of the noon meetings at Farwell Hall.

—The Puritan Congregational church, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., was struck by lightning on a recent Sunday evening while service was being held. Many of the audience were prostrated by the shock, but no one was killed.

—Rev. Father Talton, of Quincy, Ill., is said to be the only colored Catholic priest in the United States. He was born in slavery. He speaks several languages.

—The late Emperor William of Germany was a liberal subscriber to the funds of the London Society for promoting Christianity among the Jews. The society expended last year $186,730.

—Dr. Hunt, Treasurer of the Episcopal Fund, has paid Bishop Taylor $12,000, being the amount allowed him as salary for the past four years by the recent General Conference.

—It is proposed to establish in Bethany, the town of Mary and her sister Martha, where Christ raised Lazarus from the dead, a home which shall form a center of Christian work. A piece of land has been secured there for this purpose. The village now contains about five hundred inhabitants.

—Mr. Ben Hogan, the converted pugilist, has for a time been conducting the West-side Prayer-meeting in Greenwich street, New York. The attendance has greatly increased, many unconverted business men being attracted and influenced for good. Mr. Hogan also speaks at various missions throughout the city.

—The unceasing activity and indomitable energy of Mr. Moody is a marvel to his friends. As soon as one great responsibility is removed another is assumed. The students hardly take their departure before Mr. Moody is dilligently at work arranging for the sixth general conference for Bible study, and the presentation of working methods in the various fields of Christian service, which is to be held at the Northfield Seminary building during the first ten days of August. Some two hundred rooms have already been engaged at the Seminary and about town, indicating that this will the largest convocation yet held. These summer conferences are growing more and more popular and useful. The list of speakers who will assist Mr. Moody will include, among others, the Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, of the Inland China Mission, George B. Studd, of London, Prof. Harper, of Yale College, Dr. Alexander McKenzie, of Cambridge and Harvard College, H. B. Hartzler, of Harrisburg, Pa., and the the Rev. H. L. Hastings, of Boston. The singing will be in charge of Ira D. Sankey and George C. Stebbins.—Intelligencer.

—Rev. John Fagg, writing from Amoy, China, of the difficulties of Christian work in that country and the efforts of native Christians, says: "The filth of Chinese cities has not been exaggerated. The streets are so narrow that men usually walk single file. In many streets it is difficult to hold up an umbrella without touching a bazar on either side. In these alleys the motley crowd jostle along, men with loads crying out to the people to get out of the way. There are no horses, no carriages, no parks, no fine buildings, no pleasant houses, no neat dooryards. Filth piles are found on the main streets. No suggestion of neatness is seen anywhere. Everything has a dusty, disorganized look, if it looks and suggests nothing worse. I am astonished that people, in so many respects very ingenious, can be willing to live in such cities. We could not live in them and expect long to enjoy health; it is quite enough to spend several hours in them, threading your way through crowd and stench and filth, visiting a chapel or preaching in the street in front of some temple or some little opening. But the Lord's people are here, I am sure of that. Already I have met people whose Christianity not only makes them a praise in the churches, but who show it in their countenances. Most of our Chinese preachers are excellent men."

—Frank James, the bandit and bank robber, and Arensdorf, the murderer of Haddock, are both Grand Lodge Knights of Pythias.

—Esther Pugh, treasurer of the National W. C. T. U., says: "There can be no genuine revival of religion in a church whose pastor or leading members are Masons.'

In Brief.

Justice Charles, at Liverpool, recently sentenced a man to seven years penal servitude and his wife to the same punishment for life, for cruelty to their child, a little girl, whom they had kept imprisoned in a dark cellar and had beaten, burned with a hot poker, and otherwise abused.

The stupendous plan for supplying the city of Liverpool with water involves the removal of a whole Welsh village, including woods, cottages, churches, etc, this immense space to be devoted to a reservoir four and one-half miles long by half a mile to a mile broad, and eighty feet deep. There are to be three lines of pipe, each sixty eight miles long, with filtering beds and secondary reservoirs, and the cost of the aqueduct alone is estimated at $15,000,000.

Mr. Lewis Carroll, author of "Alice in Wonderland," says: "I have never seen Mr. Gilbert's clever play, 'Pinafore,' performed by grown-up actors; as played by children, one passage in it was to me sad beyond words. It occurs when the Captain utters an oath, and forthwith a bevy of sweet, innocent-looking little girls sing, with bright, happy looks, the chorus, 'He said, "Damn me!" He said, "Damn me!"' I cannot find words to convey to the reader the pain I felt in seeing those dear children taught to utter such words to amuse ears grown callous to their ghastly meaning. Put the two ideas side by side—hell, and those pure young lips thus sporting with its horrors—and then find what fun in it you can! How Mr. Gilbert could have stooped to write, or Sir Arthur Sullivan could have prostituted his noble art to set to music such vile trash, it passes my skill to understand."

It is a fact not perhaps generally known that thirty five out of thirty eight States have laws prohibiting the advertisement of lotteries. By the way, public sentiment on the subject of lotteries has changed remarkably in the last 150 years. In 1744 lotteries were officially authorized in Massachusetts, in 1757 Boston instituted a lottery to pay for paving its streets, and in 1763 Faneuil Hall was repaired with aid from a lottery. At that day lotteries were considered legitimate, and were almost as frequent as apothecary shops are to day. Lotteries were even established to aid in building churches. But experience taught that they were demoralizing and immoral, and stringent laws have been passed against them. The fact that in only three States now are they allowed to be even advertised shows unmistakably that the moral sentiment of the country is improving.

The Director of the Mint reports that for the year 1887 the product of gold amounted to $33 000,000, and of silver to $53,257,000. Coinage of the mints during the calendar year, $60,379,151. Bars of gold and silver manufactured, $65,338,595. Total metallic stock in the United States on the 1st of June, 1888: Gold coin, $592 129 702: gold bullion in the mints, $114,710,817; total gold, $706 840,519 Silver dollars, $297,099,790; subsidiary coin, $76 400 842; silver bullion in the mints, $10,154,905; total silver, $383 655 537; total gold and silver, $1 090,496 056; gold and silver used in the arts, $19 880,000 The coinage of the world during the calendar year 1887 was $124 998 797 gold and $133 502 066 silver. The reported consumption of gold in the industrial arts in the world for 1886 was $46 000,000 and $22,000 000 silver. Production of gold and silver in the world in 1886 was $93,764,235 gold and $126 457 500 silver.

Professor Munroe Smith tells us in Political Science Quarterly some most astonishing facts. Of all the population of Massachusetts only 855,491 were born of native parents, while 919 969 had foreign parents and 119,741 were born of mixed parents. That is, Massachusetts is in fact a foreign State, for 53 53 per cent. of her blood is foreign. "There are sixty-eight cities and towns in the commonwealth in which there is an excess of persons of foreign parentage. These towns have 58 per cent. of the population, while the remaining 280 towns, which contain a majority of native born parentage, represent only 41 per cent. of the whole." That is, our foreign influx gravitates into towns and cities, and is largely possessed of the herd instinct. Although in Massachusetts there is the additional attraction of great factories, which open to vast numbers of foreign operatives, what is true of Massachusetts is equally true of one or two of the Northwestern States. They are essentially foreign in population.—Globe-Democrat.

It has remained for a Paw Paw, Ill., court to discover that a man is justified in returning bullets for overripe eggs. A temperance lecturer who entered the classic precincts of that town a day or two ago was treated to a shower of unpleasantly redolent missiles, which imparted to the victim that beautiful chrome yellow shade so highly prized by connoisseurs at a pumpkin show. The unfortunate man lost no time in drawing his revolver and opening fire upon his assailants. He was promptly arrested and acquitted by a judge, who held that it was one of the inalienable rights of an American citizen to defend himself against such outrages. Hereafter lecturers who visit Paw Paw and meet the fate of the individual above mentioned, will not be obliged to wait for the slow processes of a court to have their assailants fined $5 or $10 or $15, as the case may be. Given a revolver and a few cartridges, and they can shoot $5, $10, or $15 worth of daylight through the offending parties, according to the enormity of the crime to be expiated.—Daily News.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

FARM NOTES.

THE TOMATO.

The tomato will produce fruit under quite unfavorable circumstances, in the driest seasons, and in spite of neglect Like everything else it has its likes and dislikes, and if you gratify its whims it will yield a heavy crop of good quality. Though it often gives fair returns in time of drought, it is addicted to heavy drink ing, and likes moisture as well as heat. It is a gross feeder and its roots will travel a long distance in search of savory bits of manure. Give it as much as it will eat and drink—no danger of its overfeeding—and it will reward your liberality. The common notion that the crop should be limited to a small amount near the root, and the tops pinched off, does not tally with my experience. That is proper in a field-crop where the space between plants is only three feet, but where you train to a trellis, and set the plants four to five feet from each other, the amount of fruit each will perfect during the season is astonishing. The vines should never be permitted to lie on the ground, for fully half the fruit will rot, or become a prey to the cut-worm and Mrs. Smith's fowls from next door. Trailed over stiff brush they will do very well. The hoop-system of training is a delusion and a snare, crowding the branches too much together. The venders of hoop-stakes will traverse this, of course; "our craft is in danger" Best of all is the training of the vines to a stout trellis, high, with well-set posts, and in a bed half filled with manure. There are some varieties which, under this treatment, will attain a length and produce a crop fine in quality and enormous in quantity. Some years since, when I was living in the country, I dug in some superfluous manure along a vacant grape trellis, and set six plants along its twenty-four feet of length. The trellis was eight feet from the ground. The vines were trained to the top, and fell over it. They were loaded with masses of ripened and unripened fruit, and passers would stop and gaze and speculate as to the variety.

The usual plan is for the suburban resident to buy a dozen hot-bed raised plants from a seedsman in town, bring them home at night, set them out, water and protect them. Those that do not die, grow. They are tenacious of life. But they do not fruit much earlier than the plants which volunteer themselves from where decayed fruit has fallen the year before. Where you have a window with a southern or southeastern exposure you can better be your own gardener. Fill a small box with light soil, sow in thinly eighteen or twenty seeds, dropping them one by one. When the plants under sunlight and moisture have made their first rough leaves, transplant each, lifting it and earth into a three-inch pot, and tend all these until time to set out. Then reverse the pot, tap the rim to loosen the ball of earth, and put it in its proper place undisturbed. When you water use well-diluted liquid manure and train the shoots, securing them with soft cotton strings—lampwick is good—as they grow. You may find plants for a later growth that have sprung up in the former tomato bed, and transplant these, with a trowel and a ball of earth attached, or you may sow for a later crop, in "the beginning of May out-of-doors." The ground should be stirred around them until they get three feet high, when you had better stop it, or they will get too much root pruning.

The growing season of the tomato may be prolonged, on a small scale, where you have spare frames and sashes. During October there generally comes a single frosty night, and that ends your trellis-frame tomatoes. But, in anticipation of this, you can place a sash over tomatoes growing flat and trained over brush. If it threatens frost at night put on the sash, and a little matting or carpet, banking the earth at the bottom of the frame. Remove matting next day, and, if the frost pass, the sash. By care in this way you can keep a few plants bearing all through the Indian summer. When frost threatens remove all fruit from the other vines that have begun to color, and put them in drawers, as you would winter pears, excluding air and light. They will ripen there perfectly, and, after the fashion of the pear, have a finer flavor than those ripened on the vine.—Dr. Thomas Dunn English, in The Independent.

Long-Standing

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials: —

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Fernandina, Fla.,) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with steal by tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity ☐ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages in cloth $2 00. Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, in two volumes, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated," as advertised, but the signs, grips, passwords, etc., of these three degrees are given at the close of Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated." Vol. 1 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive. Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive. Price per volume, paper cover, 50 cts. each; in cloth, $1.00 each. Each volume per dozen, paper covers, $4.00; per dozen, cloth bound, $9.00.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639 Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry; the exact "Illinois Work," fully illustrated. New edition 274 pages; bound flexible cloth covers, 50 cts.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp..... .75 cts.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees or citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2 00

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesman concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body a Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

National Christian Association,

The Broken Seal: or Freemasonry Tested by the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents, per dozen, $7 50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $5 50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the facts connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each, per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price, 20 cents each; per dozen. $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents, per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Salvation as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cts.

Anti-Masonic Sermons and Addresses. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness;" the Sermons of Messrs. Cross, Williams, M'Nary, Dow and Sarver; the two addresses of Pres't Blanchard, the addresses of Pres't H. H. George, Prof. J. G. Carson and Rev. M. S. Drury; "Thirteen Reasons why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion" and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages: cloth, $1.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen. 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. J. Day Brownlee. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able Sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

News of The Week.

WASHINGTON.

A tariff conference of the Republican Senators was held at Senator Evarts' residence Wednesday, at which a decision was reached that the Finance Committee shall prepare a tariff bill as a substitute for the Mills bill, and that it shall then be reported to the Senate and taken up and passed regardless of the length of time this may require.

President Cleveland went on a fishing trip last week. On Thursday his party boarded the steam yacht Susquehanna at New York for Sandy Hook. He is the guest of Joseph Stickney, the big coal merchant and owner of the yacht. The President came on from Washington on the 11 o'clock train with Mrs. Cleveland, Mrs. Folsom, and the gentlemen of the party. Mrs. Cleveland and Mrs. Folsom went to Marion, Mass., where they will be the guests of Richard Watson Gilder. President Cleveland will fish from the yacht for four days. It is rumored that the trip is to help the Democratic party in New York out of a disagreeable personal tangle.

The vote on the Fisheries treaty in the Senate is expected at the latest by Thursday. There is only one result to be expected—that is the treaty will be rejected. A two-thirds vote is necessary to ratify and the treaty will not receive a majority. The vote upon it will be strictly along the party lines, and the majority against it will be whatever majority the Republicans have in the Senate.

CHICAGO.

Frank Chapek, John Hronek, Frank Chleboun, and Rudolph Sevic. the four anarchists who were arrested by Inspector Bonfield, were indicted by the grand jury Wednesday for conspiracy to murder.

The results of the completed school census show that the total population of the city is 802,651, as against 703,817 in 1886 This is a gain of 98 834 being an average of a little more than 14 1-25 per cent. Of this number 12,826 were gained by annexation, leaving the natural increase 86,008.

The Chicago & South Side Rapid Transit Railroad Company began condemnation proceedings to gain possession of the property between Wabash avenue and State street, from Harrison street south to Hubbard court. They will build an elevated railway through the alleys.

The North Side Sunday Observance Association met at the Wesley M. E. church Tuesday evening, elected Dr. Herrick Johnson president, and adjourned until September.

The Standard Oil Company's pipe line from Lima, Ohio, to South Chicago was tested last week by sending a quantity of water through it. The water left Lima Saturday and reached South Chicago Friday. No leaks were discovered. A stream of crude oil will be started this week. The oil is propelled by pumping works at Lima. These, with other works in contemplation, will deliver about 8 000 barrels daily. The distance is 206 miles. One of the tanks at South Chicago is completed ready to receive oil. It will hold 30,000 barrels. The oil company expect to use about 800,000 barrels a day in this district. The rolling mills at South Chicago use the oil now, and have discharged a number of firemen.

COUNTRY.

It is reported that the Independent Convention of Colored Men, so called, at Indianapolis last week, was arranged by Lewis Ogilvie, a United States railway mail agent under the present administration, and the delegates from Columbus, Ohio, were given free transportation by the Democratic managers. The members came to blows and drew revolvers at one time.

Rev. T. H. Dahl, of Stoughton, Wis, Prohibition candidate for Lieutenant Governor, and D. C. Prescott, of Marinette, candidate for Treasurer, have declined to run, and C. Carlson, of Eau Claire, and L. W. Hoyt, of Madison, have been named, respectively, for the vacant places on the ticket by the State Central Committee.

The funeral services of Courtlandt Palmer, founder of the Nineteenth Century Club, were held at New York Thursday, the infidel Robert G. Ingersoll delivering the address.

For falsely swearing to owning property in Kings county, while qualifying as a bondsman, J. P. J. Howard, of Brooklyn, a prominent colored politician of reputed wealth, known as "the Black Prince," was sentenced Friday to seven years and six months' imprisonment.

News was received Thursday of an attack made Monday night at Jackson, Miss., by Roderick Lowry, nephew of Governor Lowry, of Mississippi, upon his wife who had left him because of his brutality. Mrs. Lowry was kicked and beaten severely and may not recover, while Lowry has so far escaped arrest. The Lowry gang sustained the murderer Hamilton, who shot the young Prohibition editor Gambrell, and helped get him clear.

The Democrats have nominated Owen Lovejoy, of Princeton, Ill., for Congress. Mr. Lovejoy is the son of the late Owen Lovejoy, the well known Abolitionist and Anti mason.

At Pittsburg Captain Lewis Clark, convicted of selling liquor without licenses on the excursion steamer Mayflower, was fined $700 and sentenced to seven months' imprisonment in the county jail.

It is said that the New Jersey Supreme Court, in an opinion to be made public July 31, has declared the high license law unconstitutional.

Four rumsellers of Trenton, N. J., prosecuted by the Law and Order league of that city, have been sentenced to six months in jail for violating the Sunday law.

At Aurora, Ill., Wednesday, the trial of the dynamite cases against Bauereisen, Goding and Keogel, "Q" strikers, Bowles testified to having purchased dynamite under orders from Bauereisen.

The naval court martial at Annapolis, Md., has finished its labors. Thirteen cadets were tried out of the sixteen originally supposed to be concerned in the hazing, no charges being found against three The testimony adduced will be submitted to the Secretary of the Navy, and he will give his opinion before the verdicts are finally rendered.

The coal-mining town of Roslyn, in Washington Territory, was totally destroyed by fire during a high wind, 250 houses being burned and 1,500 inhabitants made homeless. The loss is 500,000.

Ben Dalton, a farm hand, living near Dryden, N. Y., Tuesday night shot John D. Lamont and Miss Roat, a domestic in Lamont's family, the latter probably with fatal effect, and killed himself. Miss Roat had rejected Dalton, on Lamont's advice, and he had sworn revenge.

Near Omaha, Neb, Thursday a freight car loaded with grain was ditched, and when opened two hours later the dead bodies of six men were found under the grain, which had fallen on them as the car turned over.

John P. Anderson went down a well Thursday, July 19, near Johnston, Neb., for the purpose of cleaning it, and when near the bottom the walls began to cave in. He was drawn to within twenty five feet of the top, when the well completely closed. The work of rescue began by digging, but as it was supposed he was dead the funeral arrangements were made. On Monday, the 23d, he astonished the rescuers by pulling the rope and speaking. The work went on through the week, an opening being made through which food was lowered, and lumber by which the caving well was braced, and finally on Saturday the prisoner was released alive from his threatened tomb.

A county seat war in Stevens county, Kansas, has broken out afresh, and has resulted in the murder of John Cross, sheriff of the county, and other citizens of Woodsdale, making eleven in all. The county was organized two years ago and is occupied largely by hard characters. Hugoton was chosen the county seat by fraud, the Woodsdale people say, and the election result is in litigation. Bad blood has long existed between the two towns. Bloodshed is also feared in Kearney county, Kansas, over a county seat vote. Affidavit was made before Judge Abbott on a Santa Fe train that mob violence was threatened; that a fair count could not be had, and Judge Abbott granted an injunction. Both factions are armed, and Lakin looks like a camp. Bloodshed is feared as the final outcome.

A gang of fifteen or twenty tramps, that had their headquarters in the woods near Ashtabula, Ohio, were attacked by the local police Monday, but most of them got away. Those who escaped were armed with revolvers, and Monday night attacked the conductor of a local freight train on the Lake Shore Road and compelled him to take them on board. They broke open one of the cars and stole a keg of beer, and when near Geneva escaped. Tuesday they attacked a farmer, shooting into his house and committing other depredations. The farmer sent word for help, and a company of militia was sent to suppress the tramps. They were surrounded in the woods and after a sharp battle nineteen were captured.

FOREIGN.

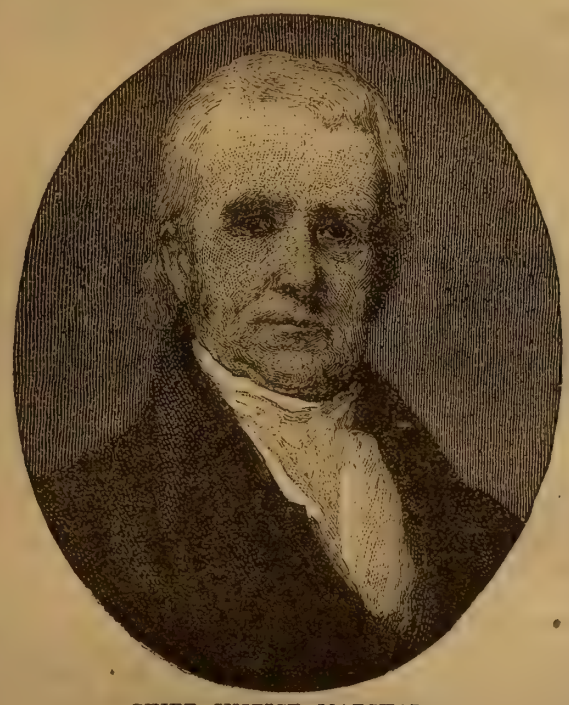
Rev. R. S. Storrs, the great Congregational preacher of New York, was lately understood to have decided for the Prohibition party. He contradicts the report in a long letter in the Independent. He declares he has not yet separated from the Republican party, through "the momentum of habit;" but while he speaks words of honest praise for the candidates, for the platform he has just and severe criticism. While in favor of a modified protective tariff, Dr. Storrs sees in the Republican platform a politician's scheme to exact the last "pound of flesh" from our well-taxed people. He also condemns in eloquent terms the neglect of the Republicans to deal in righteousness "with the one ethical question surviving in our politics"—namely, the suppression of the saloon. Dr. Storrs is already more than half lost to the Republicans. We hope he will soon get out of the Adirondack woods of that party into the civilization of Prohibition.

There will be no Prohibition State or electoral ticket in Louisiana this year. Four years ago there were 338 votes cast for St. John. This year when the Prohibition delegates met they were overpowered by the white Democratic influence in the convention, and went home without nominating. Prohibitionists who led the van four years ago, now insisted that all Democrats must unite this year, and there should be nothing to detract from their vote. The colored delegates—to their praise be it spoken—with two white preachers, kept the faith and worked for a ticket; but Louisiana Democracy at present holds out the demand for obedience in one hand and the loaded rifle in the other. Rev. Byron Gunner, president of Howe Institute, New Iberia, was one of the delegates who stood by his colors to the last. The effort at least demonstrates that as between Republicans in the North and Democrats in the South, Prohibition must struggle on to victory against them both.

The secret White Caps of Crawford, Perry and Spencer counties in Indiana have been able heretofore to so terrify the local authorities that their atrocities have been carried on with impunity. We have learned of but a single case where their brutality had any justification. Two Mormon missionaries visited the region—it seeming to be adapted to their methods of proselyting. But instead of converting the White Caps and shipping them off to brother with their Danites, they began on some susceptible women, two of whom they dragged about with them. The dispensers of secret justice warned them out of the country and then flogged them unmercifully and drove them out. After this directly we read that Governor Gray has sent an officer with militia to clean out the White Cap lodge. Perhaps the Mormons had influence with the Democratic party. At least an effort will be made to break up this Masonic Ku-kluxing in Indiana, and the gang begins to pack up its disguises for sudden departure.



CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL.

Marshal Dyer, acting as receiver of the Federal court for Mormon church property, has levied upon various valuables of the "Saints" amounting to $790,666. In addition to these is the Temple square, containing the Temple, Tabernacle and Assembly Hall, which is far more valuable than all the rest. To be thus shorn of their strength is a sore affliction for the Brighamites, for they must render now an account for these properties and pay the income over to the court for the support of the public school fund. They may yet have the consolation of knowing that the fund comes thus back into their own hands—and it seems to be a wretched defect in the law that it does so—but the schools are also passing out of their control. Last year the Gentiles got control of two, this year of three more, and the loss may be accelerated if the rank and file of Mormondom lose confidence in their despotic leaders. It is found, too, that artesian wells can be cheaply sunk in Jordan valley, and irrigation can proceed without dependence on water from the mountains, which the Mormons have seized entire. There is not a more beautiful country in the world, and none would be more profitable if it could be de-Mormonized.

At a meeting of the Presbyterian Union of New York, Roman Catholicism being under discussion, Rev. Howard Crosby, D. D., pastor of the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian church, arose and commenced his address with the question, "Why should we not join with the Roman Catholic church in the fight against infidelity?" He paused and deliberately said, "Because the Roman Catholic church makes infidelity." The answer was electrical. The audience cheered and applauded for several minutes. Dr. Crosby continued: "The Roman Catholic church has been called an historic church, and we are asked to make it an ally because it is such. Look at Mohammedism, Buddism; they, too, are historic. Shall we join with them on account of their antiquity?

"When does an apple get so rotten that it ceases to be an apple?" said the doctor. "Let us not be deceived by the virtues of those who are superior to their religion, into fellowship with that which is unfriendly to our every interest."

UNDER THE UPAS.

BY C. A. S. TEMPLE.

Rarely, if ever, does any historian record such a strange anomaly, such a cruel travesty of justice and honor, as that in the decision by the Board of Visitors of Andover Theological Seminary, some time since. Several professors had been on trial before them for certain alleged violations of their official trust. In every particular of the transactions for which they were indicted, they were fully associated, and in full sympathy and accord with each other. If one was guilty, then all were guilty. If one was innocent, then all were innocent. All, therefore, should have been acquitted or condemned together; yet all but one were acquitted. That one, alone, was adjudged "guilty," and condemned to an ignominious removal from his professorship!

It is sufficient for our present purpose if we assume, what all the world knows, that the head and front of their offending was that they were, or were presumed to be, the leading spirits, in both the Seminary and the Congregational pulpit, in what is called "The New Departure."

"Every tree is known by its fruit." This divine rule furnishes the surest criterion by which to test this great defection, and through it both the course and attitude of those professors, and the true character of that shameful decision. A noteworthy feature in "The New Departure," is the fact that, whatever its manipulators may, or may not teach in Andover, or in the Andover Review, recent graduates from that Seminary are generally silent, in their pulpit, upon all the great fundamental doctrines of the Gospel, except to stigmatize them as "mere matters of belief," "unprofitable" for either public or private discussion or consideration! Neither do they often, if ever, publicly or privately avow, much less openly and squarely advocate or defend, any specially distinctive or offensive feature of what the Andover Review so ostentatiously denominates "Progressive Orthodoxy." In fact, like the Andover professors, they (very modestly) disclaim therefor any such distinction as that of any new doctrine, or even dogma. They would fain have us believe that the highest honor ever claimed for at least some of those theories, is that of a mere "possibility!" But, despite this cunning affectation, those very theories are made to enter into, to give color and tone and character, in fact, to mold and subordinate everything to their all absorbing, all controlling influence.

From the beginning, the rule and custom of our Congregational churches has been for each church to adopt a statement of its own faith, as nearly as possible, in "that form of sound words" in which each doctrine, principle, or duty is taught in the Word of God. When a so-called "progressive" pastor finds his church in possession of such a creed, he generally takes it in his hand, puts it under the press, turns on the screws, and thus despoils it of the greater part of its vitality, leaving it but the merest shadow of its former self; or it may be that instead the creed is bodily and at once thrown away—by a vote which he has gained of his now "progressive" church, of course—and a new symbol of some sort, which expresses only the least possible minimum of revealed truth, is substituted for it.

The specific, comprehensive statement, covering substantially the whole ground of "the doctrine of Christ," was "unprogressive," an antiquated, "fossilized" compound of, to this age, the merest "narrowness, bigotry, and stupidity;" while the new, pointless, almost meaningless statement of almost nothing "is exceeding broad," and places the church "fully abreast of the present intellectual progress of mankind." Thus, in either case, a shameless vile counterfeit is cunningly and heartlessly substituted for a fair and honest "expression of the Christian faith."

As a legitimate and unavoidable consequence of such administration, a chill like that of "the shadow of death" settles down upon both the church and the community around it. Despite the vain boast of "progress," with which skeptics, both within and outside the church, are sure to compliment and encourage—the whole spiritual atmosphere seems enveloped in "a darkness which can be felt." In such a case, every true Christian prays earnestly, "Lord, revive thy work." Sometimes an "evangelist" is called in. If he is a "true man of God," he "speaks God's word faithfully." The contrast between such preaching and that of the "progressive" type, is always seen and felt. A light, new and startling to many "dead in sin," "breaks forth from the Word of God." Of course such "labor is not in vain in the Lord." Saints are comforted, refreshed, strengthened, quickened, and "sinners are converted unto God." In this way—but never as the result of the miscalled "progressive" preaching—there often comes quite a revival. For the time—as if inconsistencies were nothing—New Departurists do not hesitate to credit all to the "usefulness" of the "advanced" pastor who, perhaps for years, has cumbered and disgraced the pulpit and the pastoral office. But when the evangelist is gone it is at once found that the Divine Spirit has gone too! Of course, that ends the revival. The pulpit, while he occupied it, literally rung with frequent and vigorous blasts from the gospel trumpet—and that with no "uncertain sound"—but now it goes back at once into its former "progressive" routine. Thus, without opposition from the pulpit, skepticism, in its many specious disguises, now quietly resumes its former place and influence, at the front, claiming, even in the church, and as the fruit of the revival itself, a new lease of life, and absolute pre-eminence in everything. Such is the testimony of the Spirit concerning the faithful preaching of "the Word," and such, too, is the contrast between that and the preaching of "a gospel which is not a gospel." The one is "a savor of life unto life" to every one that believeth; while the other is a savor of death unto death to every one that accepts and abides in it!

Under such influences, as might be expected, the doors of our churches are opening wide to skeptics of every stripe, "who hold the truth in unrighteousness." And they are coming in! Even the Unitarian has but to profess "a profound veneration for (Mr) Jesus Christ;" that "henceforth he chooses him for the monarch and portion of his soul," and with a full knowledge of his skepticism and hatred of the truth, the church receives him with open arms. The well-known Universalist, too, on making the same profession, is equally welcome. So, too, is he who entertains but a qualified belief, if any, in the divine inspiration of the Scriptures.

In this way very many of our Congregational pastors and churches in this immediate vicinity, and under, as it were, the very shadow of Andover Theological Seminary, are putting the ban of ecclesiastical condemnation upon the truth of God, lowering the standard of faith and piety, and (charitably!) substituting therefor the sanctimonious sophistries and blasphemies of a great conspiracy against the Christian faith.

Such is the legitimate fruit of the "Advanced Theology," the "Progressive Orthodoxy," the "Higher Criticism," as developed in the teachings of those apostles of "The New Departure," the learned Faculty of that venerable and once honored "school of the prophets."

"Can a fountain send forth, at the same place, sweet water and bitter?" "Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thy heritage unto reproach."

Reading, Mass.

THE DOORS OF PROVIDENCE.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

Every Christian undertaking, in order to have the Divine favor, must be prosecuted not only in accordance with Christian principles, and by purely Christian methods, but must also follow providential indications. "Behold, I set before you an open door," is the Divine warrant for a great undertaking. Closed doors signify its cessation.

When there were in our land four millions of slaves, in practical heathenism, our efforts and prayers for their enlightenment were all in vain, until God had in his wonderful providence overthrown slavery. The door was then open by which Christian philanthropy could give to the freedmen education and the Gospel. The work thus made possible has been entered upon with enthusiasm, and very much has been accomplished. But meanwhile this people has nearly doubled in numbers, and there has sprung up among them a system of bondage scarcely less degrading to true manliness and not less opposed to true Christian principles than the yoke that was so recently broken. The secret lodge system, which the freedmen received from the North, is eating at the vitals of their social, religious and pecuniary welfare.

There is now an open door "to preach deliverance to the captives; the opening of the eyes of the blind, and to set at liberty them that are bruised." The opportunity comes not as the result of conflict and blood, but as the reaction of religion and wise economic considerations.

In more than one hundred institutions of learning, and in more than 5,000 churches can this deliverance be proclaimed. There is no such corresponding opening anywhere in the North. Work can be done in the prosecution of our reform everywhere, but if we will do the best and most effective work, we must enter the open door.

WORTHLESS GUNS.

BY CYRUS SMITH.

There were old muskets at the beginning of the war that at one time had been considered good guns, but had become so rusted and worn that they were dangerous at both ends. The boys would shut their eyes, pull the trigger, miss the mark and have a lame shoulder. They were exchanged for new rifles as soon as they could be obtained.

The Republican party reminds us of one of those old guns that did good service in 1812. The old party, like the old guns, has done its work and cannot be aimed at the enemy of "God and home and native land" any longer definitely. It will not be committed to Prohibition, because it has become so rusty that it has lost its foresight and is no longer a reform party.

Four years ago when men rallied to the new party that has a burnished front-sight of Prohibition they were told, "You cannot elect your man." "You are throwing your votes away." "Prohibition is not in politics." Republicans voted blindly to elect their man, but missed the mark and lost their votes because they were not cast for a living issue. It was not so, however, with the new party, which is committed to living principles.

Republicans were quite lame in the right shoulder, and blamed the St. John men; but it was only the kick of their old guns. Many Republicans and Democrats are Prohibitionists at heart; then why should they throw their votes away by voting the old party tickets? Their platforms are no foundation for a Prohibitionist. A man that does not vote his principles throws his vote away. Better throw away one's vote for a great principle than have it counted with the majority for a great wrong.

PROGRESSIVE THEOLOGY.

[C. H. Spurgeon, in Sword and Trowel.]

The idea of a progressive Gospel seems to have fascinated many. To us that notion is a sort of cross-breed between nonsense and blasphemy. After the Gospel has been found effectual in the eternal salvation of untold multitudes, it seems rather late in the day to alter it; and, since it is the revelation of the all-wise and unchanging God, it appears somewhat audacious to attempt its improvement. When we call up before our mind's eye the gentlemen who have set themselves this presumptuous task, we feel half inclined to laugh; the case is so much like the proposal of moles to improve the light of the sun. Their gigantic intellects are to hatch out the meanings of the infinite! We think we see them brooding over hidden truths to which they lend the aid of their superior genius to accomplish their development!

Hitherto they have not hatched out much worth rearing. Their chickens are so much of the Roman breed, that we sometimes seriously suspect that, after all, Jesuitical craft may be at the bottom of this "modern thought." It is singular that, by the way of free thought, men should be reaching the same end as others arrived at by the path of superstition. Salvation by works is one distinctive doctrine of the new Gospel: in many forms this is avowed and gloried in—not perhaps in exact words, but in declarations quite unmistakable. The Galatian heresy is upon us with a vengeance: in the name of virtue and morality, justification by faith and salvation by free grace are bitterly assailed. Equally a child of darkness is this new purgatory. It is taught that men can escape if they neglect the great salvation. No longer is the call, "To-day, if ye will hear his voice," for the to-morrow of the next state will answer quite as well. Of course, if men may be gradually upraised from sin and ruin in the world to come, common humanity would lead us to pray that the process may go on rapidly. We are hearing every now and again of a "night of prayers for the dead," among certain priests of the Establishment. Nor is it among Ritualists alone, or even mainly, for the other day, at a meeting for prayer, an eminent believer in this notion prayed heartily for the devil; and his prayer, upon the theory of the restitution of all the sinful, was most natural. Prayers for the dead and prayers for the devil! Shades of Knox and Latimer, where are ye? How easy will it be to go from prayers for the dead to payment to good men for special supplications on their behalf! Of course if a devout person will spend an hour in praying a deceased wife out of her miseries, a loving husband will not let him exercise his supplications for nothing. It would be very mean of him if he did. "Purgatory Pick-purse," as our Protestant forefathers called it, is upon us again, having entered by the back-door of infidel speculation instead of by the front entrance of pious opinion.

Do men really believe that there is a Gospel for each century? Or a religion for each fifty years? Will there be in heaven saints saved according to a score of sorts of Gospel? Will these agree together to sing the same song? And what will the song be? Saved on different footings, and believing different doctrines, will they enjoy eternal concord, or will heaven itself be only a new arena for disputation between varieties of faiths?

We shall, on the supposition of an ever-developing theology, owe a great deal to the wisdom of men. God may provide the marble; but it is man who will carve the statue. It will no longer be true that God has hidden these things from the wise and prudent, and revealed them unto babes; but the babes will be lost in hopeless bewilderment, and carnal wisdom will have fine times for glorying. Scientific men will be the true prophets of our Israel, even though they deny Israel's God; and instead of the Holy Spirit guiding the humble in heart, we shall see the enthronement of "the spirit of the age," whatever that may mean. "The world by wisdom knew not God," so says the apostle of the ages past; but the contrary is to be our experience now-a-days. New editions of the Gospel are to be excogitated by the wisdom of men, and we are to follow in the wake of "thoughtful preachers" whose thoughts are not as God's thoughts.

It is thought to be mere bigotry to protest against the mad spirit which is now being loose among us. Pan-indifferentism is rising like the tide; who can hinder it? We are all to be as one, even though we agree in next to nothing. It is a breach of brotherly love to denounce error. Hail, holy charity! Black is white; and white is black. The false is true; the true is false; the true and false are one. Let us join hands, and never again mention those barbarous, old-fashioned doctrines about which we are sure to differ. Let the good and sound men for liberty's sake shield their "advanced brethren," or at least gently blame them in a tone which means approval. After all, there is no difference, except in the point of view from which we look at things: it is all in the eye, or, as the vulgar say, "It is all my eye!" In order to maintain an open union, let us fight as for dear life against any form of sound words, since it might restrain our liberty to deny the doctrines of the Word of God!

But what if earnest protests accomplish nothing, because of the invincible resolve of the infatuated to abide in fellowship with the inventors of false doctrine? Well, we shall at least have done our duty. We are not responsible for success. If the plague cannot be stayed, we can at least die in the attempt to remove it. Every voice that is lifted up against Anythingarianism is at least a little hindrance to its universal prevalence.

THE ROSICRUCIANS.

THEIR HISTORY.

About the only thing known with entire certainty about the Rosicrucians is that the controversy concerning them has been endless and has resulted in fixing the word in the language as the refined appellation of the devotees of theosophic science. Professor Buhle, whose volume has been received since 1807 as the standard authority, considered the order a modified form of Freemasonry. His theories were given to the English public by Thomas de Quincey. Guisseppe Balsamo, the charlatan count Alessandro Cagliostro, among his other pretensions, gave himself out to be a Rosicrucian, and, as such, in possession of all the occult philosophy of the East which was claimed to be hidden in the secret of this order. Others have viewed its documents as a huge jest practiced on the world by the grim jokers of the seventeenth century. Liebnitz thought it the invention of some ingenious person. Others have traced the system to Paracelsus, the mysterious Hierophant of Hohenheim, as to whom the world does not yet know whether to class him among its prophets or its clowns. A strong case has been made out to prove that John Valentine Andreas wrote the Rosicrucian manifestoes. Tauler's hand has been supposed to be in them and the documents themselves recite the story of Christian Rosencreutz as the founder of the order. Hargrave Jennings in his absurd jumble of 1879 and and in that recently issued, sees Rosicrucianism everywhere, as Mr. Astronomer Pye Smyth finds the great Pyramid packed with Divine revelation. Arthur Edward Waite, the latest writer to enter this metaphysical field, has at least these qualifications that he is a skeptic whose credulity cannot be imposed on and that he writes with a reasonable conception of what constitutes evidence. In The Real History of the Rosicrucians, "founded on their own manifestoes and on facts and documents collected from the writings of the initiated brethren," he does not succeed in solving the mystery, not even to his own satisfaction, as he frankly confesses. He follows, however, a rational order and a critical method. He rejects the story of Rosencreutz, but believes in the existence of the brotherhood as an order which fascinated men by some singular and attractive fiction. He is not disposed to concede the antiquity of the order, though he easily finds ancient roots enough out of which such an order might have been developed, and with which it might have been connected in the popular mind. He believes that alchemy had much to do with their secret, that the brotherhood was pre-eminently a learned order and both Christian and Protestant, a consideration which precludes their antiquity on the one hand and divides them from the Templars on the other, whose religious secret he believes to have been of the anti-Christian type. He repudiates Buhle's Freemasonry hypothesis, and is not convinced of Andreas's claim, though he concedes that Andreas was swayed by a passionate belief in the mission of secret societies for the reformation or Germany and the completion of what Luther began. He leaves the argument undecided, and possibly with some touch of a constitutional skeptic's inability to come to a positive decision.—The Independent.

A MASONIC ACCOUNT.

These were a secret society which was founded in the fourteenth century, and became known in the seventeenth. They alleged that the master of their "order" lived over 100 years, and when buried, his tomb could not be found. The tenets of the order declared "they had no wish to interfere with the religious or political merits of countries, but only admired the improvement of mankind by the teaching of a true philosophy, thus to be the hidden levers to raise men in the scale of being. Known as hermitical philosophers, they extolled Raymond Sully, the Alchemyst, and Cagliostro, of last century, claimed to be of the sect. The name is said to be derived from Royenkrug, a German nobleman, who, having traveled much in the East, came back with a rich store of ancient legends and mysteries; one of which was 'that if men properly knew the secret of life, they need never die.' They were also known as the 'Illuminatii,' and Invisible Brothers, because they made no public display of themselves or their science. Bound to their order by the most solemn oaths, they kept their secrets well. They professed to know all science, and taught that every material object had a spiritual counterpart—claimed to have discovered the 'Sophia Lapis' (philosopher's stone). In their system there were nine degrees, and among themselves they are known as 'Adepts.' Their object was to communicate with the learned of all nations, and to form a brotherhood of intelligence, by which as 'sons of light' they should be known to each other; sworn to impenetrable secrecy, they invented a language of signs, and so knew each other. Those who joined them were taught that the highest virtue was the study of the healing art to prolong human life. Unlike some institutions which the middle ages gave birth to, the Fraternity of the Rosy Cross seldom came into prominence. Isolated from each other, they corresponded in cypher carved on wood or stone, sent by trusty messengers, till the art of printing, then one of their number wrote tracts bearing cabalistic signs, which none but the 'adepts' could interpret. They were taught to court solitude and obscurity, in order to contemplate the divine qualities and perfections of the Great Creator. Thus by close observation of the laws of nature they became the fathers of modern science, and so discovered and conserved many physical secrets, which were supposed to benefit men. Living in the world they seemed to be not of it, and as the dominant power and hierarchy of those times were bitterly opposed to magic and the black art (as anything their shallow brains could not grasp was then called), they had to live in recess and seclusion, as they were not to court persecution, and thereby endanger their lives and liberty. Hence they were regarded as mystical personages, said to communicate with beings of another world. Ancient astrology and alchemy they were supposed to study, and thus prophesy future events; knowledge with them was above rubies. The order was governed by five fundamental laws. '1. To ease suffering and to heal the sick. 2. To conform to the manners, customs and laws of the country in which they lived. 3. To meet in council once a year. 4. When dying to name a successor. 5. To preserve their secret from century to century.' They taught that by the practice of every moral virtue, and the checking of all disease, human life might be much prolonged, and that by elixirs and nostrums old age might be kept away. Believing in the occult sciences, they aspired to know all mysteries; and by the aid of mental science to have complete control over all passions. There is a trace of them in Bulwer Lytton's two novels, 'Zanoni' and 'A Strange Story.' As an order they do not now exist; but a 'speculative' order in Freemasonry bears some affinity to them, and who, claiming to be 'Sons of Light,' profess to follow their footsteps."—Australasian Keystone.

THE BATTLE SONG OF GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS.

Be not cast down, O little flock,
Nor fear the deadly battle-shock
With which your foes assail you!
Although they mean your overthrow,
And on your heads deal blow on blow,
Let not your courage fail you.

Your cause is God's, be this your trust,
He will avenge you, for he must;
The issue he will mold it.
You can not be, for long, undone,
For help he'll send through his own Son,
The truth he will uphold it.

If God be God, and true his Word,
World, hell, and devil all have heard
A name that shall o'erthrow them.
Their scoffs shall go no more abroad;
God is with us, we are with God,
The victory we will show them.

Then gird yourselves, ye little flock;
Stand as for God, stand like a rock,
Nor let your foes dismay you!
God soon will all their wrath assuage,
And quench in blood their foaming rage,
His own right arm display you.

Amen! Lord Jesus, take our part;
For thou our great Protector art,
Almighty to deliver!
And as you ransomed ones we'll sing
Our tribute unto thee, our King
And King of kings, forever.

THE BOSTON DEBATE.

But the real point at issue is not Swinton, or indulgences, but public against parochial schools. The Baltimore council condemned our Bible, several of our text books, and finally the whole public school system as Godless. The Catholic whale cannot keep the Protestant public school system on its stomach. Parochial schools are springing up all over the country. Catholic citizens are commanded to take their children out of our schools. If they do not obey they are to be excommunicated; if they do obey the Catholic citizenship of America will be an undigested mass in the body politic. The State needs the gastric juice generated by the public school glands to digest the fare furnished by the old world restaurant. The question is before us and must be met. Roman Catholicism, like Lot's wife on the plain, toes one way and faces another; her ideals, her home, her policy are in the past tense.

New occasions teach men duties,
Time makes ancient good uncouth,
They must upward still and onward,
Who would keep abreast of truth.

Two systems stand face to face. The open Bible and the public school confront the catechism and the parochial school. The Republic rests on Plymouth Rock; the Catholic church rests on St. Peter as a rock. The American people must choose. —Dr. O. P. Gifford, in the Christian Inquirer.

LETTERS FROM EUROPE.

LIFE IN A DUCAL PALACE.

Munich, Bavaria.

I have been in Munich a week. Left Rome all in "blossoms and beauty," as the Italians say, Wednesday evening, stopped two days days at Florence, where everything was in bloom also, and in fourteen hours arrived in a terrific snowstorm on the Brenner pass. There had been several avalanches on the pass within a few days, one of which destroyed a bridge and part of a tunnel on the railroad. We were obliged to get out and walk through the snow of the avalanche to another train sent down to the opposite side of the mountain from Innshinck. Some of the passengers were quite disturbed in their minds, thinking apparently that a second slide from the mountain top might take us with it before we had crossed the broken bridge. In fact, it would not have been very pleasant if such a thing had occurred for the snow came down with such force as to carry the forest trees, mostly pines, torn up by the roots, with it. We saw in another place a large peasant house completely crushed in in the same way. The village of Ober Gurgle, which we visited last summer, is said to be entirely demolished by the repeated avalanches that have occurred there this spring. Those steep mountains are very picturesque, but they seem too dangerous to be desirable as near neighbors.

Schloss, Tegernsee, Bavaria.—Tegernsee is a beautiful lake surrounded on two sides and one end by steep mountains, some of the Bavarian Alps. It is a very fashionable watering-place later in the season, and will be crowded with summer visitors from Munich and Berlin; but now we see hardly any one except the peasants and the people belonging in some way to the castle. The mountains are still covered with snow; it snowed on the higher ones last night again, though here within one and a half hour's walk the fields are covered with cowslips, buttercups, daisies, forget-me-nots, a kind of pink resembling sweet william, wild verbenas, primroses, violets and "johnny-jump ups," and a tiny flower called, for what reason I do not know, "St. Benedict's little Rose."

This castle was built for a monastery several hundred years ago. In the hall out of which my room opens are several portraits of the former priors and other monks, most of them bearing the date of the birth and death of their originals, and a pair of little cupids conspicuously holding up a tablet containing an epitaph in Latin, relating the praiseworthy actions of the same personage. These portraits are of the last generation of monks who inhabited the castle; and they all appear to have lived between 1650 and 1730 or 1740.

I have not yet found anyone who knows in what year the castle was built. It is built in the form of a hollow square. About half of one side of this square is occupied by a church. It is three stories and a half high. In the lower story live in one side the kitchen servants, and on the other side and front the "ladies in waiting" on "her highness," the two elder Princesses and their maids, the "Footmen" (I write them with a capital because they are so immensely important in their own opinion), one of the Duke's companions, a Hugarian gentleman, and we four teachers. In the second story are the rooms of "His Royal Highness Prince Ludwig Wilhelm," (as it stands on the door), Princess Marie Gabrielle and Princess Amelia who is now traveling in Italy, and their different attendants; and in the upper story live the Duke himself and his wife and the last member of the family "His Royal Highness Prince Franz Rudolph," age five weeks. I was quite abashed when I was told that I should be presented to the Prince to whom all Tegernsee will belong, besides several other castles; but when I came into the room, behold! the Prince was a bashful little boy who put his finger in his mouth and hardly dared look at me. I discovered an hour later that the young gentleman's highest ambition was to get into the carriage house and play coachman. He was forbidden to go there, but as he knew I had not been told where he was allowed to go, and where not, he importuned me the first time I took him to walk to take him there, and told me afterward "it was something new for him." I am to take him out sometimes and speak English with him, for this four-year-old boy must already learn four languages. He understands all that is said to him in French or English and a little Portuguese, but answers to all languages in German. He is usually a very nice little fellow, but I pity him, for it is quite probable he may inherit his cousin's and uncle's insanity, (Otto, King of Bavaria, is his cousin, as also the former King Ludwig, both insane). He had twice terrible convulsions, and any fright or excitement is liable to bring them on again.

The Duchess is, I think, the most beautiful woman I ever saw. She is the daughter of the King of Portugal, and has something rather Spanish in her looks, though she is not at all dark. She is only thirty now and her oldest daughter, Princess Sophia is nearly fourteen and very tall of her age.

The Duchess and Duke have gone to Weran in the Tyrol for several weeks. The day they left we all had to put on gloves and stand in two rows near the entrance hall until she came down stairs. Then she gave each one her hand and we were all expected to bow very low and kiss the tips of her fingers. I was "drilled" beforehand to make that bow, or rather courtesy, but I think I did not make a success of it after all. I should have felt inclined to try to slip out of the whole ceremony if it had been possible. Then the Duke shook hands with us all, and we went into the hall where the carriage stood, and the Duchess kissed all the children like any other mother, and told them to be good, etc.; after which we repeated the whole ceremony again and she was helped into the carriage. Little Prince Ludwig had been told he must not cry, and stood the whole time with his lips pressed together and trembling, but never uttering a sound, and looking very unchildish. It was several days before he began to look natural again. Since the Duchess is gone the Princesses are not allowed to be together for any lessons or walk. Each one must go separately with one of her teachers walking from 5 to 7 P. M. and from 8 to 9 A. M. Between 12 and 1 they go into the garden and practice calisthenics with a teacher, the only time the three come together in the day. It seems rather hard on the children, and they are very discontented, but keep it to themselves usually. R.

THE UNITED BRETHREN CONVENTION.

AN INTERESTING MEETING ATTENDED BY OUR INDIANA COLPORTEURS.

WATERLOO, Ind., Aug. 2, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—We are here attending the convention of the radical wing of the United Brethren church, held July 31 to August 3. After working in Auburn and St. Jo we held meeting in Union chapel, a U. B. church east of Auburn. A good audience came to hear, and manifested considerable interest in our work by taking the tracts and asking questions. The work has many true friends in that locality, among whom J. R. Cooper, with whom we spent the Sabbath, is an earnest worker.

Monday we came to Waterloo. Already many delegates had arrived, and we, with them, soon found the entertainment committee and were directed to hospitable homes, which characterize Waterloo. Monday evening religious services introduced the work of the week. Rev. H. J. Becker, of Ohio, preached from Matt. 6: 11. His analysis of the subject was new and unusually interesting, showing human dependence and Divine care. The speaker's experience as a traveller added much interest and instruction to the discourse.

Tuesday afternoon the convention proper was organized. Rev. W. Knipple, of Illinois, was elected chairman, and E. Williams secretary. Rev. William Dillon, of the Christian Conservator, addressed the convention on the progress of the church work represented by his paper. Judging the movement by his remarks the radical wing and all opposed to the lodge power have abundant reason to be encouraged and continue the fight. Mr. Wright, of the same paper, followed, giving a financial report of the organization. Rev. H. J. Becker gave a lecture in the evening, descriptive of his 500 mile horseback ride in Egypt and Palestine.

On Wednesday morning Rev. Potter delivered the address of welcome. Delegates were welcomed both as visitors and as loyal United Brethren. All friends of the cause realized their hearty, hospitable reception. An exhortation to renewed vigor and fidelity closed the address. The chairman of the convention responded, defining the object of the convention about as follows: "We have not assembled to create discord, schism, or trouble in the church, nor to war against secret societies. Many erroneously suppose this is the object The motto which decorates the front wall of the church states clearly the true issue. It reads thus: 'The Constitution of 1841 Must be Maintained.' The General Conference held in 1885 attempted to disprove the validity of the church constitution, and appointed a commission to examine and alter the constitution and confession of faith. According to the church regulation the confession is unchangeable, and to amend the constitution requires a two-thirds vote of all the church laity. The radical wing claims, with good reason, that both these rules were violated in appointing the commission, and that the constitution of 1841 is still in force, and without it there is no church organization. If the liberals cannot disprove this their object will be evident and must be condemned. The vital point of the constitution which the commission has altered, and which the liberal wing of the church wants to adopt, is the regulation regarding secret orders. I quote both the old and the new. The old reads thus:

ART. II., SEC. 7.—There shall be no connection with secret combinations.

"The amended constitution reads:

ART. III., SEC. 1.—We declare that all secret combinations which infringe upon the rigths of those outside their organization, and whose principles and practices are injurious to the Christian character of their members, are contrary to the Word of God, and Christians ought to have no connection with them.

The validity of the constitution, the right of church property, the maintenance of church purity and unity, the commission, its power, work and results, with other phases of the issue, were ably discussed. Rev. H. T. Barnaby, of Michigan, Rev. Floyd, of the Conservator, and other members of the convention spoke during Tuesday and Wednesday. All loyal radicals were earnestly advised not to vote on the work of the commission, and were urged to petition the General Conference of 1889 against any change in the confession of faith, or the constitution. Thursday morning was occupied by reports of committees and soliciting funds. Personal pledges were secured to the amount of $1,045.29; conference pledges amounted to $925.

One of the most interesting features of the convention was a discussion by the ladies, opened by Mrs. Baldwin. They proved effectively that secretism is the enemy of the home and of women; and the lodge divides the home, and prevents the proper training of children.

The relation of the lodge to the church, Masonry and religion, and other subjects of the regular program were thoroughly discussed at the last session of the convention. Recommendations and exhortations to loyalty to the truth and to the church discipline were characteristic of each address.

The United Brethren of the radical wing are to be congratulated on the success of their convention; and, judging by their determination, a great struggle is in the near future. The convention was a grand rally of the loyal United Brethren and those who sympathize with the movement against secret societies. The true spirit of Christianity and opposition to the world pervaded the entire meeting. The fervent prayers and earnest addresses prove the thorough conviction and stability of the radical wing. They intend to maintain the purity, if not the unity of their church.

Secretary J. P. Stoddard's presence was much desired by his friends, but not realized. Your agent listened with much pleasure to Rev. J. K. Alwood and others, who related Secretary Stoddard's experience in opposing Masonry in this State. The N. C. A. has many friends among the United Brethren. Our tracts, especially "Moody" and "Five Bible Arguments," were eagerly sought and read. "Stories of the Gods" sold readily. May all the Christians hope, pray and do what we can to propagate truth and righteousness, and resist the forces of evil.

REFORM NEWS.

THE SUMMER CAMPAIGN AMONG THE GREEN MOUNTAINS.

THE OLD HOME.

SAXTON'S RIVER, Vt., July 26, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—By the mercy of God we have reached the State of our nativity. The grand old mountains tower above and around us, and the blue azure flecked with white fleecy clouds bends over us as of old. "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so is the Lord round about them that fear him, and delivereth them." Thus the devout Psalmist exclaimed, and so our present experience echoes back from this sweet retreat his sacred inspiring words. This has been a kind of half rainy day, greatly refreshing all vegetation. The ground had become very dry and these showers will do untold good. God still sends us the early and the latter rain, from year to year and from generation to generation. "The undevout astronomer," Young says, "is mad." Expand the thought, embrace every man and woman of ordinary intelligence who walks this beautiful world, or traverses its varied waters, as well as he who gazes on the glories of the heavens, and if they pay not reverent worship to the Author of all these sublime and countless glories, truly we may affirm of them, they, too, are "mad." May the beloved readers of this paper all worship the one living and true God, instead of the lords many and gods many to whom myriads bow down.

M. A. BLANCHARD.

THE GOOD WORK BEGINS.

SAXTON'S RIVER, Vt., July 30, 1888.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I am sure you will be anxious to hear a word from me. Mr. Blanchard and wife arrived here on Thursday. He spoke to very full houses both at the Congregational and Baptist churches. The pastors were with us and assisted in the services, and seldom has a speaker had more quiet, thoughtful and attentive audiences. The Lord by his Spirit was manifestly with us. The president, although very weak from sickness while at Saratoga, spoke with the vigor of youth, and with great help from God, and this morning is stronger than before.

We have appointments for three Sabbaths more at Windham, Grafton and Rockingham. We feel that God is wonderfully favoring us in the beginning of the work. I deeply feel the need of tracts to distribute here to follow up the evidently good work begun at Saxton's River. We can but hope and expect God's guidance and control in all this work. Pastors and people know next to nothing of its importance. I was opposed to Masonry during my long ministry in Keene, but the tremendous importance of opposition on the part of our churches is rising before me every day, as I have seen the cumulus clouds in the sky pile one upon another. This is because of facts and information I am receiving on this subject. I write hastily, as we are to start out this morning to still further our plans.

Fraternally yours, (Rev.) J. A. LEACH.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

CONNECTICUT CHURCHES AND CAMP MEETINGS.—OLD FRIENDS AND NEW.—BISHOP TAYLOR.—THE NEW ENGLAND AGENCY.

At Putnam, Connecticut, on Sabbath, the 29th inst., I found friends and some devoted disciples. At the Baptist church I took part and was much refreshed in the morning prayer meeting. A goodly number of the spiritually minded were present, and spoke freely of the things of the "kingdom." The able sermon by pastor Stubert was from the words of God to Moses, "Let me alone." Bro. Stubert is anti-lodge, and has only a small percentage of the secret element inside the sheepfold, yet he seems to have inherited or acquired a knowledge of the convenient use of the "But" familiar in early anti-slavery times.

Retiring from church I fell in with an intelligent gentleman who seemed desirous of further acquaintance, and he invited me to his home for dinner. I was gratified to learn that my host was Mr. Angel Wheaton, a half brother of Jesse and Warren, my neighbors and fellow townsmen in Illinois. I said, "Surely God moves in a mysterious way." Later I met the son of Bro. Wheaton, who was once a student at Wheaton College, where he became acquainted with the lady who is now his wife. He is a deacon in the Congregational church, and one of Putnam's successful business men. A service at five P M. in "Morse's Hall" was especially enjoyable. When I spoke of what God and his people were doing, and especially of the work in Washington, the responses were most cheering. The leader of the meeting, having been in that city, confirmed some things I said from his personal knowledge. I saw two wearing the Keystone, one professing holiness, and another recently converted; but found others who had not bowed the knee to Baal.

Rev. Mathewson, whom I have several times met in the West, was quite desirous that other ministers and churches in Putnam should give the anti-lodge cause a hearing, but when I attended his services at one P. M., carefully guarded his own flock and gave not the slightest public recognition to the representative of a cause in which most of his people and our Second Advent brethren generally take a deep interest.

The most interested and helpful friends at Putnam were Hon. George Buck and wife, who know no compromise with Satan on any moral question. The hospitality of their home was freely tendered at some personal inconvenience, as relatives were visiting them, and their care for my comfort was unstinted. Bro. Buck says we must buy and locate in Boston, and that he is ready to help in a square fight with rum and the lodge. He endorses the plan for Miss Flagg, and backs it up with a liberal support, and expresses the hope that New England will, at the very least, sustain her; and Bro. Conant of Willimantic, and Bros. Pratt and Cheever of Worcester respond Amen, with $25 each—a good start.

NOW, READER, WHAT WILL YOU DO?

Learning of a camp meeting at Douglas, Conn., I repaired thither and found a large collection of holiness people worshiping in "God's first temple." Seldom have I seen grounds better adapted to outdoor meetings, or a more earnest company of worshipers. Bro. Moses Morse is in charge of the business management and Rev. McDonald of the religious services. Soon after reaching the stand there was a recess for dinner. As the Spirit of the Lord was there I took the liberty of making a few remarks to the company waiting for admission to the dining-hall. The few words were followed by personal greetings, and I soon found myself in close controversy with a gentleman from Kean, N. H., who "enjoyed Masonry and the blessing of holiness." Under such circumstances I felt justified in pressing the truth very closely; and although Bro. Lemley, formerly of Rockford, thought I was rather severe, my opponent was not offended, and I trust may be helped to see the religious character of the system more clearly. He said while he would not reveal any secrets of the lodge, he had not attended a meeting since he received the "second blessing," and would advise everybody to keep away from them.

The services began at the stand, and when I reached it I found a song and testimony meeting in progress. I was impressed to repeat the words of our Lord, "Whoso confesseth me before men," etc. Many greeted me most cordially, and among them my brother from Kean, who expressed the hope that no unkind feeling would exist between us. I assured him that there certainly did not on my part. Bro. Morse had no objection to my distributing tracts, but thought I had better first see Bro. McDonald. Bishop Taylor preached a most powerful sermon, in which he said, "The devil makes religions for those who turn away from God. He's always on hand—does his work immediately; don't let the backslider sleep over night without a religion. His religions are gross and sensual in heathen lands, but in Christian countries he makes them just as near like God's religion as he can; but they are the devil's damnation agencies all the same."

I was obliged to leave for the train just as the Bishop finished, and so had no opportunity for a personal interview either with him or Bro. McDonald.

From Worcester I came to Wellesly this morning, and am waiting under the apple-tree in Bro. Flagg's yard for the return of him and his daughter, who have driven over to a neighboring town. Bro. Conant has three appointments for me at Willimantic next Sabbath, which I expect to fill on my return trip to Washington. J. P. STODDARD.

BREAKING NEW GROUND IN NORTHERN OHIO.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, August 1, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After a four weeks' trip I reached home last evening. Bowling Green, Wood county, was the first place at which I stopped after my last report. By inquiry I learned that Wm. Minton, a gentleman whom I knew to be interested in our work there, lived some three miles from town. The day was very warm, the road dusty, the distance proved to be four miles, but I was amply rewarded for my walk in the cordial reception of this Puritanic family, whom I found were related to our Moses Pettengill of precious memory. After consultation it was not thought an opportune time for lectures. Bro. M's horse was at my service; and accompanied by Miss Minton as guide, I secured ten subscriptions to our paper in one day. Part of these were United Brethren at Portage, a small town near by. Bro. N. Foltz, one of the Portage subscribers, is to conduct a holiness camp meeting at that place from Aug. 9 to 20. He gave me a cordial invitation to attend and address the meeting, assuring me entertainment and a good opportunity to present our cause. I have not yet decided whether I can accept or not.

Sabbath before last I spoke twice in the United Presbyterian church at Scotch Ridge. There was a large attendance in the morning, but a driving rain kept many away in the evening. It was voted that I speak again on Monday evening. At this meeting a fair collection was taken for the cause. So far as I learned the secrecy question had never been discussed here. Friends seemed quite reticent at first, but becoming interested a goodly number subscribed for the Cynosure. The pastor, Rev. Caldwell, and wife showed me much kindness.

En route from here to New Haven I stopped at several points. No visit was more pleasant than that with Mrs. Abiah Coe, of Tiffin. Mrs. Coe is, I believe, in her 86th year, well preserved, and of a firm, resolute nature. She formerly belonged to the M. E. church, but left when they refused to allow the secrecy question discussed. She gave a contribution of five dollars to our cause, as she had done before. Daniel Callon, of Watson, has been a reader of our paper for years. He will help some in the State work. I was kindly entertained at his home.

Missing a train I was compelled to spend a night at Bascom. Rev. A. H. Zechiel, pastor of the Reformed church of the place, will arrange meetings when I can attend them. I was entertained here by a Catholic, and learned much about his religion. His wife, an accomplished lady, had been educated in a convent, but preferring matrimonial life had made her escape.

On arrival at Bro. W. G. Head's farm and lake near New Haven, I found that a farmers' picnic had been advertised for Saturday. I arrived Thursday. No provision had been made for speaking. Bro. H. gladly accepted my proposition to remain and speak. Notice was given through the local paper and post-office. A good number gathered at the time appointed, but they came evidently more to have a good time than to listen to a discussion of the secrecy question. Boating, base ball, etc., were as popular as the lecture; however, by exerting my lung power so as to be heard above the rattle and racket of the pleasure seekers, I succeeded in getting a number to listen to me both morning and evening, and I am confident good was accomplished. Some expressed approbation, others indignation, and asked foolish questions as secretists usually do when driven to the wall.

On my way home I stopped long enough in Mansfield and Utica to shake hands with some of the friends and look after matters pertaining to N. C. A. and our work. I observed a bill posted in a conspicuous place at Newark which bore the following:

"Take the great American Scab route!—the C. B. & Q. Prepare to meet thy God! Close connections with the hereafter! Through tickets to points on the Styx. N B. Death claims promptly settled. Paul Morton, G. P. A. M. L, General Prevaricator and Monumental Liar. The strike is not off." Etc., etc.

I am not surprised at this. It is the natural way this cowardly, underhanded thing of darkness works. It is not the bold enemy so much to be feared as the snake in the grass, the coward that stabs in the back. We may well inquire, how soon will the American people see this, and act accordingly? Much depends on our individual efforts. Are we all doing what we can is a practical question. I have been very glad to learn of the zeal of students who have gone out to work for the Cynosure, and the success which has naturally attended their efforts, and I am sure friends will help them wherever they can. Yours for Christ and reform,

W. B. STODDARD.

CENTRAL LOUISIANA.

A NEW COUNTRY VISITED—THE FARMERS' ALLIANCE—THE COLOR LINE GIVING WAY.

WALNUT HILL, La., July 23, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Mr. Silas Harden very kindly took me on horseback Saturday morning, and after riding twenty-five miles we reached this place. There is nothing attractive here, saving the abundance of fine pine timber, which abounds from about four miles from Boyce fifty or sixty miles across the country. The people in these pine regions are very poor, but very kind. I was very cordially received and entertained by Bro. Balaam Jones, deacon of the St. Matthew Baptist church. Rev. W. L. Braisco, the pastor, was glad to meet me, and invited me to attend his church business meeting Saturday evening, and preach for his people on Sabbath. I met Rev. E. L. Mayo, a young white local Baptist preacher. He was glad to see me and spoke freely of a more closer union with the white and black churches. I attended services on Sabbath at 10 A. M. and listened to a short sermon by Rev. T. F. Crawford, pastor of the Walnut Hill Baptist church, after which I preached. The congregation was well mixed with both races. The greatest harmony seems to exist here between the two races, so long as the Negro stands neutral in politics. I am glad to see unity in the white and colored churches in these parts. Every minister I have seen in these parts is a Freemason, except Revs. Braisco and Mayo. A man cannot speak too bitterly against lodgery in these parts. The old saying is, if you don't like the lodge, don't say anything against it. The only lodge among the colored people here is the Colored Farmers' Alliance. But I am afraid this alliance will cause them to shed tears. Bro. Braisco is the chief of the colored lodge, but he says if he is reasonably convinced of its evil he will renounce it. The colored men think as long as the whites belong to the Alliance it is all right.

I have distributed very many tracts and Cynosures and have sent tracts into nearly every parish in Louisiana, and sent in for free Cynosures to be sent to 110 ministers and deacons. I trust our friends will keep this good work moving along.

A very prominent white minister told me that twenty-five miles below here the poor colored people are living like slaves—no education, no churches and almost no civilization. He says, "When a white missionary goes there the white men will get a jug of whisky and go where the preacher is trying to preach the Word, and there they distribute the fire water freely.

I preached last Thursday night at Williamson M. E. church, near Boyce.

WILLIAMSON'S CREEK, La., July 24, 1888.—I returned from Walnut Hill on Monday. The whole country between Boyce and Walnut Hill is hilly with a few exceptions, and very heavily timbered with short leaf pine. Jay Gould, the railroad monopolist, is buying in great quantities of this land. The pine land sells from $2 to $3 per acre while the bottom land ranges from $3 to $5. There is very little education in these parts. I called on Mr. James Weeks (white), deacon of the Hemphill Baptist church, and he very kindly received me and invited me to preach at Hemphill church (white) on Tuesday night. Mr. Weeks belongs to no secret lodge whatever, and will be glad to get the Cynosure. I called on Mr. J. Labourne, and he kindly received and invited me to take dinner with him Tuesday. Here I met brethren Green and James Richey, both Primitive Baptists. They are anti-secretists and said God requires a complete separation. I next called on Mr. J. L. Hoyt by invitation and was kindly received. Mr. Hoyt and I were playmates in boyhood. I learned from him that himself, Mr. Labourne and brethren J. and G. Richey and J. Weeks are the only white men in these parts who are clear of the lodge cable-tow. I have met many of my relatives and old playmates, and I am sure it was the Lord who sent me back here after an absence of seventeen years. Instead of this being the bull-dozers' habitation now, it seems to have changed to the paradise of Louisiana.

The Farmers' Alliance is the principal lodge in these parts with both white and colored members. The Alliance claims to be to make better farmers and better husbands and wives, and buy and sell to members of the Alliance goods at cost prices. It will be well to publish their ritual. One of their leading officers told me he wished the N. C. A. would publish their secret work, for he believes it to be a fraud. Mr. J. Labourne told me that he joined the Masons years ago, but he left them thirty years ago, and now he deplores the existence of any secret lodge.

RAPIDS BAYOU, July 27.—I preached Tuesday night at Hemphill Baptist church (white), to a large and attentive audience. Although the lodge was well represented, and my sermon was anti-secret, yet they received it very respectfully, much better than my colored secret brethren. I distributed tracts after the services, and they were eagerly received. I was very kindly received by my Anglo-Saxon brethren. There was a goodly number of colored people present, most of them to see if I would speak against lodgery in a white church. Praise the Lord! God is no respecter of persons, and why should we have respect of persons in preaching the Gospel. The color line is very well drawn on Bayou Rapids. I preached Wednesday night at St. Paul M. E. church, Rev. A. B. Venabel, pastor, to a well-packed house of eager hearers. The Seven Stars of Consolidation and the Farmers' Alliance are the principal lodges among the colored people here.

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

A WEEK OF GOOD CHEER.

RED OAK, Iowa, July 28, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After completing my work at Atlantic I went to Elliott, and out seven miles into the country, and stopped for the night with Mr. D. C. Woods, an elder of the United Presbyterian church. The next day being the Sabbath, I went with him to Center Ridge U. P. church, were I met Rev. Mr. Hood, the pastor, who cordially invited me to preach, which I did. In the afternoon I went with him ten miles to Indian Creek church, where, by invitation, I preached again, and remained to a very interesting Sabbath-school; after which I went home with Bro. Rankin, who lives six miles from the church.

On Monday I resumed my work of personal visitation, and canvassed for subscriptions to the Iowa work, and for the Cynosure. Bro. Rankin headed the list. The next brother I called on is a Baptist. He had read Elder Stearns' book on Masonry, and heartily appreciates the work of the N. C. A., and its auxiliaries. He also gave ready assistance. I then called on two United Presbyterians, and two more Baptist brethren, all of whom gave aid. I then visited three United Brethren families, each of whom were willing to help. I then set out to return to Center Ridge. On the way I called upon another Baptist family who are for Christ against the lodge, and who showed a readiness to take stock in the Iowa reform work.

On arriving at Center Ridge I began a canvass there, and met with a favorable response. Mr. Woods headed the list and others followed his example, so that when I returned to Elliott on Friday I found that I had secured since the Sabbath fourteen new subscriptions to the Cynosure, all for a full year. To-day, Saturday, I am resting at the home of Rev. Mr. Wiley, the pastor of the U. P. church at Red Oak, Montgomery county. He is out of health, and I am to preach for him Sabbath morning here at Red Oak, and in the afternoon at Pleasant Lawn, eight miles in the country.

I was pleased to find such deep-seated convictions against the lodge system in the minds of the Baptists who are familiar with the writings of Elder Stearns, one of the Baptist ministers who seceded from Masonry and wrote against it after the abduction of Captain Wm. Morgan. I was also gratified to find that the old laymen of the U. B. church in Mills country, like those I met in Dallas county, are standing firmly with Christ against the conspiracy of Satan to popularize pagan idolatry and deistical infidelity through ancient craft Masonry and its kindred orders.

Christ has so many tens of thousands "who have not bowed the knee to Baal" that we may expect a mighty uprising against the false worships of the lodge, as the result of the Divine blessing upon the truth, that in so many ways is being disseminated to expose the cowardly attempt of Satan to supplant Christ, by introducing a universal system of deistical worship, through the agency of the secret lodge system.

Let fervent, effectual prayer be continually offered, and personal effort put forth, and Christ will give the victory. C. F. Hawley.

THE WASHINGTON WORK AND WORKERS.

Washington, D. C., July 28, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—Through your columns I would like to acknowledge the receipt of two more packages of papers, senders unknown, a very large and fine assortment of cards from Carter & Co., of Boston, and two dollars in money from Rev. J. White, of Worcester, Mass. I feel quite encouraged.

As I was calling on some of the mothers of my children this week I was pleased to learn how much interest they took in the work of the school and how eagerly they accepted the reading matter which I gave them. One mother said, "You can hardly realize how proud the children are of the cards and Sabbath-school papers you give them." Then she spoke of one little girl who was some distance away, but came down every Sabbath to come to the Sabbath-school because she liked it so well.

I have been kept so very busy with the school and matters pertaining to the N. C. A., during Mr. Stoddard's absence, that house to house visitation had to be almost entirely given up.

Our meeting on Tuesday nights is well sustained, also the Sabbath afternoon service. It has fallen to my lot to lead the Wednesday noon meeting at Central Union Mission the past two weeks, and some of the workers inquired after our meetings and expressed much interest, saying they should attend as often as possible.

I would just say to friends sending packages for the use of the school to prepay express if possible as the funds are low and hard to raise.

Yours in the work, Anna E. Stoddard.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN OLD VETERANS' MEETING.

Detroit, Mich., July 30, 1888.

I had a very interesting visit last week with Capt. John Brown, Jr., son of the noble old martyr whose name he bears. I found him well and comfortably situated with his little family on a seven-acre fruit farm at Put-in-Bay, on the Ohio side of Lake Erie. His place includes the "Wonderful Cave," and its level and rich soil is covered with choice fruits, such as grapes, peaches, pears, etc. While the grape-growers on the islands all around him convert this rich fruit into the poison that "stingeth like an adder," not a pound of John Brown's fruit is allowed to be perverted into intoxicating drinks.

Mr. Brown is a well-built and venerable gentleman, in many things reminding one of his father. When I told him that the palm that was pressing his had many a time pressed that of the older John Brown, whose "soul was still marching on," the moisture in his kindly eyes told the story of the emotions that were stirred within. When I told him I had what I esteemed the great honor of presiding at the last public meeting the old hero ever addressed, at our court house in the city of Rochester, N. Y., he going direct from the home of Frederick Douglas (then residing in that city) to Chambersburg, Pa., on his way to Harper's Ferry, he became the more interested and inquired, "Who are you?"

When the name of the "Old Liberty Singer" was mentioned he exclaimed, "Oh, is it possible! And you are alive yet. I heard you forty years ago in the old Bay State. Can you sing yet?"

There were present several fine-looking ladies from Massachusetts, New York and Chicago, who had heard the old singer in Abolition conventions in the East many years ago, and there being a fine piano in the room we had to have a social musicale, ending up with a song that was a favorite of old John Brown's—

> "Pride of New England! Soul of our Fathers!
> Shrink we all craven-like when the storm gathers?
> What though the tempest be over us lowering?
> Where's the New Englander shamefully cowering?
> Graves green and holy around us are lying!
> Free were the sleepers all living and dying."

The songs ended, the interesting interview closed, the hearty hand-shakes given, and the good-byes said, the kind-hearted captain accompanied me to the gate, and with an earnest invitation to "Come again," the scene closed, but not its pleasant memory. Yours, Geo. W. Clark.

FROM A MOBILE PASTOR.

Mobile, Ala., July 26, 1888.

Editor Cynosure:—The man or woman that can, as I do, look back to 1827, sixty-one years ago, cannot fail to see, yea more, to feel sadly the present decline of spiritual life among church people. It is truly alarming. Fifty years ago Masonry did not have the hold on the people as now; and then there was spiritual life in the church, a manifest power attended the Word preached, resulting in the conviction and conversion of sinners. The cry for mercy, with bitter tears, was frequent among young and middle aged.

I have tried to believe that secret societies had nothing to do with the spiritual life of the ministry, but I am forced to admit that no man can serve two masters, and while a Mason may be, if he lives by his obligations, a gentleman, he lays no claims to Christianity, and it must be mammon. It is said, "If a man hath not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his"—words full of meaning. Let every minister, for they lead the people, ask themselves when in the lodge, am I in the spiritual current of life that I entered when I took a solemn pledge, taking God to be my helper, when I was ordained to preach; for I then said I was called by the Holy Ghost, and set apart for his use, to be guided by his leading. But here nothing is said of Jesus, the sole foundation for whom I stand as a preacher! Is it any wonder that the church is spiritually dead and powerless to check the wave of wickedness? Late observations have satisfied me that secret orders are great evils. Preachers should look well into it. The worst of all is what is known as the juvenile department. These meet on Sundays, twice a month, away from home and parents, in the hands often of irreligious men and women, and not always strictly moral. Their secrets are unknown to parents. Many of the larger juveniles of both sexes are really bad and immoral, many of them are full-grown in crime, and in some few cases have been arrested. The popularity of societies makes them a power that can only be conquered by the Head of the church, and if Christians just determine it, the evil influence will die, and ultimately the fountains will cease to flow, and churches will again be alive. Sinners will be saved by a living Gospel, aided by the Holy Spirit, from the mouths of consecrated men. Do you ask how? I answer by earnest importuning prayer of faith. The pen can arouse, but God can and will take hold of the case; and it may be he is now only waiting for us to ask him to defend his church. I. M. Williams.

Pastor Reformed E. Church.

A WORD ABOUT BROOKS.

Lee Center, Ill.

Dear Cynosure:—I don't see how I can vote the Prohibition ticket with an ex-rebel on the second place.

Mr. Brooks, you say, is a demitted Mason, and takes no stock in the fraternity; but has no prejudice against secret societies, etc. He probably thinks as Stephen A. Douglas did in relation to slavery, "Didn't care whether it was voted up or voted down."

Again, Mr. Brooks is reported as saying that he thanked God that he never was a Republican. Some of us, probably, thank God that we were once Republicans.

Besides, Mr. Brooks doesn't train in my company, and hence he is not one of us. J. P. Richards.

Note.—We regret Bro. Richard's decision. If he refuses to vote for or act with ex-rebels he will have to join Belva Lockwood's party, and perhaps would find the objection even in that select circle. Mr. Brooks seems sincerely to have repented of his sympathy with rebellion and slavery; and he never took up arms against his country. As for the statement quoted above concerning the Republican party, it is yet to be proved that Mr. Brooks ever said it. A reporter's statement has been taken up and howled abroad by the party press. We regard Mr. Brooks as a man of too much sense to have made it in the terms and sense attributed. He might have said he was glad not to be at present in the Republican party. There is nothing objectionable in that. But it might easily have been twisted into a different and offensive remark. The report first sent out was that Brooks served in the Confederate army, which was untrue. There will doubtless be other untrue stories about him as well as other candidates. It is wise not to give too hasty credit to the reports of political enemies.

As we have said before, we would be glad if Mr. Brooks were intelligently opposed to secret societies. But he cannot be properly compared with Douglas until he has made the lodge a matter of study and debate, as Douglas did slavery. If he is now not a member of any secret society, as he writes, he has certainly given them up for some good reason, and Anti-masons, so far as we are at present advised, can vote for him. K.

PITH AND POINT.

PUT HIS NAME DOWN IN THE LEAGUE.

I see that you are anxious to hear from the "Pioneers." The principles of the National Christian Association I have vigorously advocated for many years. In times of slavery I was an Abolitionist, and was a faithful reader of the old American Baptist, edited by Rev. Nathan Brown, until it left the Free Mission society and went to the lodge I stopped the paper at once, and searched diligently among religious periodicals for the same kind of food—another paper advocating the same principles, but never found it until a United Brethren minister gave me a copy of yours. Since that time I have been a faithful contributor, an anxious reader, as well as circulating agent. No copies have gone into the waste basket I am glad to hear of the formation of the American Anti-Secret League, and want my name recorded there. I am an old veteran of the Cross since 1842, and have had a faithful companion of the same principles, but now, in my eightieth year, am left alone.—Daniel Hyde, Frisco, Kans.

PROHIBITION IN LYONS, IOWA.

Other parts of Iowa are rising above the rum traffic, but the city of Lyons permits the filth and wickedness of the State to roll into its lap. Over sixty saloons are now running here. This is evidence that Mother Iowa is cleaning house, and that she has most of her dirt near the door. Another sweep with the law will, I hope, about finish the work.—I. R. B. Arnold.

HOW THE SOUTHERN FUND HELPS.

Please accept my thanks for sending me your very valuable paper. I would not allow it to come as it does but for two reasons: first, I cannot pay for it; secondly, I do not know how to be deprived of its reading.—H. L. F., Lafayette, La.

FROM AN OLD VOTER.

I have voted at fifty-eight general elections, and for thirteen different Presidents of the United States of America, and if the Lord lets me live until next November I vote for Clinton B. Fisk and John A. Brooks.—L. P. Rowland, Patterson, Mo.

—The Republican platform expresses cordial sympathy "with all wise and well directed efforts for the promotion of temperance." The National Liquor Dealer's Association "Resolved, That we most earnestly favor temperance." We favor Prohibition.

—Dr. Joseph Parker, of City Temple, London, has invited the Salvation Army to occupy his church for a week or two, "tambourines and all."

LITERATURE.

The Century company lately suffered from a heavy fire in their building, nevertheless the August number, which, according to custom, is the midsummer holiday number, is on time and full of good things. The frontispiece is a portrait of George Kennan in his study, drawn by Henry Sandham, and shows the celebrated traveler at work on his Siberian papers. The article giving a sketch of his life is by Miss Anna Laurens Dawes, daughter of the Massachusetts Senator. Kennan's own article in this number describes his "Meeting with the Political Exiles." The opening illustrated article describes "A Home of the Silent Brotherhood," namely, the Abbey of La Trappe in Kentucky. The illustrations seem to be of scenes in the Old World rather than in the new, and it will not surprise those who read Mr. James Lane Allen's sympathetic description of the Abbey to learn that all its inmates are of foreign birth. Mrs. Van Rensselaer and Mr. Pennell with pen and pencil describe another of England's great churches, Lincoln Cathedral. The Siberian papers describe Mr. Kennan's meeting with the Siberian exiles, and is beautifully illustrated with the Altai mountain scenery. Mr. George W. Cable describes the objects and methods of the "Home Culture Clubs," originated by Mr. Cable himself. The principal essay of the number is Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott's discussion of "The Pulpit for To day." This article, it is interesting to note, was written before there was any idea that Dr. Abbott would succeed Mr. Beecher in the pulpit of Plymouth church; indeed, sometime before the death of Mr. Beecher. The Lincoln History deals this month with Tennessee and Kentucky, and gives a new and clearer idea of Lincoln's relations to the early military movements in the West. The chapter headings are "Halleck," "The Tennessee Line," "Lincoln Directs Co-operation," "Grant and Thomas in Kentucky," and "Fort Donelson" On page 517 a very interesting letter from President Lincoln to Governor Morton of Indiana is published for the first time.

The August St. Nicholas begins with "The Story of the Sea Serpent," which gives young readers some idea of what navigators report of their collisions with the fabulous monster. The illustrations add something to the mystery and terror of the subject. In "Little Moccasin's Ride on the Thunder-Horse," Colonel Guido Ilges tells an exciting story of a little Indian boy. In "Tom, Dick, and Harry on the Coast of Maine," Mr. D. C. Beard brings back some former favorites, recounting with pen and pencil their vacation exploits. "Ramabai," by Mary L. B. Branch, is a short account of a noble Hindu woman who is trying to educate the girls of India. Charles Henry Webb tells us all about "Mr. Crowley," the four-handed guest of the Central Park Museum, and William H. Rideing has an interesting paper concerning "Children and Authors." John Burroughs has an article on "Observing Little Things," and warns us of the danger in arriving at hasty conclusions.

OBITUARY.

Departed this life at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. T. J. Whitman, HANNAH, wife of Daniel Hyde, aged seventy-seven years, eight months and twelve days.

Mrs. Hyde was born in New York, and at the age of four years, with her parents, moved to Huron county, Ohio. At the age of sixteen she gave her heart to God and united with the regular Baptist church. She removed to Portage county, and in 1835 was married to Daniel Hyde, who in 1843 gave himself also to Christ, and since that time both have walked hand in hand together in the straight and narrow way which leadeth unto everlasting life. She leaves her aged and sorrowing husband and six children who mourn her loss.

"Go to thy rest, and while
Thy absence we deplore,
One thought our sorrow shall beguile,
For soon, with a celestial smile,
We'll meet to part no more."

LODGE NOTES.

Rob. Morris, the great representative Masonic champion, died Tuesday at Lagrange, Ky., of paralysis.

The Supreme Court in New York, last week, gave permission to the First Congregation of the Religion of Humanity to mortgage its property for $35,000.

The corner-stone of the colored Baptist seminary, to cost $50,000, was laid at Lynchburg, Va, Monday, by colored Masons, in the presence of 5,800 persons.

The session of the Grand Lodge, Knights of Pythias, State of New York, met in Poughkeepsie. There are about 300 lodges in the State, with a membership of 16,000. Wednesday there was a competitive drill, the Grand Lodge having appropriated $400 for prizes.

St. Mark's Episcopal church in Allegheny, Pa., is building a gymnasium, and employed a Masonic lodge to lay the corner-stone lately. The local account says the "officers presented a most solemn sight as they bore with them the golden implements of the Grand Lodge used on such occasions." It must surely have been solemn—disgustingly so.

An Exchange Company's telegram from Ottawa says that strong opposition is being organized to the proposal to settle with the Jesuits for the property taken by the Imperial Government under the Papal suppression of the Order. They claim $2,000,000 nominally. The Quebec Premier, after a visit to Rome, has agreed to pay $400,000. The Jesuits are now incorporated in the province of Quebec.

Rome never changes—for the better. The Standard of the Cross supplies this illustration of that truth: "If we change Rome does not, and a recent Catechism published in Mexico declares a boycott upon all Protestants. It forbids the faithful to lend houses for service, to erect or repair their churches, or sell furniture for them, to attend the services on pain of ex-communication. Protestantism must be making progress to stir up so much wrath in Mexico. The Catechism is only a straw, but it shows the direction of the wind."—Ex.

The Odd fellows Grand Lodge at Cincinnati conferred degrees. A procession, in which nearly thirty Cantons took part, went through the principal streets. The men and officers were resplendent in uniform. Besides the Chevaliers, there were in the procession a large number of lodges distinguished simply by the ordinary regalia. On Wednesday night the grand decoration of Chevaliers was conferred on the campus where the "Fall of Babylon" is being represented. An apropos meeting—the fall of Babylon and grand Odd-fellow decoration.

A monument has recently been dedicated at Townsend, Mass., to Henry Price, the founder of Masonry in the United States. For more than a century the place of his burial was marked by a small slate stone, which has almost crumbled to pieces. The inscription reads: "Henry Price, Founder of Duly Constituted Masonry in America." On the back is another inscription taken from the stone which has been so long over the original grave: "Born in London about 1697; removed to Boston about 1723; appointed Provincial Grand Master of New England in 1733, and in the same year a cornet in the Governor's Guards with the rank of major; removed to Townsend about 1763, and died there May 20, 1780. His life was consistent with his duty as a Mason and a man."

$500, OR A CURE.

For many years the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, who are thoroughly responsible financially, as any one can easily ascertain by inquiry, have offered, through nearly every newspaper in the land, a standing reward of $500 for a case of chronic nasal catarrh, no matter how bad, or of how long standing, which they cannot cure. The Remedy is mild, soothing, cleansing, antiseptic, and healing. Sold by all druggists, at 50 cents.

Are you busy? Are you making money? If so, stick to it, you are fortunate. If you are not, then our advice is that you write at once to B. F. Johnson & Co., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va. They can show you how to enter quickly upon a profitable work.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. JOHN TODD, Pittsfield, Mass.:—Unhesitatingly I give my decided disapprobation of what I deem secret societies in college and elsewhere. I have never known any good results from them which could not have been attained in some other more appropriate way, and I have known great evils resulting from them.

HOWARD CROSBY, Chancellor University of New York, 1870:—We have no hesitation in writing secret societies among the quackeries of the earth.

Idem, 1886:—The secret lodge system belongs to despotisms and not to democracies. Whatever in it is not babyish is dangerous.

REV. MATTHEW L. R. PERRINE, D.D., Auburn Theological Seminary, REV. JOEL PARKER and REV. CHAUNCEY EDDY:—Having formerly associated with Freemasons, we deem it our duty, publicly to declare that the system of Freemasonry is in our judgment, of a tendency on the whole pernicious to the moral habits, and dangerous to the civil and religious institutions of our country.

REV. LEVI CHASE, Fall River, Mass.:—The question has been asked by Masons, who wish to asperse the characters of those who have renounced Masonry, "Why did not they renounce it before?" For one, I will give them the reason why I did not. The Masonic oaths locked my tongue in silence—death, in all its horrid shapes and frightful forms, stared me in the face—I considered the oaths binding.

REV. C. D. BURLINGHAM, in history of the Genesee M. E. Conference, 1860:—This new element of discord (Odd fellowship) began to introduce itself in our church, professedly as a mutual insurance company against temporal want, and a newly discovered and remarkably successful Gospel appliance for bringing the world, reformed and saved into the church. But our people very naturally looked upon it with suspicion, dreading its power as a secret agency acting through affiliated societies, and doubting its utility as a financial scheme. They feared it would drag the church, debased and corrupted, into the world.

REV. JOEL MANN, a renouncing Mason:—Although portions of the Gospel are interwoven with its forms, I conceive that Masonry presents false grounds of hope; leads men to depend on their own defective righteousness;—to expect the favor of God without the interposition of a Redeemer, and even without repentance; and thus has a most injurious influence on their eternal interests. Under the most favorable circumstances, which in any place, have attended Masonry, it has occasioned a great waste of time and money, which might and ought to have been employed for better purposes. And furthermore, it interferes materially with domestic religious duties.

REV. AARON LELAND, formerly Lieut.-Governor of Vermont and Deputy Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge (to a Baptist association):—He stated that the first objection which presented itself to his mind was the practice of praying for the soul of a brother Mason after he had been dead two, three, and sometimes four days—that he persisted in the practice for a short season to the injury of his conscience—that it was a Romish custom, and he never would preach at the burial of a Mason when Masonic forms and customs were attended to—that he never would preach to a lodge of Masons as such, and that he was ashamed that he had ever participated in the principles and practices of the institution.

ELDER DAVID BERNARD:—I solemnly renounce all fealty to Masonry, and do most earnestly beseech my brethren in Christ Jesus, of every name, to come out and bear unequivocal testimony against it. Think, O think, dear Christians, that hundreds and thousands of precious and immortal souls will be lost forever, unless they return and repent, but that the name of the precious Jesus is rejected, your Saviour, your precious and adorable Saviour taken away—the cause of your bleeding Redeemer injured—the hands of the wicked strengthened, and the Almighty God dishonored! And O, let me entreat you in the mercy and bowels of Jesus Christ, to reflect that you have to answer for the blood of those who shall find also, when it shall be forever too late, that Masonry is not a Saviour!

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE VERMONT MISSION.

Saxton's River, Vt., July 28, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—I had a brief set-back at Saratoga by indiscreet excessive use of Hathorn water. But we are here, and well, and I want to give our readers the facts and thoughts which thrill my own soul. So far our Vermont mission seems visibly guided by God. But whenever a movement was started in the New Testament for Christ against the world's religions, as soon as the people began to embrace it, "the rulers of the darkness of this world" were always astir, and showed in unlooked-for ways their terrible power. So it may be here in Vermont. But if there is a people on earth prepared to receive the Gospel of salvation from the lodge rule which has silenced pulpit and press throughout the United States, and is now seizing the railroads by the throat, that people is here amid these hills. The people of Vermont are cool-headed as the mountains, and clear-minded as their springs. Our meetings open to-morrow.

July 30, 1888.—I yesterday (Sabbath) preached morning and night in the Congregational and Baptist churches of this beautiful village, assisted by the pastors. Rev. Mr. Leach, who has with rare energy and address made the arrangements here, and others to follow, will officially report our progress and work.

THE GRAND DIVISION OF EASTERN NEW YORK OF THE SONS OF TEMPERANCE.

This small body with a great name met last week at Saratoga. The delegates, "about" sixty in all, thronged our tables at Elmwood Hall. I met two bright, ministerial-looking young delegates in the corridor, who saluted and said they had seen and heard me. They spoke of a "very nice meeting" from which they had just come.

"What is your meeting?" said I. "Can I attend it?"

They looked demure and apologetic, and replied there would be an open meeting at such a time and place. They had met here to promote temperance, as "The Grand Division for Eastern New York;" and had been meeting in secret! I then asked, "Will you go for Fisk and Brooks?" This embarrassed these secret apostles of Prohibition and temperance still worse. They stammered, and finally got out, "N-n-not fully!" What that meant I do not exactly know. The Daily Saratogian next morning noticed the meetings at large. They met for secret business all day in the Odd-fellows' Hall, and held an open meeting in the town hall at night. J. N. Stearns (Royal Arch Mason), and Eugene Clapp, of Boston, made speeches, and "were applauded." But what they said, the Saratogian does not tell us; or whether they were for Harrison, Cleveland or Fisk.

If the Cynosure has any readers left who have any drawing to the secret temperance lodges, we respectfully submit to them—and we especially submit to Miss Frances E. Willard—that for sixty persons, calling themselves "Sons of Temperance," to meet in Odd fellows' Hall, Saratoga, with a sprinkling of women among them, hold secret meetings, led by such men as Stearns, of New York, who are sworn to conceal all crimes, "murder and treason not excepted," and then disperse, taking no ground for the Prohibition candidates, is, in itself, and under every possible view of it, an immoral and most contemptible transaction. And their sly, strange, underhand movement should be reprobated, and their persons shunned.

CHIEF JUSTICE JOHN MARSHALL.

The story of Judge Marshall's reply to a company of young skeptics, into whose company he was thrown on one of his solitary journeys, has embalmed his name in the memory of thousands of American youth. Equally will they remember the celebrated English Judge Mansfield, the hero of the familiar reading lesson, who exhibited his love of justice in protecting the cause of the poor in the disguise of a miller. The name of John Marshall will ever be placed among the very few great expounders of civil and constitutional law. In America he is rightly called "the great Chief Justice." He was born in Farquier county, Virginia, in 1755. His father was a poor planter, but a man of great intelligence, who for his boys supplemented the lack of instruction in the schools by such wise and careful discipline that his children manifested toward him to the close of his life the greatest admiration and respect. Young Marshall had been studying law two years, when about the age of twenty he joined a volunteer company and began to drill for the impending struggle for independence. In the war which followed he served with distinction as an officer in the battles of Germantown, Brandywine, Monmouth and Stony Point. He left the army with the rank of captain, but in the writings of his contemporaries of the early part of the century he is spoken of as "General Marshall," and as such received his appointment as Chief Justice by President John Adams.

In the legal profession he rose rapidly, and despite his awkward, tall, ill-dressed figure among the fine gentlemen of the Virginia towns, his conspicuous talents and force of intellect gained him a place in the very front rank. In 1782 he was sent to the Virginia legislature by voters who esteemed him personally above any political differences. He was a strong Federalist, a party always unpopular in Virginia, yet he was several times elected to office by the great majority, who opposed his political principles. He was a warm friend of Alexander Hamilton, and in Virginia labored for the adoption of the new Federal Constitution as Hamilton did in New York. In this effort he was opposed by the eloquent Patrick Henry, by Madison, Jefferson and other distinguished Virginians. The discussion was prolonged to nearly a month, but Virginia endorsed the new Constitution at last. In 1795 he was offered the place of Attorney General in Washington's cabinet, but declined. Two years later he accepted an appointment by President John Adams as Envoy to France with Gerry and Pinckney. Their insolent reception by Talleyrand and the Directory of the bloody republic, and the reply of Marshall, are a matter of history which greatly honored the American name. That Marshall fully enjoyed the confidence of Washington is proved by the offer of a Cabinet position and also of an important foreign mission. No less was he held in esteem by John Adams, whose offer of a seat in the Supreme Court he declined in 1798. Soon after he yielded to the earnest personal solicitation of Washington to again enter public life as a candidate for Congress. Again the votes of political opponents, yet personal friends, secured his election; and it is affecting to note that his first duty as representative was to announce in the House the death of "the hero, the patriot, and the sage of America." His eulogy on Washington attracted universal attention. He was one of the foremost of the Federalist party, and on all questions involving international and constitutional law he soon became a leading authority.

Again President Adams showed his high appreciation of Marshall's integrity and conspicuous abilities by appointing him Secretary of State; and of him and Samuel Dexter, the great Boston lawyer and Anti-mason, who was first Secretary of War and then of the Treasury, Adams wrote, "I consider General Marshall and Mr. Dexter as more than secretaries—as state conservators, the value of whose services ought to be estimated not only by the good they do, but by the mischief they have prevented." But President Adams believed that Marshall's talents were fitted for a higher station. He realized the strain which might come upon the new government if the State rights party came into power. The time was at hand, for in a few weeks Jefferson took the oath as President. If an all-wise and overruling Providence provided a Luther to lead the Protestant Reformation; a Washington to lead the feeble American colonies into the establishment of the first of the nations; a Lincoln to preserve that nation when assailed by internal foes—surely Marshall was also appointed by God for his great work. His appointment marks an epoch in American history. Says a writer in the North American Review in 1836, just after the death of the great Chief Justice, of this critical period:

> "Duties of the most delicate and embarrassing nature devolved upon the Supreme Court under the Constitution. It was to decide not disputes about land or money, but to establish great principles of government, and to do this under such circumstances as made its decisions the most momentous and important that ever came before a human tribunal. It was necessary to check the rashness of inferior courts, to cross the decision of legislatures, and to maintain an even-handed justice between States. The mere force of authority could not have established its decrees if they had not been confirmed by the irresistible championship of truth, and sustained by arguments that gained the assent of even prejudiced minds."

The result justified the expectations of all who knew John Marshall. Years afterward old John Adams is quoted as saying "that his gift of John Marshall to the people of the United States was the proudest act of his life." William Pinkney, of Maryland, diplomatist, Attorney General and Senator, said, "He was born to be the chief justice of any country in which he lived." "There is no man in the court that strikes me like Marshall," wrote Daniel Webster. "I have never seen a man of whose intellect I had a higher opinion." William Wirt, the greatest of the Attorney Generals, and first candidate for President against the lodge, said he had an almost supernatural faculty of developing a subject by a single glance of his mind, and detecting the very point upon which every controversy depends.

The associate judges, especially Judge Story, always mention the name of Marshall with the highest regard; and Harriet Martineau has left a graphic picture of the Supreme Court while it was held in the basement of the present Capitol in the low-vaulted room used as Law Library, when she saw Webster and Clay listening with absorbed interest to the judgment of the aged Marshall.

The best known and most important of Marshall's decisions, sustaining the power of the Federal government under the Constitution over both State courts and legislatures, are the celebrated Dartmouth College case, which called out from Webster one of his greatest speeches; the case of Marbury vs. Madison, which established the principle that the Supreme Court had jurisdiction over the executive branch of the Government to compel it to perform ministerial functions according to law. In the case of McCulloch against Maryland the old United States Bank was involved. The State attacked the constitutionality of the Bank Charter Act, and attempted to levy tax on the Bank. Marshall held that it might as well tax the mails, the mint, patent rights, etc. The American people he declared did not design to make their government depend on the States. In other judgments he decided that the decision of the Supreme Court must hold against State courts or the sovereign States themselves. Such decisions raised his reputation to a degree of public respect and professional reputation never yet surpassed. Justice Story, in publishing "The Writings of John Marshall on the Federal Constitution," said, "His judgments, for power of thought, beauty of illustration, variety of learning and elegant demonstration, are justly numbered among the highest reaches of the human mind." Marshall remained Chief Justice until his death, July 6, 1835. Nearly fifty years later, May, 1884, a fine monument of marble and bronze was erected to his memory in Washington city. Aside from his decisions on the bench, his "Life of Washington," which appeared from 1804–7, was his chief literary work.

The private life of Judge Marshall was characterized by great simplicity, unbending integrity, and manners of great affability and gentleness far removed from aristocratic notions. Says Judge Story in an address before the Boston Bar:

> "He was a man of deep sensibility and tenderness; nay, he was an enthusiast in regard to the domestic virtues. He was endowed by nature with a temper of great susceptibility, easily excited, and warm when roused. But it had been so schooled by discipline, or rather moulded and chastened by his affections, that it seemed in gentleness like the distilling dews of evening. .....After all, whatever may be his fame in the eyes of the world, that which, in a just sense, was his highest glory was the purity, affectionateness, liberality and devotedness of his domestic life. Home, home, was the scene of his real triumphs"

Marshall was brought up in the Episcopal church and adhered to it through his life, like his great friend Washington. He was a sincere friend of religion and a constant attendant upon its ministrations; without, however, believing in some of its fundamental doctrines until late in life. Like his other great friend, Adams, he inclined to Unitarianism, but during his last year, in reading "Keith on Prophecy," he became convinced of our Saviour's divinity and applied for admission to full communion in the church; but before he had been formally received, being deterred by ill-health, he died, like Moses, before he could taste the sweets of Christian fellowship upon earth.

Though a slave-holder by inheritance, his opposition to the slave system was well known. He regarded it a plague spot on the nation's honor. It was his conviction that unless the Negroes could be removed by colonization the evil would only be cured by a civil convulsion. He was, therefore, a patron of the Colonization Society.

But this sketch is intended to give more than a brief review of this great American's life. It must vindicate him from the aspersions of the secret lodge. The only biography of John Marshall now before the American people is by Allan B. Magruder, and forms one of the "American Statesmen" series. Whether this writer is related to the rebel general John B. Magruder, who preferred Mexico to the United States after the war, we do not know. He at least is capable of slandering the great man whose virtues and whose genius he labors to extol. Marshall, it is well known, like Washington, joined the Masonic lodge in his younger days, probably while in the Revolutionary army. Before he reached his fortieth year he had practically abandoned Freemasonry. Of this we have the evidence of himself in a letter to John Bailey of Massachusetts, who transmitted to the aged Chief Justice a resolution adopted by the State Anti-masonic convention, Sept. 13, 1833. In his reply, dated Oct. 18, Marshall says:

"The circumstances represented as attending the case of Morgan were heard with universal detestation, but produced no other excitement in this part of the United States than is created by crimes of uncommon atrocity. Their operation on Masonry, whatever it might be, was silent, rather arresting its progress and directing attention from the society, than inducing any open, direct attack upon it. The agitations which convulse the North, did not pass the Potomac. Consequently, an individual so much withdrawn from the world as myself, entering so little into the party conflicts of the day, could feel no motive. certainly I felt no inclination, to volunteer in a distant conflict, in which the wounds that might be received would not be soothed by the consoling reflection that he suffered in the performance of a necessary duty. I never did utter the words ascribed to me, nor any other words importing the sentiment they convey. I never did say, 'Freemasonry is a jewel of the utmost value, that the pure in heart and life can only appreciate it fully, and that in a free government it must, it will be sustained and protected.' The fact mentioned in the resolution, that I have been in a lodge but once, so far as I can recollect, for nearly forty years, is evidence that I have no disposition to volunteer in this controversy, as the zealous partisan which this language would indicate.

"The resolution also inquires 'whether, as the friend and biographer of Washington, I have in my possession or recollection any knowledge of any acts of General Washington, or any documents written by him to Masonic bodies, approving of Masonry.'

"The papers of General Washington were returned many years past, to my lamented friend his nephew, and are now, I believe, in the possession of Mr. Sparks. I do not recollect ever to have heard him utter a syllable on the subject."

February 22, 1850, Robert G. Scott, Past Grand Master, delivered an address at the laying of the corner-stone of a Washington monument in Richmond, Va., in which he dwelt at length and with great satisfaction on Washington's Masonic career. Henry Gassett of Boston, one of the members of the old "Suffolk Committee," addressed two letters to Mr. Scott in which he quotes from a letter to Hon. Edward Everett by Judge Marshall, dated July 22, 1833. Mr. Gassett says:

"One of your distinguished Masons, associates of Washington, Judge Marshall, in a letter to Hon. Edward Everett, July 22, 1833, wrote that he was convinced 'that the institution ought to be abandoned, as one capable of producing much evil, and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means.'"

These emphatic statements of the great Chief Justice vindicate him entirely from any complicity with Freemasonry. These letters are on file in numerous college and historical society libraries throughout the East and South, and should have been consulted by the compiler of a biography which professes accuracy. But with this evidence at hand, Mr. Magruder, with an amazing deliberation, writes: "He was a member of the Masonic order." We can find no excuse for this libel, but in the probability that the man who wrote it is a Freemason, and inserted it in supposed obedience to a false and infamous oath. Let the slander perish with the memory of its author.

—T. C. Richmond, of Wisconsin, the Good Templar champion, attended the Connecticut Prohibition Convention, and it is therefore no surprise to learn that there was a warm debate on the woman suffrage plank. A majority report was first adopted advising that nothing be said on the tiresome and perplexing question, but finally it was voted to re-affirm the Indianapolis resolution.

—The Advance of last week prints the following pleasant note of Bro. Arnold's work: "At Lyons, last Sunday night, Mr. I. R. B. Arnold, in his tent, gave a Bible reading, with stereopticon illustrations, on the life of Christ, as written by the Old Testament prophets, the most of the Protestant churches being closed to unite in the service. Mr. Arnold, taking his family along to sing and play, has two big tents, one for the home and one for the Assembly. He gives a series of lantern lectures on London, Egypt, Palestine and the stories of the gods, showing the relations and the unity of past and present systems."

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 2, 1888.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Last Sabbath morning I preached in the Third Presbyterian church on the Sabbath question. That is the issue of the hour. The battle is raging about it. Both sides well understand that with it the battle is gained or lost. Dr. Crafts tells of an ancient city surrounded by walls which the king ordered torn down. When the workmen came to the tower they saw an inscription over the gate which read: "With these gates the city stands or falls." The civil and religious Sabbaths are the two-leaved gates of the city of God. With these gates the city stands or falls. The church is allowing these gates to be taken down. When her members are allowed to buy and read the "Sunday newspaper" on Sabbath, to go to the grocery and meat-shop and purchase their provisions on that day, these gates are being taken down. The Reformed Presbyterian or Covenanter church is a witness to the truth. And yet one of her members advertises in the "Sunday paper," another is president of a street car company whose cars run on Sabbath, and nothing is done that touches the evil. These gates are being taken down. "Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. Ye shall keep the Sabbath, therefore; for it is holy unto you: Every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people."

On Sabbath evening I preached National Reform in St. John M. E. church, Rev. Heartly, pastor. This was once the charge of Dr. Meredith, now of Brooklyn, N. Y., before he united with the Congregational church. Here Dr. Leonard preached, who later ran for Governor of Ohio on the Prohibition ticket, and who is now in New York city. They are enthusiastic on National Reform. J. M. FOSTER.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The New England N. C. A.—The Public School Question—The Educated Working Women of Sixty Years Ago—Our Boys and Girls vs the Daily Newspapers—The Hundredth Anniversary of Dr. Judson's Birth—Miss Willard and the Woman's Council.

The business of organizing afresh the work of the N. C. A. in New England has called Secretary Stoddard East, and given the writer a pleasure she has not before enjoyed—a personal acquaintance with our General Agent, whose genial presence has grown to be so familiar and welcome in the homes of anti-secretists. If unwearied zeal and earnest faith can accomplish the work of resuscitating the New England Association, reform friends may feel assured of his success; but I leave Mr. Stoddard himself to report progress, only adding that it has been already such as to warrant us in raising an Ebenezer in our hearts, and saying with the Hebrew prophet, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." The Presidential campaign is bringing prohibition to the front, and making it for the time being apparently the supreme issue, while in Boston the excitement over the public school question still continues; but while the minds of the people are alive to these subjects, what better time for pointing out the subtle connection which Freemasonry bears to both evils? Do not appearances indicate that the hand of divine Providence has struck the hour?

A petition to the Senate and House of Representatives at Washington is now being circulated "to speedily frame an article to prevent the interference of any religious sect with the common school system, or the appropriating of any of the public funds for sectarian uses." If Congress will but pass this wise measure, much future trouble may be prevented. The public should be kept alive to a sense of the great and growing dangers which are threatening the integrity of our American institutions on every hand. When the father of Melancthon lay dying, he called his son to his bedside and said, "I foresee that terrible tempests are about to shake the world. I have witnessed great things, but greater still are preparing." Such an impression, it seems to me, is prevailing at the present time among the most devout and saintly minds. A German professor from Heidleburg has just been investigating the natural gas wells in the town of Findlay, Ohio. By means of very delicate telephones connected with steel rods sunk in the earth through the shaft of the well he could plainly hear the boiling of the molten billows as they seethed and surged in the terrible internal fires beneath, raging at 3,500 degrees. And the perceptions and faculties of pure and devout souls often become so exquisitely fine that they are like spiritual telephones connecting with the future and bringing hence intimations of social earthquakes that are yet to come. When we think of the terrible forces to destroy life and property which are being continually discovered, the mind is not slow in picturing scenes of horror, should the lawless classes ever get the upper hand in our great cities, at which the French Revolution pales to nothing.

Sixty years ago, before strikes and secret trade unions were known, and the vast tide of foreign emigration had not yet set towards our shores, we were proud of our educated working classes, especially our educated working women. Lucy Larcom was one of a society of mill girls who published a paper, and cultivated their literary tastes each in the quiet of her own little sanctum after the hours of labor were over. Some became missionaries and ministers' wives, and left the seal of their self-denying lives indelibly impressed on their generation. My mother had a beloved cousin, one of the first missionaries to Burmah, whose name is on this roll of honor; but our mills and factories are now so largely given over to the foreign element that this state of things has entirely passed away; only in our shoe-manufactories there still remains a slight reminder of the old regime. One not infrequently comes across "a stitcher" who is a refined and cultured woman and does more and better work for the fact. A correspondent of the New York Mail tells of one of these: A graduate from a New England Academy who bears one of the most honored of our old colonial names, who is annually re-elected to the presidency of the Woman's Club in the village where she works, and has even contributed to the Atlantic. Once such noble wedding of hand and brain would have elicited no comment. Now the very fact that it is extraordinary ought to be a danger signal warning us that there are "rocks ahead." An illiterate laboring class is the soil to bring forth all social evils; to be at once dominated by priestcraft and lodgecraft. It is the soil for revolutions.

I was interested the other day in a theme on which Prof. Wm. T. Harris addressed the National Council of teachers at San Francisco last week: "Ought young girls to read the daily newspapers?" I should say it depended entirely on the quality of said newspapers; and that as there is no sex in crime, it was quite as important to guard our boys as our girls against a demoralizing public press. A clean, intelligent newspaper, daily or weekly, is one of the strongest educational forces that can be brought to bear on a young mind. I well remember what a potent influence on my own childhood were the weekly visits of the Telegraph, a paper edited by Henry Wilson, and the Independent, then in its "day of small things," with their latest news of the Kansas struggle, their burning utterances for truth and freedom, their intelligent and broad-minded comment on all that was interesting the world at home and abroad, they were in themselves an education. But a paper like the Boston Daily Globe, which panders to the lowest popular taste, which will give columns to a prize fight and hardly a paragraph to the proceedings of some really important meeting held in the interests of order and religion, is bought and read by thousands of Christian parents, to their shame be it said, careless of the moral contagion which its records of crime and social scandal is liable to spread in their families. Mentally as well as spiritually a young soul is dwarfed and poisoned by such dirt.

The 9th of this month will witness the celebration, by the first Baptist church in Malden, of the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Adoniram Judson. His funeral tablet bears this epitaph, "Malden his birthplace; the ocean his sepulchre; converted Burmans and the Burman Bible his monument. His record is on high." The mind naturally reverts to the record of that veteran missionary of Freemasonry, Rob. Morris, who has recently died, and who gave up preaching the Gospel to promulgate the lodge salvation. Very few would hesitate as to which was the most enviable.

Our New England N. C. A., if the prayers and wishes of the writer can be carried out, will have a share of its work among the women of the W. C. T. U. And in connection with this hope, an extract from a private letter written by Miss Willard, outlining the purposes of the Woman's Council, may be of interest:

"You can readily see what a great advantage would result from having the ladies of the temperance movement, the leaders of the missionary movement, the educational societies, and all other forms of organized work in this country, brought into council, so that with the force of all—I mean so far as moral influence is concerned—any request that we might agree upon would come before the public." "We could unitedly petition for the admission of women to all boards of charity; for the opening of all colleges to women that are now closed, and all professional schools; for the placing of women upon all educational boards, and for the removing of disabilities in law."

I fully agree with her "that there is no one object that could now be secured at so small an investment of time and money as this solidarity of the nation's organized womanhood for the purposes of freedom and beneficence." And when all the brave women in the anti-secret cause are properly organized, what is to hinder their having a part in this grand federation, and making their consolidated power felt against the lodge, as well as all the other evils which it shields and supports? E. E. FLAGG.

BUILDING MONUMENTS.

Through life we build our monuments
Of honor and, perhaps, of fame;
The little and the great events
Are blocks of glory or of shame.

The modest, humble, and obscure,
Living unnoticed and unknown,
May raise a shaft that will endure
Longer than pyramids of stone.

The carven statue turns to dust,
And marble obelisks decay,
But deeds of pity, faith and trust,
No storms of fate can sweep away.

Their base stands on the rock of right,
Their apex reaches to the skies;
They glow with the increasing light
Of all the circling centuries.

Our building must be good or bad;
In words we speak, in deeds we do;
On sand or granite must be laid
The shaft that shows us false or true.

How do we build--what can we show
For hours and days and years of toil?
Is the foundation firm below?
Is it on rock or sandy soil?

The hand that lifts the fallen up,
That heals a heart or binds a wound,
That gives the needed crust and cup,
Is building upon solid ground.

Is there a block of stainless white
Within the monumental wall,
On which the sculptured skill can write,
"He builded well, so should we all?"

A MOSQUE AT STAMBOUL.

You enter this mosque through a bronze door, having, of course, previously shod your profane feet with protecting babouches; and then you are free to examine and to admire. The first feature that strikes you is four enormous pillars, which might be compared to four fluted towers, and which support the weight of the principal cupola. The capitals of these pillars are carved into the form of a mass of stalactites, a style of ornament which may be observed in many fine Persian monuments; and half way up they are encircled by a band covered with inscriptions in Turkish characters. The strength and simplicity of these four pillars, which at once explain to the eye the constructive system of the building, give a striking impression of robust majesty and imperishable stability. Sourates, or verses from the Koran, form bands of running ornament around the great cupola and the miner domes and the cornices. From the roof are suspended, to within eight or ten feet of the ground, innumerable lustres, composed of glass cups full of tallow, set in a circular iron frame, and decorated with balls of crystal, ostrich eggs, and silk tassels, as in Saint Sophia and all the other mosques. The mihrab which designates the direction of Mecca—the niche where rests the sacred book, the Koran, the "noble book taken from a prototype kept in heaven"—is inlaid with lapislazuli, agate and jasper. Then there is the usual menber, surmounted by a conical sound-board; the mastaches, or platforms supported by colonetts, where the mezzins and other clergy sit. As in all the mosques, the side aisles are encumbered with trunks and bales of merchandise, deposited by pious Musselmans under divine safeguard; and, finally, the floor is covered with fine matting in summer and carpets in winter.

While I was lost in wonderment at the splendor of this mosque, several Moslems came in to pray, with the usual prostrations and beard-stroking and yawning. Two or three women also came to pray, clad in feridjis of brilliantly striped silks—rose and white, azure and white, yellow and red—and they, too, kneeled on the matting, and bowed and touched the ground with their brows; and the little baby girls, with their fine eyes and white veils wrapped round their heads, stood patient and motionless beside them, not being yet old enough to pray, or perhaps not strong enough on their legs to prostrate themselves without irremediably losing their balance. Some of these little baby girls seem as beauful as fresh flowers, and remind one of the fair dreams of rosy childhood which we find in the pictures of the French painter Diaz. Then, in odd corners of the mosque, were boys learning the Koran under the direction of old turbaned priests, and others learning all alone, squatting cross-legged, with the sacred book open before them on a reading stand in the shape of an X. These queer little boys produced the monotonous and melancholy sounds which alone re-echoed in the vast silence of the mosque; and in the immensity of the place, dotted as they were here and there, near the mihrab and the mastaches, they looked like big black fungi that had sprung up through the pale straw-colored matting. Huddled up into a sort of sphere, with a flat base, these boys, each one acting independently, would rock themselves rapidly backwards and forwards, while they read aloud, in a sharp nasal voice, a verse from the Koran. Then they would stop, look round, remain silent for a minute or two, and then begin rocking and reading again. Sometimes a single voice would be heard, to which another voice would seem to respond. Another time, two or three voices would be heard together, and the immense vaults would receive and reverbrate the sounds, which composed a kind of monotonous and shrill music; for the Koran is full of rhythmic prose, similar to that of which we find specimens in the Pentateuch and the Psalms.—Theodore Child in Atlantic Monthly.

DIVIDING UP AFRICA.

The acquisition of Delegoa Bay by the British Government, as the natural outlet to the sea for north South Africa, and especially for the Transvaal, seems a foregone conclusion. It is true that the Transvaal as an independent state has thus far been of little commercial importance to England, but the discovery of gold in the Boer territory has of late entirely changed the whole South African problem. Nominally it is a Dutch Republic, but in reality the influx of English miners and settlers is transforming it into a British colony, with actual incorporation into British South Africa only a question of time. Under the circumstances the acquisition of Delegoa Bay, the natural seaport of the Transvaal region, is absolutely essential to the development of the British South African possessions, the Cape ports being too far distant to be available. But while this is admitted, there is a growing opposition in England to the terms upon which the government, in its negotiations with Portugal, proposes to accomplish its acquisition. Delegoa Bay belongs to Portugal, and although England would willingly pay a handsome price for it in cash, the Lisbon government would refuse to sell without at least a partial equivalent territory. Now the Portuguese claim the East African coast from the mouths of the Zambesi to Cape Delgado, together with a large tract of country inland, and were England to assent to this claim, the matter could doubtless be adjusted. This, apparently, is what the government proposes to do, on the theory, doubtless, that England has asserted no claim to the district in question, and so would only be giving to Portugal something which she did not possess. But to recognize Portugal's claim to the country inland from her coast possessions would be to give her the whole valley of the Zambesi and of its tributary, the Shire, and the greater part of the Lake Nyassa basin. This vast region, it will be remembered, was opened by Livingstone, and for years has been occupied by missionaries and traders invited there by the British Government, and its waters are now dotted by their steamers. In this way the country has become endeared to the English people, while by the same means the government has acquired rights and responsibilities which, in the event of a trade, would be handed over to Portugal. It is urged, of course, that such an agreement could be made with Portugal as would insure the safety of the missionaries and traders, with their work, but recent developments indicate that no such agreement could be made effective. Within the last five years serious changes have occurred in East Central Africa. Arab slave hunters have again become active, and only recently the mission and trading stations on Lake Nyassa were raided and destroyed. Should existing conditions continue, the missionaries and traders, by organization and such help as England must extend, may be able to stem the tide of Arab conquest, but with Portugal in power there can be no such prospect. Rightly or wrongly, the Arabs believe that the Portuguese are not sincerely hostile to the slave trade, and at least stand in no fear of them, while of English influence and power they have a well defined dread. Besides, to recognize Portugal's inland claims would be to permit the extension of a Portuguese belt right across Africa, and so to bar the access of the British South African colonies into the interior of Africa. In view of those facts, the London press, while regarding the acquisition of Delegoa Bay as absolutely necessary, opposes the means by which it is proposed to effect it, an opposition certain to be shared in by friends of missions the world over. Happily, England has other territory in Africa with which to compensate Portugal, notably on the west coast, and, should that or direct compensation be refused, can bring political pressure to bear to force her assent.—Interior.

MOTHER'S STORY.

BY MEADE MIDDLETON.

The summer holidays had come. The trunks were packed. The coach was at the door. Away went the mother, Julia, Dora, Henry and Dick, to spend three weeks in the country.

They had a pleasant drive up and down hills and through pretty valleys. They passed farm houses where there were cross dogs and lazy looking cats, and chickens that seemed busy all day scratching holes in the ground in search of something to eat. At sunset they stopped at a house where the family were waiting to give them welcome.

For the first week there was nothing but play from morning till night. After that they began to wish that they had brought some story-books.

"I have been all over the house, mother, and there is not a story-book in it but what I have read," said Henry.

"And I do feel so much like a story now," said Dora. "Won't you tell us one mother, about something that happened long, long ago? Only not out of the Bible, for I can tell every one of the Bible stories almost before you begin one."

"So can I, and I," said all.

"Are you very sure?"

"Oh, yes! and the names of all the men and women in the story," said Julia.

"Well, I will try you," said mother. "In days long ago, a certain king went out to fight against his enemies. Among these enemies was the son of a giant. Quite likely he himself was a giant.

"I wonder if he was related to the giant Goliath," interrupted Dick.

"There is nothing said about his spear. Goliath had a spear like a weaver's beam, you know. I should think that his sons, or brothers, or cousins, would have carried that into battle. There was a fierce fight. At one time the king was very near to this son of the giant. 'Ah!' thought the man, 'here is the king; I can easily kill him with my new sword.' The giant was proud of his sword. He noticed, too, that the king was tired and faint. Just as his arm was raised to strike, a brave captain ran forward, struck the giant dead, and carried the king away to a place of safety. Then the soldiers begged the king to stay out of the fight. They called him the light of his people. 'If thou art killed, our light will be gone out,' they said."

"I begin to see a little way into this story," said Dora. "When mother spoke of a brave captain, it made me think of a king who was very thirsty. He was in a cave, hiding from his enemies. He wished very much for a drink from the well that was near his old home. The well was at the gate of the town, near by. But it would be very dangerous for any one to try to get water from it, for the town was filled with soldiers, who were just waiting to fight this king. Three of the captains heard him wish for the water, though, and away they went and broke through the soldiers and got it for him. But he would not drink it; he poured it all on the ground before their eyes."

"How unkind!" cried Henry.

"Oh, no! It seems all right when you hear why he did it. He declared he would not drink what had so nearly cost the men their lives! He would pour it all out as an offering to God. I think that mother is telling us about the very same king. What was the end of the fight, mother?"

"Oh! it was victory to the king, and death to his enemies. Those who were left alive were glad enough to run away to their own land. The king was pleased that he had driven them away. He knew, though, that he could have done nothing without God's help. These enemies were God's enemies also."

"I told you so," whispered Dora. "I'm almost sure that we have guessed the name of the king."

"He was very fond of music. He had many persons around him who could play on different kinds of instruments. Often, after a victory, he would write words to be sung."

"Have we ever seen these words, mother?"

"You had better wait till the end of the story," said Julia.

'One day the king seemed to forget all about God's kindness to him. He called his chief captain and said: 'Go all over the land and count the people, then come and tell me how many there are.' The captain was sorry to receive this command. He was sure that the king was feeling a wrong kind of pride about his land. He knew that God hated pride; and, although he was not a good man, he feared to do anything that would bring God's anger upon the land. He begged the king not to do this thing. But the king was determined that the people should be numbered. It took nine months to do the great work. Then they came to the king and told him how many hundred thousand men he had in his kingdom. The moment they told him he seemed to feel that he had done very wrong. He fell upon his knees and begged God to forgive him. This was in the afternoon, perhaps; I do not believe that he slept well that night. The next day a man came to the palace, saying he must speak with the king. I am not sure, but I think the man wore a long robe, and had a strange, sad look, as though he were used to seeing and hearing things that were not seen and heard by other men.

"It was not the first time he had been to the palace. The king knew that he was a prophet, and that he had come with a message from God. The prophet said: 'The Lord has sent me to say that you may choose one of three things.' Oh! how eagerly the king listened. 'Either seven years of famine, or three to flee before the face of your enemies, or three days of pestilence all over the land.'

"The king did not know what to choose. 'God is merciful,' he cried. 'I would rather fall into the hands of God than into the hands of man.' And so he chose the three days of pestilence. Suddenly, like a great black cloud, it came over the land. It began at one end of the kingdom, and went over its length and breadth, into quiet homes, everywhere, till thirty thousand persons had died.

"The king and his chief men, covered with sackcloth, crying unto God, looked up suddenly and saw a fearful sight—an angel in the air, with a sword in his hand. The sword was held over the city. 'Alas! alas!' cried the king. Falling upon his face, he begged God to destroy him and his family, but to spare the remainder of his people. Then the prophet came again to speak with the king. This time it was to say that God had heard his prayer, and that he must build an altar on the very spot where he had seen the angel stand. The king hastened to the place. It was just outside the city. A man and his four sons had been threshing wheat there. They had been at work all day, perhaps, for there was a large pile of wheat already threshed. The oxen were standing, fastened to the heavy wooden rollers. But the men were not at work when the king came to them. They too had seen the angel, and, being very much afraid, they had run away to hide.

"When the father saw the king coming he ran to meet him and bowed down to the ground. This is a day of wonders, he thought. What would the king say to him? He had come to ask for the piece of ground where the threshing-floor had been. He wishes to build there an altar to the Lord. He offered the farmer a large sum of money for it. 'Take it,' said the man. 'And here are the oxen, offer them as a sacrifice, and take threshing instruments, and the wheat too, and offer all to the Lord.' If there had been anything more, no doubt he would have offered that also. He refused to take any money. But the king said, 'No, I will pay the full price. I will not take that which is thine for the Lord, nor offer burnt offering without cost.' Then they weighed the silver, fifty shekels, and gave it to the man; and the king built an altar, and worshiped God. Fire came down from heaven and fell upon the altar. Then the angel put his sword into the sheath. This was a sign that the Lord had forgiven the king, and that no more should die of the plague."

"Mother, you have been telling us about King David, and how he numbered the people, and about the plague that God sent. I knew it all, almost from the beginning," said Julia. "I guessed when some one spoke about the thirsty king. That was David, you know; and he wanted water from the well that stood by the gate in Bethlehem."

"But who was the farmer?" asked Dick. "His name was Araunah. He must have been a good man. He had a chance to make money. The king would have given him anything that he asked."

"But you see how little he cared for money compared with the privilege of giving all that he had for God's work. I suppose that we ought to feel as he did. But how can we? We don't build altars nowadays."

"But they build churches and send missionaries to the heathen, and give to the poor," said mother. "We have opportunities of doing good every day if we choose to use them."

"I guess we don't know every Bible story, after all," said Julia.—S. S. Times.

TEMPERANCE.

LODGE AND SALOON IN WORCESTER.

The number of saloons on the principal streets in Worcester, Mass., indicate a liberal patronage and lax state of morals. I am not surprised to see this giant curse flourish where Christ and his bride and the watchmen on Zion's walls are dominated by Satan's creed and worship.

Said one, who reads the papers and notes the lodge reports with care, "The lodge men hold nearly every office in the city. They have taken everything into their hands. They control the churches and the ministers are their willing servants."

A well informed gentlemen assured me that only two or three churches in the city gave any warning against secret orders, and another told of an instance where a man presented himself for membership in a leading Congregationalist church in the city, and when an evening was named by the pastor for his examination the candidate objected that it was his lodge evening. His objection was entertained and another evening named without a word of reproof for thus putting the bride of Christ under the heel of the lodge! Where city officials are sworn allies of saloon-keepers and dens of infamy, and where the church and the ministry lie tamely down and invite the lodge to walk over their prostrate forms, it is no marvel that hell opens her guilded portals in high places, and the destroying demon stands ready to catch the passer-by at every corner. While the lodge rules Worcester rum will "run down her streets," and the same is true of any other city. J. P. Stoddard.

MAYOR ROCHE'S SUNDAY SALOONS.

Last Sunday, in Chicago, was characterized by wanton attacks upon peaceable citizens. In one case a couple of hoodlums thought it would be great fun to terrorize inoffensive Jews going along the streets or sitting in their own doorways. Fortunately, not much harm came of that lark. In another a house was entered and a woman thrown into a coal box, on which stones and timber were piled to prevent her getting out. This, too, proved to be trivial in its consequences. In a third case a Polish dance was interfered with and broken up by rowdy intruders, resulting in the fatal shooting of the two men who thought to have a little fun at the expense of a lot of "Polacks." In the fourth case a drunken man attacked an old neighbor and his wife, and, not content with driving them into the house, attempted to get in himself. A heavy charge of buckshot from the assailed householder cut short the career of the assailant.

It is apparent to all thinking men that the open saloon on Sunday is responsible for this rowdyism and crime. All the parties who were the aggressors in the disturbances of Sunday were intoxicated or under the influence of liquor, and if no liquor had been obtainable they would not have indulged in such brutality. It is a fact that many men who do not drink to excess on other days of the week do yield to temptation on Sunday, their leisure contributing to their undoing. The logic of all such events as those of Sunday points to the closing of saloons on the day of rest.—Inter Ocean, July 31.

THE SALOON AND THE NEWSPAPER.

"A very large number of newspapers," said Dr. Henson, of Chicago, in a recent sermon, "are printed that are unfit to read in a decent house. Dana says that it is the business of newspapers to publish the news. I deny it. There is a great deal that happens that has no business in print anywhere. It is not decent. It may be news, but it is news that ought never to see the light of day. There have to be police courts, and so there have to be sewers; but in God's name let the sewers run underground. It is the business of a newspaper to publish such news as the public ought to know; such news as is fit for the public's moral health. It is customary for everybody to charge the saloons with being the abomination of desolation. The saloon is responsible for a great deal, there is no question about that—murders, thefts, burglaries and innumerable crimes of the deepest dye—but it is not responsible for everything. I tell you debauched literature is responsible, perhaps more vitally, deeply and directly than the saloon. The saloon simply debauches the boys and the men as a rule, but here is a subtle, insidious, pernicious, infamous influence that debauches the whole of society, including the young members."

SALOON MEN AGGRIEVED.

Some saloon-keepers in Brooklyn are very angry over an original poem read at the graduating exercises in a public school the other day, and now the Brooklyn Liquor Dealers' Association has taken the matter up and threatens to make it hot for somebody. The poem describes alleged cases of misery and murder wrought by the saloons. The poet adds:

"You were licensed to sell, and gave not a sigh
For the miserable work you had done,
And now, not content, you are striving your best
To likewise ruin my son.
You are leading him on in the downward path,
His meager earnings you crave;
For that you are willing to send him down
To an early drunkard's grave.
When you stand in the presence of those poor souls
You have helped drag down to hell,
Of little avail will it be to you then
To say, 'I am licensed to sell.'"

Now we shall hear of more teachers discharged, as in Boston, for the saloon is as powerful in politics as the Roman Catholic church.

THE VERDICT AFTER FIVE YEARS OF HIGH LICENSE.

We have had high license in Illinois for five years, and while it is a success as a revenue measure, it is an undisguised failure as a temperance measure. It in no way checks the consumption of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, nor does it in the least degree lessen the evils or crime from such use. It may be true that in a city like Chicago the number of saloons may be reduced a few hundred, but such a reduction from an aggregate of several thousands is not noticeable. Drunkenness and the petty as well as the grave crimes resulting therefrom receive no check from high license, and to urge it as a temperance measure or as an anti-saloon expedient is to attempt to commit a fraud on a party. Nor does high license give more decent saloons, if such places can claim any degree of decency. The dives and dens, the barrel-houses and the thieves' resorts, are as bad and as frequent in this city to-day, after five years of high license, as they ever were. Call high license what it is, an easy way to raise a revenue from vice, but let there be an end of indorsing it as a temperance or a reform measure.—Chicago Daily News.

The observance of the Sabbath is so closely allied to the temperance work that it cannot be separated from it, and no reformation can prosper without it. The drink demon seems to take possession of its subjects on that day, and how often do we read of the wives, becoming despondent from the miserable lives they are compelled to lead with drunken husbands, putting an end to their earthly existence—their lives going out into everlasting darkness—on the Sabbath; the day that commemorates the "rising of the Sun of righteousness with healing in his wings." A noted writer says that "suicides of women are more frequent on the Sabbath than any other day, and the suicides of men on Monday. The woman left neglected at home in despair takes her life; the man awakening Monday from a drunken Sabbath loathes himself and life and casts both violently away." Can any Christian home afford to have a father, brother or husband abetting the evil of licensing liquor and the open profanation of the Sabbath of the Lord?—Christian Nation.

The evening of July 10 John Bunting, a prosperous farmer in the town of Franklin, Mich., while crazed by drink, tried to depopulate the entire neighborhood, shooting indiscriminately with his revolver, and slightly wounding Mrs. Pawson, his mother-in-law, and B. G. Wells, a farmer. That night Wells' barn was fired, and it was at first supposed that Bunting, who had disappeared, had perished in the ruins, but nothing was found to justify the surmise. Sunday, the 15th, 200 farmers organized and searched the woods on the theory that the man had committed suicide, but discovered nothing. On the 25th a son of the missing man found his father's putrid body in a swamp not far from the scenes of his shooting. Bunting had used his weapon on himself.

The New Railroad Bill which has just passed the Canadian Parliament has the following remarkable clause: "Every person who sells, gives or barters any spirituous or intoxicating liquors to or with any servant or employe of any company while on duty, is liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars, or to imprisonment with or without severe labor, for a period not exceeding one month, or to both.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON VIII. Third Quarter.—Aug 19.

SUBJECT.—The Feast of Tabernacles.—Lev. 23: 33-44.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The voice of rejoicing and salvation is in the tabernacles of the righteous.—Psa. 118: 15.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Feast of Tabernacles. vs. 33-36. (1) This was to be a week of Sabbaths to be profaned by no common, daily work. (2) It was a feast of remembrance, bringing back the memory of all the Lord's great goodness in leading them out of the land of Egypt. (3) It was a foreshadowing of something better, that time of millennial peace and plenty for which the world yet waits. (4) It taught the devout Jew that though he had reached the land of promise he had still no spiritual abiding place, and was, like his forefathers, a stranger and a pilgrim on the earth. (5) It was a feast of thanksgiving; they were to rejoice before the Lord. (6) It was a time for social reunions, when friends and neighbors met together. Viewed in all these different side-lights we can see that this was an annual festival every way calculated to keep alive the fires of religious devotion, of family affection and pure patriotism. And yet the utter inability of forms to do this is proven by the fact that its observance fell into total disuse as early as the days of Joshua, and was not again revived till the times of Ezra; and though observed with great outward show when our Saviour was on earth, its spiritual significance seems neither to have been taught nor understood. The ancient festivals were a spiritual image of the freedom and joy of the Christian life, which, though it ought to be the very busiest of lives, "there must no servile work be done therein;" none of that drudgery which furrows the brow and wears out soul and body before their time. The soul should be kept above our daily drudgery, and by bearing in mind these two things: that the Lord never requires of us more than our strength is equal to, nor puts on us more tasks than our life is long enough for, we can be calm, unhurried and unworried, even in the most various and distracting employments.

2. It was a Time for Freewill Offerings. vs. 37-39. The Christian Sabbath is the one festival which will always stand the test of the centuries. It cannot pass away because it stands rooted in the needs of man's nature. Most fitting is it that on the first day of the week each should lay by him in store a freewill offering, as God hath prospered him. Christianity does not release us from any of our obligations. It intensifies them; sheds upon them a new and spiritual light in which they are no longer "a yoke of bondage," but "the perfect law of liberty." Among our duties that of honoring God with our substance should take a first rank Nothing steals away a nation's substance like the drink traffic. It follows that if the saloon gets hundreds of millions of our money every year, there is so much the less to give to God; so much the less to give to foreign missions; so much the less for our own neglected and unfortunate classes. Tobacco takes another enormous sum. We should be richer without its use; richer in pocket, in brains, in morals; richer in our future men and women, who, by the inexorable law of heredity, cannot have tobacco-using ancestors without suffering for it. The money paid into the secret lodges gives back no just equivalent, and we know that a part of it goes for tobacco and drink, because there is more or less used; for many a man will smoke and drink when he can do it in secret, and at the same time have the pleasure of companionship, who would not do it under other conditions. Economy is always on the side of virtue; and though this may be the lowest side from which we can view reform, it is a very proper and legitimate side. When all these national iniquities are put down there will be more to give to God.

3. It was a Time of Rejoicing. v. 44 The duty of Christian rejoicing is very strongly emphasized in God's Word. His children ought to be happy. They have a Father whose faithfulness and tenderness is only bounded by eternity; they have "the promise of the life which now is, and of that which is to come." If they are not happy it looks as if they did not believe these promises, and God is dishonored thereby. "That your generations may know," etc. Make the children familiar with the story of God's goodness to their fathers before them, and thus they will learn for themselves lessons of childlike love and trust.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. C. C. Harrah of Galva resigned his charge in Galva, Ill., several weeks since, but met a universal protest. He insisted, however, that he be released. Four different papers signed by old and young, at different times, were put into his hands, and the feeling of the church was intense. Friends of the church and pastor all advised that the resignation be withdrawn; and at a meeting of the church and congregation, July 21, where plans were laid for future work, the pastor decided to remain.

—The Swedish Mission churches of the Northwest are seeking to open an English Mission among the Chippewa Indians on Lake Mille Lac. The American Missionary Association is endeavoring to get the consent of the Indian Bureau, and if successful, the mission will be opened under the auspices of the Association, but will be conducted and supported by the Swedes. There are 900 Indians there, and no school nor mission work among them.

—Mrs. Cheney and Mrs. Hildreth, the daughters of Deacon Philo Carpenter, as trustees of his estate, have recently paid over the following bequests: To the Illinois Home Missionary Society, $1,000; to the American Missionary Association, $1,000; to the New West Commission, $2,000; to the American Board, $1,000; to the American and Foreign Christian Union, $1,000; also $2,000 to Rev. J. E. Roy, in trust, for the promotion of the anti-secret society reform among the Negroes of the South. He had previously given a house and lot each, now renting for $720 a year, to the American Board, the A. M. A., and the Home Missionary Society. In all he had given $50,000 to promote the Anti-masonic reform. His direct and residuary legacy to the Chicago Theological Seminary will be a handsome sum. Mrs. Cheney, who has borne the bulk of the burden, is confirming the faith of her father in her business capacity.—Advance.

—There are in connection with the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church 10,970 communicants, who are divided into 121 congregations, ministered to by 116 ministers. The net increase last year in the home churches was 43 communicants, and in the two mission fields 39. The total contributions for all purposes was $205,511, an average of $18.73 per member. The Sabbath-school scholars number 12,574.

—The census gives the number of Protestant churches in the United States at 92,653, Protestant ministers at 71,622, and members at 9,003,030. Taking the Catholic and Mormon population from the total population, it leaves 43,864,381. This gives one church for every 473 persons, including infants and children, one minister for every 612 of the people, and nearly one professing Christian for every five of the population outside of the two classes named.

Mr. Stanley Smith, of the China inland mission, reports 210 baptisms in central China at one time, and another missionary reports that he preaches to immense audiences, sometimes numbering 4,000. Some influential men are among the converts.

—George Muller, known throughout the Christian world for his faith and work, is now eighty-two years old, yet he is hale and hearty and as full of zeal and activity as ever. He has just returned to England after a preaching tour of 37,000 miles, principally in Australia, China and Japan. Upon his arrival at Bristol he was greeted most warmly by 2,000 children. Mr. Wright, his son-in-law, had charge of his orphanage during his absence, and conducted it upon the same plan and principles.

—It is reported that in the village Underoon, hidden away in the Taurus, there was an Armenian merchant who, five years ago, happened to see a Bible in the hands of a neighbor. He began to read therein, and soon learned the way of salvation. Every Sunday morning he holds a Bible class, preaches in the afternoon, and has a school of a dozen children. At least a score of people owe their conversion to his example and teaching. This little colony of Christians is not indebted to any foreign missionary agency.

Professor Elisha Grey, of Highland Park, near Chicago, is reported to have patented an invention which is destined to displace the telephone for many purposes. The new instrument is called the Telautograph, and by its use a man of business will be enabled to take up a pencil or pen, write a message, and as his pencil moves, so will a pencil move simultaneously in the office of his correspondent, reproducing a fac simile, the same letters and words. The mode of using the telautograph is as follows: The person wishing to communicate with another pushes a button which rings an annunciator in the office he desires to communicate with. Then the first party writes his message on a roll of paper. As he writes, so writes the pen at the other end of the wire. In writing, the pen or pencil is attached to two small wires, which regulate the currents that control the pencil at the other end. But these wires give no trouble and the message may be written just as easily as if they were absent. The writer may use any language, short-hand, or a code or cypher is fully reproduced. The artist of an illustrated paper may thus transmit a sketch with as much facility as a reporter telegraphs his description in words. It is said there is no reason why a circuit of five hundred miles should not be as easily worked as ten. It will be noiseless, little affected by induction, and no misunderstanding can arise in its use.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

Farm Notes.

THE ESSENTIALS IN FERTILIZERS.

Practice and experiment in the growth of crops has shown that nitrogen, phosphates, potash, and lime, in assimilable form, are the substances which most strikingly benefit land; and chemical analysis has determined in a measure the varying proportions in which different crops draw upon these and upon other constituents of the soil.

Acting on this knowledge, chemists have given specifications for the preparation of manures for all the different crops, these schemes being professedly based on the composition of the crops themselves. But manuring on this principle would often cost more than the consequent increase of the crops would repay; for it makes no allowance for natural fertility, and it makes no distinction between the composition of the crops grown and the composition of the produce sold off the farm. We know that soils are of very unequal fertility; that some have an unlimited food-supply compared with others, and that it is only the material sold off the farm that the maintenance of fertility requires to be restored. More than this, crops differ greatly in their capability of self-supply. Take, as an example of the latter characteristic, the relations of wheat and clover to nitrogen. Chemical analysis shows that clover contains more nitrogen than wheat; and yet the wheat finds its nitrogen with difficulty, while the clover seems to have a power of self-supply in this particular. Thus, in defiance of the chemical composition of the two crops, the farmer's practice, when he manures wheat liberally with nitrogen and gives little or none to clover, is justified. Economic manuring must supplement the plant's weakness, while it makes good the deficiencies of the soil.

A general manure contains all the constituents of the crop, or at least all those in which soils are most deficient; but it by no means follows that every substance which may act beneficially as a manure ought to be applied. If a soil is deficient in one particular element, and contains all the other requisites of fertility, that one substance may act as beneficially when applied as though it were a manure containing all the constituents of the crop. The crop, in this case, is thrown upon the natural resources of the soil for all its other elements. After a heavy dressing of one substance, that substance may not be required for several years, but some other substance may be needed; and this all the more because the larger crops now grown will exhaust such other substances more rapidly than the smaller crops did previously. By persisting in the exclusive use of a special manure an ultimate exhaustion of the soil is inevitable. Judiciously used, special manures are the agents which bring into useful activity the dormant resources of the soil. They restore the proper balance between its different constituents and supply the excessive demand for some particular elements. Still, the application useful on one soil may be quite useless on another, and the application may be useful on a soil in one season and useless in another.

A general manure may be used year after year in a perfectly routine manner; but where a special manure is employed, the importance of watching its effects and altering it as circumstances indicate cannot be over-estimated. This forces upon us the necessity for studying the succession of manures as well as that of crops. In many cases in which ammonia, when first used, proved beneficial, it now begins to lose its effect, and the reason, no doubt, is that by its means the amount of phosphate existing in these soils has been reduced, while the ammonia has accumulated, so that change of manuring is needed.—American Agriculturist.

WHY CLOVER IMPROVES THE SOIL.

Professor Tockler thus explains the action of clover increasing the fertility of the soil:

"All who are perfectly acquainted with the subject must have seen that the best crops of wheat are produced by being preceded by crops of clover grown for seed. I have come to the conclusion that the very best preparation, the best manure, is a good crop of clover. A vast amount of mineral manure is brought within reach of the corn crop which, otherwise, would remain in a locked-up condition in all the soil. The clover-plants take nitrogen from the atmosphere and manufacture it into their own substance, which, on decomposition of the clover, roots and leaves, produces abundance of ammonia. In reality, the growing of clover is equivalent, to a great extent, to manuring with Peruvian guano."

Take, for instance, red clover, the best of all green manures. The great English chemist, Professor Way, of the Royal Agricultural College at Cirencester, made a perfect analysis of dry red clover, and found every one hundred parts to contain as follows:

Silica	0.50
Lime	22.62
Magnesia	4.08
Oxide of iron	0.26
Potash	36.45
Soda	90.00

INSTINCT IN BRUTES.

Few things are more wonderful than the instinct that guides the brute in the choice of its food and medicine. In India the mungoose, when bitten by the deadly cobra, is said to seek among the grass for some unknown herb or substance which it swallows and is thereby enabled to counteract the effect of the poison. Man, when his system is deranged by the accumulated poisons engendered by constipation or a sluggish habit of body, should seek relief in Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, which will at once establish a permanently healthy action of the liver, stomach and bowels.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Int resting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with steal thy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

The Christian's Secret of A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment

"It contains much clear pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

Home and Health.

To Expel Mosquitoes.—Take of gum camphor a piece about one-third the size of a hen's egg, and evaporate it by placing it in a tin vessel, and holding it over a lamp, taking care that it does not ignite. The smoke will soon fill the room and expel the mosquitoes, and, even though the windows should be left open all night, they will not enter the room as long as the odor remains.

A Good Disinfectant.—Dissolve half a drachm of nitrate of lead in a pint of boiling water, then dissolve two drachms of common salt in eight quarts of water. Pour the two mixtures together. After the sediment has settled, the liquid is a saturated solution of chloride of lead. A cloth dipped in it and hung up in a room will purify a fetid atmosphere. It may also be used to pour down a sink, drain, or water closet. This is very cheap, as a pound of nitrate of lead will make several barrelfuls of the disinfectant.

Keeping Butter.—A simple mode of keeping butter in warm weather is to invert a large crock of earthernware, or a flower pot, if need be (varying with the size of the vessel containing the butter), over the dish in which the butter is held. The porousness of the earthernware will keep the butter cool, and all the more so if the pot be wrapped in a wet cloth, with a little water in the dish with the butter. Not the porosity of the earthenware, but the rapid absorption of heat by external evaporation, causes the butter to become hard.

Damp Cellars.—If a cellar has a damp smell and cannot be thoroughly ventilated, a few trays of charcoal set around on the floor, shelves and ledges will make the air pure and sweet. If a large basket of charcoal be placed in a damp cellar where milk is kept there will be no danger of its becoming tainted.

The following, it is said, is an admirable cure for damp cellars: Boil two ounces of grease with two quarts of tar for nearly twenty minutes in an iron vessel, having pounded glass, one pound, and slacked lime, two pounds, well dried in an iron pot and sifted through a flour sieve. Add some of the lime to the tar and glass to form a thin paste, only sufficient to cover a square foot at a time about an eighth of an inch thick.

How to Cool a Cellar.—A great mistake, says Medical Classics, is sometimes made in ventilating cellars and milk houses. The object of ventilation is to keep the cellars cool and dry, but this object often fails of being accomplished by a common mistake, and instead the cellar is made both warm and damp. A cool place should never be ventilated, unless the air admitted is cooler than the air within, or is at least as cool as that, or a very little warmer. The warmer the air, the more moisture it holds in suspension. Necessarily, the cooler the air, the more this moisture is condensed and precipitated. When a cool cellar is aired on a warm day, the entering air being in motion appears cool, but as it fills the cellar, the cooler air with which it becomes mixed chills it, the moisture is condensed, and dew is deposited on the cold walls, and may often be seen running down them in streams. Then the cellar is damp and soon becomes mouldy. To avoid this, the windows should only be opened at night, and late—the last thing before retiring. There is no need to fear that the night air is unhealthful; it is as pure as the air of midday, and is really drier. The cool air enters the apartment during the night and circulates through it. The windows should be closed before sunrise in the morning, and kept closed and shaded through the day. If the air of the cellar is damp, it may be thoroughly dried by placing in it a peck of fresh lime in an open box. A peck of lime will absorb about seven pounds, or more than three quarts, of water, and in this way a cellar or milk-room may soon be dried, even in the hottest weather.—Scientific American.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is designed for those who need a medicine to purify their blood. No other preparation so well meets this want. It increases the appetite and rejuvenates the whole system. Its record, for forty years, is one of constant triumph over disease.

Rich and Poor,

Prince and Peasant, the Millionaire and Day Laborer, by their common use of this remedy, attest the world-wide reputation of Ayer's Pills. Leading physicians recommend these pills for Stomach and Liver Troubles, Costiveness, Biliousness, and Sick Headache; also, for Rheumatism, Jaundice, and Neuralgia. They are sugar-coated; contain no calomel; are prompt, but mild, in operation; and, therefore, the very best medicine for Family Use, as well as for Travellers and Tourists.

"I have derived great relief from Ayer's Pills. Five years ago I was taken so ill with that I was unable to do any work. I took three boxes of Ayer's Pills and was entirely cured. Since that time I am never without a box of these pills." Peter Christensen, Sherwood, Wis.

"Ayer's Pills have been in use in my family upwards of twenty years and have completely verified all that is claimed for them. In attacks of piles, from which I suffered many years, they afford greater relief than any other medicine I ever tried."—T. F. Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for a number of years, and have never found anything equal to them for giving me an appetite and imparting energy and strength to the system. I always keep them in the house."—R. D. Jackson, Wilmington, Del.

"Two boxes of Ayer's Pills cured me of severe from which I was long a sufferer.—Emma Keyes, Hubbardston, Mass.

"Whenever I am troubled with constipation, or suffer from loss of appetite, Ayer's Pills set me right again."—A. J. Kiser, Jr., Rock House, Va.

"Ayer's Pills are in general demand among our customers. Our sales of them exceed those of all other pills combined. We have never known them fail to give entire satisfaction."—Wright & Hannelly, San Diego, Texas.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

Talks ON THE Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT JECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Secretary Vilas has decided against the Northern Pacific road in regard to lands claimed for indemnity. The effect of this decision is far-reaching, and will affect about 800 cases now pending in the General Land Office, and probably the claims of many settlers which have not been received. The denial of the right of the company to indemnity for lands within the Yakima Indian Reservation is said to be equally applicable to other Indian reservations along the line of the road, and will have the effect of reducing the indemnity claims of the company very largely, probably to the extent of a million and a half acres. About 2,000 cases now in the General Land Office will be affected by this decision.

CHICAGO.

One hundred and thirty-seven members of the Chicago Blaine club left the city Saturday afternoon for New York to take part in the reception to the Maine statesman on his arrival from abroad.

The net earnings of the Burlington railroad for June show a decrease of $506,946, and for the first six months of the present year a decrease of $4,701,549 as compared with corresponding periods last year.

Several thousand men, women, and children went to Sheffield, Ind., Sunday, to attend the anarchists' picnic, given for the benefit of the Spies monument fund. The crowd was well spotted with red, in the shape of rosettes, ribbons, etc., and a scarlet shawl hung from a tree did duty as a flag. A vast amount of poor beer was sold on the grounds, from which the monument fund received a part of the profits. The speeches were not more rabid than usual, and, though great quantities of liquor were absorbed, the day passed off very quietly.

COUNTRY.

General Philip H. Sheridan died at Nonquitt, Mass., at 10:20 o'clock Sunday evening from an attack of his old heart failure trouble.

After reaching Nonquitt the General's condition steadily improved until last Monday, when there was a halt. He was perfectly able to sit up and converse with members of the family and read the proof-sheets of his memoirs, but after that date no further progress exhibited itself. The physicians became anxious, but said nothing to alarm the family or public. Friday the patient began to sink, and the family were then first warned.

At a meeting of the Union and United Labor parties in Cincinnati, O., Sunday afternoon, at which one hundred of the leading spirits of both parties were present, a resolution was adopted and signed by all present whereby the United Labor party of Ohio is consolidated with the National Union Labor party An effort made in Chicago to secure the same result failed.

Of those who partook of the alumni dinner at Marietta, O. June 27, residents and visitors, more than twenty have been seriously ill with tyhpoid fever. Three have died and others are dangerously sick. Outside of this dinner party Marietta has no typhoid fever.

The election returns in Tennessee indicate that East Tennessee has gone Republican by the usual majority, Democratic gains being noted in Middle and West Tennessee.

Ten companies of the Second Regiment of Kansas State militia, was ordered by Governor Martin to proceed to Stevens county and disarm the citizens of Woodsdale and Hugoton. The forces will be about equally divided between Hugoton and Woodsdale. They are in command of Brigadier General Murray Myers, who is accompanied by Adjutant General Campbell. They will at once demand that the people of the county disarm themselves and surrender their arms to the commander of the militia, and will be called upon to obey the law and preserve peace.

Circulars have been issued by Alex H. Smith, Secretary of the St. Louis Millers' Association, calling a meeting of millers of Missouri, Illinois, Kansas, Indiana, Tennessee, and all winter wheat States, for the purpose of forming a flour trust. The meeting is to be held in St. Louis, August 31.

The news has reached St. Louis that the British Government has requested a further respite for Hugh Brooks, better known as Maxwell, on the ground that both the murderer and his victim were British subjects. The Masonic murderer may yet escape.

Excessive heat throughout the interior States last week resulted in many fatal cases of sunstroke. The hot weather was modified by severe storms. That on Thursday swept, with a deluge of rain and high wind, from Minnesota to Indiana. In the north floods from suddenly rising streams caused great loss, and in some of the Chicago suburbs buildings were blown down. A number of fatal cases of lightning stroke are reported.

At St. Louis Wednesday there were twenty five prostrations by heat, five of them fatal. Late in the afternoon a heavy storm passed over, and much damage was done by lightning and wind.

Seven deaths were caused by excessive heat at Kansas City, Mo., Wednesday, though the highest temperature recorded was only 97 degrees.

George Harris of Cincinnati, aged 14, Tuesday evening accidentally shot and killed his sister, aged 11, who was playfully trying to take from him a rifle with which he was shooting at a mark.

Losses amounting to $25,000 were caused at Bement, Ill., Wednesday, by the heat of the sun igniting tinners' materials left on the roof of a new building.

Five hundred and fifty head of fat cattle were sold Tuesday by C. Alexander, of Paris, Ky., for shipment to England, the largest sale ever made in the State by one man.

The first session of the Colored National Editors' Association was held at Nashville, Tenn, Wednesday.

Governor Hill of New York has approved the bill passed by the Legislature at its recent special session abolishing hand labor and State manufacturing in "all penal institutions of the State." The Attorney General decides the bill applies to all penitentiaries and reformatories as well as State prisons.

All cases against the Boston and Providence Railroad Company arising out of the Bussey bridge accident have been settled without trial at a total cost of about $1,000,000.

A destructive fire in Suffolk, Va., raged five hours Wednesday, and nearly the entire business portion of the town is destroyed. The loss is roughly estimated at $350,000 to $400,000, with the insurance far below the loss. A large number of dwellings were burned and many families rendered homeless.

Reports from Tuscon, A. T., of the trouble on the San Carlos Indian Reservation, state that the Indians have been stealing cattle for dried meat, preparatory, it is supposed, to an outbreak of hostilities; and that they killed three Indian scouts of a party sent to arrest them, suffering some loss in wounded themselves and escaping to the mountains. Reports to the War Department make light of the trouble.

The hearing at Aurora, Ill., of the three men charged with being implicated in the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy conspiracy resulted in the binding over of Bauereisen on three charges, Goding on two, and Koegel on one charge, to appear before the Grand Jury in October. At Galesburg, Ill, Friday, Clark, Miley, and Bauereisen were held in $3,000 bail each, on the charge of conspiracy in bringing dynamite into the county.

FOREIGN.

The President of the French Agricultural Society has made a report regarding the losses caused by the recent rains. He says that the hay has been destroyed and that the peasants have been compelled to kill their animals, being unable to feed them. He also says that corn cannot ripen, that potatoes are rotting and that the vintage this year will be inferior. He estimates the loss to agriculture at half a million of francs, and says if the bad weather continues a month longer the crisis will extend to enormous dimensions.

A Berlin dispatch on Friday says that Silesia is being devastated by terrible floods, the worst known in the city for years. Along the rivers Bober and Zacken the damage is especially great. Several mills at Greifenberg have been destroyed and the crops have been ruined.

Floods are doing enormous damage to bridges and railways throughout Switzerland. Lake Lucerne is overflowed.

The foreigners resident in Peru are greatly excited and indignant over the recent high-handed proceedings of the Peruvian Government in seizing the railroads of that country, which were built by foreigners with capital raised abroad, and the Americans are anxious to see if the United States will not take some decided step to vindicate the rights of her citizens which have thus been violated.

During the celebration of the one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of Ludwig I. at Munich, Aug. 1, three elephants became frightened and trampled a man, woman and child to death, and so badly frightened a lady that she died. Much damage was done to property.

Professor Jamieson, the naturalist, writes from Kasongo, on the Congo river, that he is making preparations to leave with Major Bartellot, Tippo Tib and 900 men to search for Henry M. Stanley. He says all the Europeans in the expedition are well.

Advices from Japan under date July 15 state that the volcano of Mount Iwahassi suddenly burst into activity, and in a short time fifty-six houses in Iwasenura were destroyed. A telegram received on the 16th says the eruption still continues, with great destruction and loss of life. About four hundred persons and thirty houses in a village called Bira were buried under sand and ashes thrown out by the volcano. Among those buried were some fifteen visitors at the hot springs in the neighborhood.

"TAKEN IN."

"I used often to read the newspaper aloud to my wife," said Bert Robinson, "and once I was fairly taken in by a patent medicine advertisement. The seductive paragraph began with a modest account of the sea serpent, but ended with setting forth the virtues of a certain Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery which, it was alleged, was a sure cure for all throat and lung troubles, and would even cure consumption, if taken in time. The way I was taken in, was this: I had a lung trouble and I bought a bottle of the remedy. I was a stranger to it and it took me in—and cured me."

CAMPAIGN OFFER.

The CYNOSURE is offered during the Campaign for only ten cents. For the particulars please read the publisher's notice on page 13. The particular value of this paper during the next ten weeks to voters will be the response of candidates on the question of the lodge. Already the Presidential nominees of the Prohibition, Republican, and Equal Rights parties have responded to the desire of their supporters, also two candidates for Vice President and numerous State nominees. These replies are of greatest importance to American voters. We propose to make every number of the paper worth, to even an indifferent person, the price for the campaign, and to interested parties ten times that sum.

Some months ago Rev. R. N. Countee, of Memphis, wrote in these columns of the agitation at Marion, Arkansas, over an attack on the lodge in the Baptist church. The preacher was a colored brother from Memphis. A more desperate quarrel has lately taken place there, resulting in the expulsion of the colored county officers from Crittenden county, of which Marion was the county seat. In the last New York Independent Rev. B. A. Imes, of Memphis, has a full account of this outrage. Not only were these men driven from their homes by the whites, but one who ventured to return was shot without mercy. The murders of the Masonic Ku-Klux, White Leagues, Rifle Clubs, etc., will make a heavy account for our nation to settle at the bar of God.

A singular infatuation has taken possession of the American people. They have gone crazy on "reunions." Every accident of associated peril or pleasure or trial or success has to be thus annually remembered. The effect will be to make us a conceited people, living on past fortunes or misfortunes, and belittling the present opportunity and duty. Enough has been spent in army reunions since the war to have carried through the efforts of the peace societies, and made an end of war in Christendom: and something might be saved for missions from the superfluity of church assemblies of the same sort. The latest example of this distressing characteristic is a reunion of the survivors of the horrible railroad disaster at Chatsworth, Illinois, last year. This lugubrious meeting was actually held in Peoria last Wednesday. No wonder we are losing the spirit of Independence day with such insane freaks warming in our blood.

We have this week some notices of the so-called "American" party. It is to hold a national convention in Washington, beginning on Thursday of this week. Originally an anti-Chinese movement originating away down at Fresno, in the San Joaquin valley of California, it was taken up by some Philadelphians whose uneasy ambition gave them no peace unless they were heading some "movement." So with the aid of several secret orders this convention is to meet, and delegates have been appointed in some of our large cities, where the anti-foreign sentiment has some reason for its growth. Some of the officials of the "Patriotic (?) order of the Sons of America" object to being spoken of in connection with this political movement, but no denial or argument can annihilate the fact that it is a piece of lodge work. They want Abram Hewitt, the sturdy Mayor of New York, to stand for their figure head. But Mr. Hewitt's American principles are of the genuine sort. They are too high for this party to see even their color.

Mr. Blaine's welcome home last Friday was a grand affair, and the most has been made of it by the political press. But there was a lack of spontanity and heartiness which comes from the soul of a great people. There was too manifest an elaborate preparation, from the "Rah! rah! rah!" of the Chicago Club, and the 200,000 thousand and more Chinese silk paper handkerchiefs distributed in New York to be waved simultaneously at the political chief, to the so-called demonstration of workingmen. It was impossible not to contrast the noisy demonstrations with the quiet of Gen. Harrison's Indianapolis home. The latter, in every estimate, was the better exponent of that American character which must preserve us as a nation. Though Mr. Blaine is one of the readiest and most brilliant of our public men, and has had the good sense—and the protection of God—in escaping from the lodge; yet his public interests are so involved in those of the political shouters and hustlers that the good he has done is likely to be forgotten from the unfortunate connection.

The Romish Cardinal Gibbons preached the funeral sermon over the body of the late General Sheridan last Saturday in Washington from a text taken from the Apocrypha. He pronounced the dead warrior "a Christian," who "died fortified by the consolations of religion, having his trust in the saving mercies of the Redeemer." Deep, indeed, would be the satisfaction of the American people if they could be assured that these words were to be accepted in any other than a strictly Roman Catholic meaning. Many to whom General Sheridan was personally known would rejoice to know that the vices that marred his character had been put away in the name of Christ. But whatever his faith, the dead man was a born soldier, and in a warlike estimate was cast in an heroic mold. His battles are the general theme, but his report to President Grant on the White League insurrection in New Orleans January 5, 1875, was one of the most heroic of his official acts. He recommended the arrest and trial of the members of that lodge; and that Congress pass a law declaring them banditti. If they should be so declared he would be able to attend to them as they deserved. This report was barely four weeks after the Knight Templars from all over the Union had been drinking, dancing and carousing with these very White League murderers and bandits. The lodge raised a howl of rage at Sheridan, but Grant stood by him, and if a poltroon Congress could have been persuaded into a spirit of patriotism the Southern grievances of that time and since might have been greatly mitigated.

The New York Witness says: "It is a noteworthy fact that the Philadelphia Ledger, owned by George W. Childs, and the Chicago Daily News, owned by Victor F. Lawson, neither of which magnificent papers publishes a Sunday edition, are, notwithstanding this fact, the two most successful papers financially in the respective cities where they are published." May the evidences of their prosperity increase so long as they regard the law of God. The Chicago News has among other recommendations a fearless and independent spirit, strikes hard at the saloon curse, and at paltroons and boodlers in office.

A SUMMER AMONG THE CHURCHES.

BY PRES. C. A. BLANCHARD.

It may please the Cynosure readers to know something of my summer's work among the people of God. Presuming that it will be so, I send herewith such notes as now occur to me.

THE PLAN

was to have with a number of churches a meeting lasting from Tuesday evening to Sabbath night. After Tuesday evening there were to be three meetings daily, at 10 A. M., 3 P. M. and 8 P. M. The morning meeting was to be for prayer and conference, the afternoon for a Bible reading adapted to edify Christians, and the evening for an appeal to men to decide for God. I think it is the opinion of Christian people among whom I have labored that the plan is a good one, and that the meetings have been helpful.

HUNTLEY.

At this town I spent the first week. It is the center of a fine dairy region, and ships to Chicago hundreds of cans of milk daily. It is now a Prohibition town, so far as liquor is concerned, and recently the town council have required the stores which formerly sold goods on the Sabbath to remain closed on that day. The Congregational chuch, with which I labored, has a comfortable building and a good parsonage. Some repairs are needed, which it is proposed to have made in the near future. Our morning meetings were small, the afternoon meetings were larger, and, as was to be expected, the evening meetings were largest. In the homes of Mr. Butler and Mr. Sawyer I was a guest during my stay, and was kindly entertained. In the homes of other friends I visited, but the number of meetings prevented extended calls. With Deacon Williams, Bro. Huntley, the Misses Blanchard and others I pleasantly renewed former acquaintance. Some of my truest friends live in the country, and it was not possible to visit them in their homes, owing to the amount of daily work to be done.

was my second appointment. Here the meetings began amid the popping of fire-crackers on the evening of July 3. The town is beautifully located among rolling hills, near the Wisconsin line. Lake Geneva is, I believe, only ten miles away. A stream called the Nevesink passes through the village and turns a mill. The name of the stream I spell from pronunciation; it may not be correctly written. The celebration of our national birthday, of course, affected our meetings somewhat. Bro. Harbaugh, who was to have read the Declaration of Independence, being necessarily absent, I was asked to do so and to speak briefly, which I did. The principal address of the day was made by Rev. Mr. Cross, pastor of the M. E. church and brother of my old friend, Rev. J. G. Cross, now of Chicago. It was a thoughtful and helpful production. My home here was with Mr. Pease, a member of the Congregational church, who lived in New York at the time William Morgan was murdered by the Masons for revealing the secrets of Freemasonry. He and his Christian wife made me very comfortable during my stay. I was also entertained in the home of Mr. Cotting, who was an old Wheaton student, as also was Mrs. Cotting (nee Skeel), daughter of our Mr. and Mrs. Skeel. To Mr. and Mrs. Haythorn, Mr. and Mrs. Aldrich I am also indebted for Christian hospitality.

A GRAND ARMY FUNERAL.

During my stay here an old soldier was buried, and I had my first opportunity of witnessing the burial service of that secret society which calls itself "The Grand Army of the Republic." I never enjoyed the name, for it shuts out from this designation every man who does not choose to unite with a secret society. There is a real Grand Army of the Republic. It is great in number, more than two million strong, great in the principles for which it fought, the indivisibility of the Republic, the supremacy of the law, and the liberties of the race; great in the hardships endured, the victories gained, the result accomplished. It was an army, not a secret society. Its members are honored citizens of the nation which they aided to save. No patriotic heart can fail to be grateful to them. No reasonable request made by them can be denied with safety by any party. A Democratic House votes eighty millions for one year's pension list, and a President elected by that party signs the bill.

The soldier who was buried was, according to the testimony of his friends and neighbors, a kindly and worthy man. He was not, so far as my informant knew, a professing Christian. In the sermon no intimation of such profession was made. The burial service was led by the captain of the Post, a member of some Christian church, as I was told. Among the other members were, I believe, but few professing Christians. One of those who stood at the grave went fishing on the next day, Sabbath, so I was informed. The service was such as is common among secret societies. Kindly and touching remarks were made concerning the dead and the living. A hymn was sung which clearly taught that the deceased had entered on an eternity of blessedness. A prayer was offered which did not name the Saviour. Once Jesus was named, and shortly after the service was concluded.

WHAT IS THE OBJECTION

to all this? Simply that Christian ministers preach and churches profess to believe that the one who dies is not saved because he is a kind, honest, or worthy man, but because he believes in Jesus Christ. This is true, or false. If it is true, then Christian people have no right to join in burial services which teach that men who die without any known faith in Jesus Christ are taken to heaven. If it is false, then it should be given up. For a minister to preach all the year that faith in the Saviour is essential to salvation, and then contradict this preaching in the presence of many men who do not believe in Christ as a Saviour, is to muddle and confuse men's minds on that subject, where of all others it should be clear.

I closed the Richmond meeting as usual on Sabbath night. The attendance was good, though not large. On this evening, as several times through the week, rain fell, which of course reduced our numbers somewhat.

The pastor of the Huntly church is Rev. Walter Radford. He is an Englishman by birth, is accustomed to street meetings, and alive to do good. My stay and labor with him was pleasant. At Richmond Rev. H. W. Harbaugh is preaching. The church at Genoa Junction, Wis., is also under his ministry. His field is very pleasant in some respects, but difficult in others. He is seeking to build up the churches under his care, and has a measure of success. I trust that it may continue and increase.

SABBATH PROFANATION BY THE SUNDAY NEWSPAPER.

BY REV. HENRY T. CHEEVER.

The Sabbath-breaking enterprise of a prominent New England daily at the heart of the old Pilgrim commonwealth, should not escape the censure of the vigilant Cynosure.

Wherefore does the old representative Worcester Spy, founded in 1770 by that sturdy patriot, Isaiah Thomas; maintained by him with such vigor and effect through the Revolution, and all the after-struggles for a constitutional fabric of National Government; the firm supporter of impartial freedom, public morality and true religion under the upright Quaker, John Milton Earle; then so long the fearless advocate of emancipation in the anti-slavery and free-soil conflicts, under the able conduct of Congressman John D. Baldwin and scholarly Delano Goddard—what does this ancient and honorable veteran of dignified journalism do, but stoop in an evil hour to compete with chattering juvenile aspirants to popular favor, by beginning the issue on the 22d of July of a Sunday morning newspaper.

Thoughtful and reverend seniors, respected, conscientious fathers of the city, and honorable women, not a few, are astonished and shocked by the profane act, and either hang their heads for sorrow and shame, or lift up their voices in sharp reproof and condemnation of this conscienceless violation of the holy Lord's day. The bid for vulgar approval and patronage by the sporting rabble rout ("Our Sunday Paper Takes"), and the utter forgetfulness of God and humanity in the greed of gain, are painfully indicative of the low standard of morals to which this publishing firm seem to have fallen. To Christian people the announcement of a Sunday morning Spy was like a clap of thunder in a clear sky and serene heavens. It was, in fact, a bolt from "the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience;" and Satan's dire hatred of the Christian Sabbath is clear. But what will be the outcome and execution of this last Satanic stroke of enmity remains to be seen.

Naturally enough, the topic of consideration in most of the church prayer meetings the ensuing week was, "The Sabbath, and How Shall We Maintain its Sanctity." In the course of discussion the new departure of the ancient Spy in establishing a Sunday morning paper was severely and justly handled. At one of the weekly prayer meetings, that of the Central Congregational church, leave was asked, but it was objected to by one of the speakers, for introducing this expression of opinion:

"It is the sense of this weekly prayer meeting of the Central Congregational church of Worcester, after serious and prayerful consideration of the subject, that the issue of another Sunday morning newspaper in Worcester is a grief and insult to the Christian people of this city and county. Out of loyalty, therefore, to our Sovereign Lord and Saviour, who said with such authority, 'THE SABBATH WAS MADE FOR MAN,' we pledge ourselves neither to read, nor patronize, nor suffer to be served at our dwellings, a sheet that so profanes the Lord's day, and does what it can, by its gratuitous publication and distribution Sunday morning, to break down the sanctity of our New England Sabbath. And we call upon the churches of this city, and not less upon the friends of morality at large, to unite in effective reproof and resistance to this new assault upon the most important bulwark of Christian society, THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH."

In support of this proposal the writer said: It was the great question of the hour with the church of Christ in this country, how to keep our Sabbath from the secularizing and profane usages that were every day becoming more and more general and aggressive. What is the duty of the church and of the members individually, in regard to one of the very worst forms of Sabbath desecration, the demoralizing Sunday newspaper? Especially, what shall be our protest in Worcester against the Sabbath-breaking enterprise of the century-old Spy, in now thrusting upon its patrons, wholly uncalled for, an edition of Sunday morning? For myself, I hold that my duty is clear as a Christian citizen, a householder, a minister of the Gospel, and especially in my capacity as a church member,—my duty is clear to protest against this iniquity, and to make it disreputable and unprofitable, even as I try to make the liquor traffic illegal, disreputable and unprofitable.

In our position as a church we have a responsibility toward public immorality which we cannot shirk. We are God's witnesses. We are to stand for the right and censure what is wrong in the name of our Master. And there can be little doubt, such is now (thanks to our Living Head) the moral power, if not the numerical strength, of the church in this country, that if its condemnation of the Sunday newspaper should be unequivocal and united it could not stand. If, in particular, the churches and ministers of Worcester would openly taboo the Sunday Spy, and severely let it alone, it would fail in its unchristian enterprise, and the city and county of Worcester would be the richer for its failure, the good old commonwealth of Massachusetts the stronger and sounder, and the country at large the gainer.

May God forbid that the churches and ministers of Massachusetts shall, through a deadening apathy or cowardice, falter in duty at this emergency. Let them seize with grip and enthusiasm the providential opportunity that is now given them to withstand and protest with vigor and unanimity against the alarming encroachments at this moment going on upon our dear New England Sabbath.

I cannot better express the present situation at Worcester than by referring to the old Greek of Posidippus in the Dialogue between Traveler and Phidias's notable statue of OPPORTUNITY. The statue significantly says, standing in impressive majesty by the market-place:

"My name, I hear, throughout the world has flown;"
As OPPORTUNITY, to mortals, I am known."
"TRAVELER.—And who is she behind so sad of mien?"
"OPPORTUNITY.—REPENTANCE is her name. Still is she seen
To follow him, the wretch who weakly fails
To seize ME, when the timely hour avails
Of noble action! Thus she seems to teach,
BE SWIFT TO SEIZE THE GOOD WITHIN THY REACH,
LEST IT BE LOST FOREVER! Ask no more!
E'en while I speak, away, away I soar!"

The timely hour of noble action for the church of Christ in Worcester on behalf of the holy Sabbath has come. And as in the Acts of the Apostles of old, on the imprisonment of Peter, so let prayer be made without ceasing everywhere unto God, for her that she may be true to her opportunity for God's blessed Sabbath, that she may bravely hold the fort for the country at large.

It is to be noted among the items of interest at Worcester, that Rev. I. P. Lansing, pastor of Salem Street Congregational church, and late of the Methodist church at Brooklyn, N. Y., having six months ago given some very valuable discourses on the Sabbath and its abuses, is now delivering a series of sermons on "Romanism and the Republic, or Reasons for Considering in the Pulpit the Relations of Romanism to the Republic." They are presented at length, with negative and positive reasons, able, forcible, thorough and liberal. In the first discourse, the third of eight positive reasons for considering the relations of Romanism to the Republic was, that Romanism hates and fiercely attacks institutions especially dear to patriots in this country, and which institutions have been closely connected with national prosperity from the beginning of our history. Notice was taken of the late expulsion of certain histories from our public schools in Boston, and the dismissal of a teacher who dared to teach as history something contrary to Rome's claims of supremacy, as well as the fact of a lady teacher in one of the high schools of Connecticut having to sign a paper of retraction, drawn up by a Roman Catholic priest, for having said in a historical exercise that the Roman Catholic church just prior to the Reformation sold indulgencies which allowed the people to commit sin. The last of his reasons for the public discussion in the pulpit was that the wisest statesmen see in Romanism and its claims a great national peril. The series is to be continued with "The Jesuits and their Purpose." "Let Jesuitism, which has fled to America to found an empire on the ruins of the Republic, having been swept by edict from the Old World, here find a grave!"

The employment of Miss E. E. Flagg, as regular correspondent of the Cynosure from New England, is giving great satisfaction to friends of the anti-secrecy cause here. Her way of putting things is so original, her style so chaste and clear, her criticisms so just and accurate, her views so broad, her principles and judgment so firm and consistent, that the Cynosure will be permanently enriched by her contributions. Friends are saying of her what Milton addressed to "A Virtuous Young Lady" of his day:

"LADY, that in the prime of earliest youth
Wisely hast shunned the broad way and the green,
And with those few art eminently seen,
That labor up the hill of heavenly truth.
The better part, with Mary and with Ruth,
Chosen thou hast; and they that overween,
And at thy growing virtues pet their spleen,
No anger find in thee, but piety and truth.
Thy care is fixed, and zealously attends
To fill thy odorous lamp with deeds of light
And hope that reaps not shame!"

ROMANISM AND THE REPUBLIC.

"Let us be Catholics," said Bossuet, "but let us be Gallicans." It is in the spirit of this great French preacher that I, a Frenchman by birth and education, would presume to offer a brief criticism upon the Roman church and its relations to the American Republic. Let us be Catholics, but let us be Americans. Is it possible to be, at the same time, loyal Roman Catholics and loyal American citizens? I believe that it is not, and shall endeavor, in the following pages, to give the reasons underlying this belief. "If the liberties of the American people are ever destroyed, it will be by the hands of the Roman clergy." When Lafayette spoke these words there seemed to be nothing whatever in the actual state of things to give them warrant. The Roman hierarchy was very weak and very poor in these United States, and the churches were, for the most part, small missionary stations, widely scattered over an almost boundless territory. Power and influence it had none; but it had a system which Lafayette knew well, and he saw in that system a potency which made him fear for the liberties of the nation which he had done so much to establish with his treasure and his sword.

He had seen it in his well-beloved France as a mighty serpent, coiling itself around the national life and choking out the liberties of the people. This monster serpent, Ultramontanism, had crawled up out of the deep, dark Roman sea many years before, and, as in the case of the loyal Trojan priest, Laocoon, had wound itself around the Gallican priest at the altar, and was slowly but surely strangling the priest and his faithful children, the sons of France. No native-born American could have seen danger when Lafayette saw it. No one but a Roman Catholic, born and brought up in a Roman Catholic country, could possibly have seen any danger to the American Republic in the few missionary priests whom the Roman church had sent over to the new world in such a modest guise.

A good-natured contempt for such danger seems almost universal among the citizens of this great Republic. I do not like the role of an alarmist, but I believe I see danger ahead, and am willing to expose myself to some ridicule in the hope of arousing my fellow citizens to a sense of danger which, as I believe, threatens the American nation from the Roman church.

Look about you and see what the few poor missionary stations, in which Lafayette saw cause for alarm, have become. Behold the innumerable churches, cathedrals, monasteries, nunneries, seminaries, colleges and universities which cover the American continent from east to west, and from north to south. See the army of priests, bishops, archbishops and cardinals, all thoroughly trained under the most perfect discipline, and swearing implicit obedience—to the Constitution of the American Republic? No. Swearing obedience, in all things temporal and spiritual, to an Italian pontiff, who lives in Rome and issues his orders from a palace called the Vatican. Leo XIII. sits in the Vatican at Rome and commands his army of priests and prelates in America and Ireland with as much absolute authority as any Cæsar ever commanded his loyal legions in their subjugation of the nations of the earth. Lafayette saw but a few straggling outposts; we see the mighty army in solid column with banners flying, marching with firm step and steady eye, conquering and to conquer. But some one may say that they are the conservators and guardians of law and order, rather than a danger to the peace and safety of the liberties of the people. But is not this a comparative rather than a positive blessing? Is it not fair to ask why it is that the great majority of the dangerous classes are subject to the control of the Roman church? Is it not because they are her own children, the products of her system, if not of her teaching? Examine the police record of this or any other great American city and I think you will find that at least seventy-five per cent of the criminals are of Roman Catholic parentage. Is it, then, unreasonable to expect from the Roman church some restraining influence over her own followers? If, then, the non-Roman churches exercise little control over the dangerous classes, is it not because, for the most part, these classes have been born and brought up beyond the influence of their teaching?

I have no reason to doubt that the great majority of Roman Catholic priests in America mean to be, and believe themselves to be, good citizens of this Republic. But they belong to a system in which free agency is impossible. They are members of an army in which the strictest discipline is enforced, and the most prompt and perfect obedience is required. The commander-in-chief of this Roman army is naturally and most fittingly a Roman, not an American. What does the Pope of Rome care for the blessings of American liberty or American citizenship? The ambition of the pope, whoever he may be, is, always has been, and ever must be, universal conquest. In taking command of the Roman church he takes this oath. The Vatican claims absolute and supreme authority in all things temporal as well as spiritual; and every priest, bishop, archbishop and cardinal throughout the world takes an oath of perfect submission and obedience to the Pope as the supreme lord and master of all things. This being true—and let any priest or bishop affirm that it is not—is it not quite certain that the priest, whatever his private or personal opinions and feelings may be as an American citizen, must support the church—the Ultramontane system—as against the state, at all times and under all circumstances? Witness the case of the distinguished priest, the late pastor of St. Stephen's Roman Catholic church, New York. He was not permitted even the small privilege, as an American citizen, of being present at a political meeting of which his superiors did not approve. Do we not see, then, that the personal intentions and feelings of the Roman priest, however good, count for nothing when we are considering the attitude of the Roman church toward the state?

The American Constitution says that all men shall be free to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences. The Vatican says that liberty of conscience is "a pest of all others to be most dreaded in a state." It is hardly necessary, I imagine, for me to enlarge upon this point, as all who know anything about the Roman church know perfectly well that "heresy," according to that church, is the greatest of all crimes, greater than murder or adultery. Free speech and a free press are also among the fundamental principles of the American Republic, but nothing is more offensive to Rome. Where she has the power of control she has never tolerated, and she never will tolerate, either free speech or a free press.

The late cardinal archbishop of New York said that:

> Catholics in this Republic are as strongly devoted to the sustenance and maintenance of the temporal power of the Holy Father as Catholics in any other part of the world; and if it should be necessary to prove it by acts, they are ready to do so.

This, to a Frenchman, is pretty plain English. And these bishops speak as men having authority. Is one, then, to be laughed at as an alarmist for sounding out a note of warning, when bishops and cardinals, representing a vast army of ten millions of communicants, speak out against the Constitution of the Republic in such threatening words?

The Roman Catholic vote has already become so important an element in politics as to decide the fate of parties. Every Roman Catholic is in duty bound to enter politics as a Roman Catholic, not as an American citizen. The press of this country understands perfectly well that if it would have the support of the Roman Catholics it must say nothing in criticism, but everything in praise, of the Roman church, so that even now there is a practical restraint, if not a positive check, upon the freedom of the press.

The Roman church claims, in fact, to be a theocracy, and true to this idea she enforces, when she can, obedience to her authority in all things, social, political and economic, as well as in things religious, so-called. Has she not, within the past few weeks, asserted this political power in Ireland in the most positive and high-handed manner? Can there be any question as to the meaning of the Vatican Rescript, coming as it does in the midst of a fierce struggle of an oppressed people for political liberty?

Two of the greatest statesmen of this age have spoken out in plain, grave speech upon the pretensions of the Roman church.

Mr. Gladstone says:

> The pope demands for himself the right to determine the province of his own rights, and has so defined it in formal documents as to warrant any and every invasion of the civil sphere. ....Rome requires a convert who joins her to forfeit his mental and moral freedom, and to place his loyalty and civil duty at the mercy of another.

Prince Bismarck, in a speech delivered April 16, 1875, said:

> This pope, this foreigner, this Italian, is more powerful in this country than any one person, not excepting even the king. And now please to consider what this foreigner has announced as the program by which he rules in Prussia as elsewhere. He begins by arrogating to himself the right to define how far his authority extends. And this pope, who would use fire and sword against us if he had the power to do so, who would confiscate our property and not spare our lives, expects us to allow him full, uncontrolled sway among us.

There is one custom in Hindustan which may bear transplanting to America. When a young Hindu comes to a knowledge of the true God, abandons his idolatry and is taken into the company of Christian believers, he is at once rejected and ignored by his kindred and former friends. They even go so far as to perform funeral ceremonies, as if he were actually dead. What is the result? It is good, unmistakably good, if he is a man of conviction and not a coward. He is faced toward Zion, and the bridges that once spanned the gulf between God-worship and idol-worship are all burned away. He has no temptations to turn back. With us, however, the young man who is brought into the fold, and who desires to be regarded as dead to the world and worldly things, cannot always get his new position duly recognized. His worldly acquaintances and relatives may hold him back with familiar attractions and quietly assume that he can continue in unsanctified habits and practices, until the convert's soul is in a perfect torment of uncertainty as to his right and safe course. His ideas of godly living and worldly living are so mixed up, owing to his being beset by the blandishments of friends, that at the best he makes slow and uncertain progress in the Christian life. In such cases a trial of Hindu persecution would be a blessing. It would move him to cry out, from the depths of a full heart, "Thou, O Christ, art all I want."—Interior.

Benefit your friends, that they may love you still more dearly; benefit your enemies, that they may become your friends.

Make channels for the streams of love,
Where they may broadly run;
And love has overflowing streams
To fill them every one.

THREE AFRICAN LETTERS.

FROM THE CONGO.

Arthington, Stanley Pool, Congo River, Africa, May 26, 1888.

Dear Cynosure and Readers:—I simply rise to speak in meeting, so you may know where I am and what doing. The heading of my letter answers the first question in part, but I propose to give details.

I am engaged in putting the new boiler together for the missionary steamer Peace, which Rev. G. Grenfell brought from England last September. The difficulties attending transportation from the coast inland are many and great. We have only what you would call a trail for over 250 miles, and in many places this is hardly discernable, and progress is impeded by the grass in many places, and timber in a few. The rivers also are numerous, and some, such as the Luno-Imelo and Nkixi, very deep and dangerous.

A few weeks ago a caravan of Sierra Leone men proved the latter to be an unmanageable torrent, sweeping on to the Congo at the rate of seven or more miles per hour. They had put the boiler plate with their effects into the large canoe, and got in themselves, when the struggle began. The paddlers lost control of the canoe, and it was swept two or three hundred yards down stream, but had managed to get well to the east side, when, colliding with a tree, they were overturned and in danger of drowning. The plate was lost, and I am compelled to wait with the boiler two-thirds done until we can duplicate the plate.

I took nine Loangos the last of April and went to the place, and for two days worked hard, but could not find the lost plate. Another posse returned on the 24th of this month, after a long but unsuccessful attempt to recover the lost property.

Our old friends may be interested in a description of modes of travel, and so from my diary I copy the following:

Thursday, April 26.—Got my Loangos together and at 8 A. M. started for the Nkixi to search for the boiler plate. We reached Leopoldville in a hundred and thirty minutes (distances here are computed by minutes), and after a short visit with Mrs. Grenfell and Mrs. Billington moved on west for one hundred and eighty minutes to Ngomi's town, where we obtained a native house to store our goods in and sleep.

A native house is about 6x10, with 4-foot walls, or sides, and the roof is one-third or one-half pitch, all of grass and sticks or canes, tied together with split cane—no nails or screws are used. The door is simply a section made to swing or run like a shutter, back and forth. There are no windows or chimneys, and the fire is made on the dirt floor, so the smoke rises and blackens the inside until it looks as though it had received a coat of coal-tar or pitch. Some of these houses have an elevated department where "My Lord" sleeps, but the family squat in the dirt, or lie down in their rags and take their rest.

Friday, 27.—We got an early start after chop (breakfast), but our progress was impeded by the wet grass and the swollen condition of the rivers. In looking over our accounts found we had spent 12 ntako (brass rods, value 6 cents each, in full spent 72 cents) for fish and kwanga (native bread or pudding made of the cassava root). At night we lodged in a village 20 minutes west of Luluno river, but could get no other accommodations than a house. I fared better at Mfumus Mb's town, for the king gave me a dish of palm wine fresh from the tree, and a fowl, or nzuzu. He received in return two spear-pointed knives and three fathoms of cloth. The cloth would not clothe his numerous wives (he having ten, and for each a house), though a small amount goes a long way.

On our return trip we experienced difficulty at the ford of the Nkalama river, which by recent rains had become so swift I could not stand up against the current. Fortunately I had taken the precaution to go up stream a hundred yards or more, where a climber was stretched from shore to shore, answering the purpose of a rope by which one may support himself as he waded through the boiling waters. I had sent my monkey over by one of my men, and reached the middle of the river, when the smooth rocks and the swift waters prevailed and down I went; but, clinging to the climber, I soon regained my feet and made for the shore. I mention these incidents of travel because I think you are interested in how we get about. The dry season has begun, and the burning of the grasses will make travel some pleasanter.

I start for the coast the latter part of July, if spared; but as to whether I shall return to America in time to vote in the Presidential campaign of '88 I cannot say. I have missed the Cynosure's newsy columns quite a good deal, and shall be glad to return to civilization so as to know what is going on in the world. I have never learned whether the Senate confirmed Lamar as a Judge of the Supreme Court or not. We are beyond the limits of the postal union nearly 300 miles. Well, I must close. Hoping for your prosperity in both worlds, I am your brother in labor, EDWARD MATHEWS.

BRO. COLE AND HIS WEST AFRICAN WORK.

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone, July 3, 1888.

Editor of the Cynosure,

DEAR BROTHER:—Your not hearing from me for a length of time is not so much owing to want of something to say as want of time to say it. My home here is literally an hospital. We attend many times fifteen patients a day, and visit on the average eight sick persons every morning. Yet all this is a part of my church work, for I also preach very often twice on Sabbath, attend the Sabbath-school, distribute tracts, and conduct other weekly services of the church. I am not as strong as you saw me last, but I am resting on the everlasting arm of our Heavenly Father for strength and support, and looking toward the "Rock that is higher than I."

Our services here are very encouraging. Last Friday was our fast day, when I preached in the church to about 400 present, from Jonah 2: 7: "When my soul fainted within me I remembered the Lord: and my prayer came in unto thee, into thine holy temple." After the sermon we had a love feast; every one in the audience was eager to say something in praise of Jesus. We shouted and prayed, rejoicing in the Lord; and I can assure you that every one went home with a resolution to "trust in King Jesus."

I have been able to pay a visit to the Almamy, or Mohammedan Bishop of this district, in Fowiah Bay. It was a very pleasant one, and I was happily disappointed in being so warmly received by my people, many of whom, on account of my "apostasy from Mohammedanism," regard me as a "cast-away."

I took with me several copies of the Bible in Arabic, and Arabic religious tracts, all supplied me by the British and Foreign Bible Society, and the Religious Tract Society, of England.

The Almamy summoned about forty of his followers to his spacious, though humble hall, and there I distributed to them, by his permission, the tracts and Bibles. He was particularly anxious to know something about America and England. He wanted to know whether the Christian nations of those countries are as avaricious as those with whom he has been acquainted on the western coast of Africa. He wanted to know whether I had been to the whisky distilleries in England and America, and how many gallons are distilled per day. He wanted to know whether I have not been convinced that there is only one God, as my father believes, and not three Gods, Father, Son and Holy Ghost, as the white people unfortunately taught me to believe.

We spoke at length for two hours, and this interesting visit ended with a successful arrangement by the Bishop for me to speak to the Mohammedan populace this month in the public hall in Freetown.

In closing I send my Christian regards to all our friends in America, and would remind them that I am still in want of means to carry on the extensive field opened to us. Any amount forwarded me through the Cynosure will be thankfully received.

Your brother in Christ, J. AUGUSTUS COLE.

THE DREAD OF THE SECRET PURROW LODGE.

SHENGAY, West Africa, June 26, '88.

DEAR SIR:—The bill for books sent has been received. We could not use German tracts here, but those on temperance and secrecy we can use to good advantage. We circulate them freely among our school children and among Sierra Leone traders. The leaven is working. Purrowism, the giant of secret societies here, has received a fearful blow of late by the cruel war that recently swept over the country. The three principal leaders of the war were hung on the 6th by the British authorities. Their chief man was a leading Purrow man. His brother also, who had no hand in the war, is a Purrow man of high standing. He sympathized with his brother, and was heard by a number of persons to say that where William (his brother) died there he would die; and it was feared by all the country that he would carry out his threat. On the scaffold William said, "I leave all with God." His cousin, next in command to him, said to the crowd, "You all stand and witness us die this death, especially me. God is there." The drop fell and the three were launched into eternity.

There have been many rumors afloat, but no Purrow men have appeared as yet to avenge the death of their brethren. Even to-day reports are being circulated that they will surely come as soon as the moon is dark. We cannot tell what to believe. The only thing we can do is to trust God.

A few months ago an agent for one of the English trading companies hired a number of laborers in Freetown to go down the coast to collect India rubber, as he claimed, for the company. They ascended the Niger many miles, then started for the interior. The laborers numbered over 120. They had traveled several days, passed many India-rubber trees; food and water became scarce, and the men became suspicious that all was not right. They began to question their employer, who pulled a revolver and shot the first man. Then another who interfered was shot. The white clerks of the party came to the master's assistance, and twenty-two of the natives, I have been told, were killed and a number wounded. Sixty odd returned, and a Frenchman, that was a kind of a head man, returned with them and went on to England. Parties have been sent out from England to investigate. It is said that the agent was looking for a site to trade.

A chemist of Brussels engaged in Freetown a few weeks ago eleven Zimminie men, nine Mendis, and ten women of different tribes, all fresh from the bush. He has taken them to Europe to exhibit, dressed and painted in their native style, and to sing and dance native songs; it was a motley group. And this is the way poor Africa is being civilized by the Christians of Europe. J. GOMER.

THE LODGE IS DEFEATING PROHIBITION.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

Walter Thomas Mills, in his Chicago publication called The Statesman, quotes with strong approval these words from the Chicago Tribune: "It also remains that the strongest prohibitory law that can be formulated, with the most perfect machinery for its operation that can be devised, cannot be executed or enforced in a community where the judges who are to execute the law, the sheriffs who are to select the juries, and the mayor and aldermen who are to select and control the police, are elected from the ranks of those who are opposed to Prohibition. To claim that the law can be enforced under such circumstances argues either supreme ignorance or insensate folly."

We only wish to remind Mr. Mills that we place the same emphasis upon the equally important truth that the strongest prohibitory law that can be formulated cannot be executed "in a community where the judges who are to execute the law, the sheriffs who are to select the juries, and the mayor and aldermen who are to select and control the police, are elected from the ranks of those who are" members of secret societies, sworn or pledged to obey each other's signs and grips. To claim that law can be enforced when judges, sheriffs, jurors, defendants and criminals are bound by secret cabals to aid one another in difficulty, is, we believe, either supreme ignorance or insensate folly. We are satisfied that the greatest reason why prohibitory laws cannot be enforced lies right here. Careful observation in towns where prohibition is not enforced, and the testimony of others convinces us of this fact. Ministers, who were members of secret orders, have in conversation with me testified to this, that civic societies were the great barrier to the enforcement of law.

It is for this reason that in our Prohibition work we decline to be led by those who are defiled by the dark lantern, secret cabal tactics. Men or women who indulge such tactics, combining in secret cliques to take advantages of their fellows by dark, underhanded means, exhibit a moral obliquity of character inconsistent with the followers of Him who "in secret said nothing."

For this reason a growing number of the best Prohibitionists are organizing with the determination that when their ballots go in for a candidate, he is one who is clear from hat to heel from this secret society infection. We will place the names of all such candidates as the Cynosure says, "along side the match-box, where they can be well scratched." Why jeopardize the cause which has cost so much labor and sacrifice by committing it to unfaithful leadership? Let the friends of Prohibition be on their guard at this point.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

ROYAL KNIGHTS OF KING DAVID.

BY REV. A. J. CHITTENDEN.

"The Royal Knights of King David" is the title of a new order whose ritual lies before me. Its prominent features are:

1. A general copy of Masonry, evidently by a Masonic hand. Its title page says, "Compiled by Morris," and the page heading throughout is, "Morris's Ritual." [There is nothing to indicate whether or no this Morris is the late Rob. of Kentucky. The late "poet laureate," however, generally had his printing done in the North; this document comes from Raleigh, N. C.—ED]

2. A very conspicuous prominence is given to the name of Christ in its prayers, and to New Testament phrases in its ritual instructions. Various Christian hymns are badly grafted onto Masonic doggerel.

3. The symbols are mostly derived from the department of agriculture. They are the symbols used by granger societies and various orders of husbandry.

4. It professes to train men in the various cardinal virtues and to fit them for the "great Harvest," but with only an oblique recognition of the atonement, and with the usual narrow conception of the meaning of charity and neighbor and righteousness common to all lodges. Their golden rule is hardly equal to first-class barbarian hospitality, and their "good Samaritan" is remodeled to suit the other parts and principles of their profession.

5. The law of chastity is transferred from Masonry with unblushing simplicity of license, as will appear in the extracts below.

6. A sister lodge is referred to and provided for in the burial service, but their ritual is not given.

7. The oaths are cast in the Masonic foundry with some new patterns, and the penalties are a mild form of invocation to the symbols of death.

The following samples from the ritual will illustrate these characteristics:

"Come, brethren, let us all unite
And stay the hurtful tide;
Against the world we'll bravely fight
And spread our order wide.

"Where'er the Sun in radiance beams,
And man endureth woe,
Our order shall send forth its streams
Till o'er the world they flow."

This hymn seems designed to express the conceit and expectation of the clan, and evidently regards all other religious associations as not at all indispensible when their order shall get to flowing all over the earth.

The prayers are not very objectionable, if they were said apart from the lodge performances and teachings:

Almighty and everlasting God, the Creator and Preserver of all mankind, from whom cometh every good and perfect gift, and without whom nothing can prosper, we thank thee for permitting us to assemble again within these consecrated walls, dedicated to the practice of love, purity and charity. Pardon our manifold sins and preserve our souls from everlasting punishment....Direct us in all our transactions with thy most gracious power, and let the words of our mouths and the meditation of our hearts, while we wait before thee, be acceptable in thy sight....We ask all through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The manner in which the walls are "consecrated" and how they "wait before the ever-living God" will appear from the following extracts in the third degree:

Candidate, get down on your knees and make your last prayer, and when you have ended your prayer, cry out, Amen. Can you ride the goat? Get on. (Lay the candidate on his stomach.)

Candidate, you are taking a ride. Have you ever heard of Jacob's ladder?

I have.

How many rounds has it?

Three.

Name them. (Worthy conductor says to the candidate, "Faith." As the conductor pronounces the word Senior gives one blow with the paddle.)

What is the second?

Hope. (Blow with the paddle)

What is the third?

Charity. (Blow with the paddle.)

All say, Good! good member of charity.

Then the performers take the candidate to the center of the hall and touch him in the breast with the point of a sword, saying, "Stranger, now be calm and sober. When I count three you must jump for your life. Be sure to jump high and clear, for there is an abyss just before you, and one false step will cause you to lose your life. Brethren, be cautious; let him have a clear jump. Now, stranger, as I count 'one,' get ready; 'two,' be sure you are ready; 'three,' jump."

W. M.—Well done thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter into the joy of thy Lord.

I believe this acting exceeds any scenic blasphemy ever before invented. To appreciate the depravity of this sacrilegious performance, recall the prayer just repeated.

The charity schooling of the order begins in the first degree with a whack over the shoulder, supposed to be given with the "golden rule," a common twenty-four inch measure. Then follows the profound exposition of the mysteries: "Stranger, you are received here upon our rule which is given us from the Holy Scriptures, and is known as the 'golden rule.' The rule is an instrument used by the workman to lay off his work; but we, as Royal Knights of King David, are to make use of it in laying out our rules of life. This rule is twenty-four inches long, and can be equally divided into three distinct parts. [Why not also by two, four, six, eight and twelve?] The first part represents our duty to God, the All-wise Creator. To him all honor and praise belongs. The second part is our duty to our fellow men. 'Do unto all men as ye would that they should do to you.' But more especially should this apply to your brothers in this order. The third part teaches us the noble qualities of mercy and charity, especially towards the poor. Brother, remember the poor, and so may you keep it forever."

This remarkable tool is then used to "cut the Bible in two." After this edification the candidate swears to the usual Masonic specifications, with a somewhat original requisition for "twenty cents—not less," in aiding a distressed brother. The penalty for revealing or not performing the promises is, "May the ax of justice hew me down, and I be forever forgotten among the just."

The second degree obligation includes the twenty cents, and promises to shield and warn a brother at all times, and never to defeat him in any of his plans. (Not even if he had planned a burglary?)

The candidate feeling the need of a hymn is aided as follows:

"These are the joys which satisfy,
And purify the mind;
Which make the spirit mountain high,
And leave the world behind."

The single virtue that appears at this point seems to be that they are very easily satisfied. Just what it is to have one's spirit "mountain high" is not so clear; but it is open to a liberal conjecture. "Leaving the world behind" is certainly expressive to outsiders, the doors being properly guarded.

The third degree contains the jumping exploit, and the accompanying profanity already mentioned. It also pledges the candidate "never knowingly to have any connection with a brother's wife, or with his mother, sister or daughter, except in marriage." It is difficult to understand why the word "knowingly" should be introduced, unless the fraternity are presumed to indulge in a rather free style, so that they might make a mistake!

At the conclusion of this oath, the sickle of death is invoked to cut down the offender, and the suggestion is made more impressive by the closing Ode.

"Hark, hear the warning, brother,
Pause, think thy purpose o'er,
Our solemn laws and covenants
Are binding evermore."

Some of the verses used are evidently out of "job lots."

"Come, ye joyful brethren, come, Raise the song of harvest home;"

is amended in this fashion:

"All the world is God's vineyard,
Fruit unto his praise to yield,
The wheat and tares which here we sow
Into joy or sorrow shall grow."

I am reluctant to horrify the Christian so much as to tell that they have the first two verses entire of the precious hymn:

"Come, Saviour Jesus, from above,
Assist me with thy heavenly grace,
Empty my heart of earthly love,
And for thyself prepare a place."

The chaplain prays that the Lord will make the members faithful in their "work," so that when the solemn close of life shall come, and the souls of each shall separate from the body, "Thou wilt receive us unto thyself," being redeemed through Jesus Christ our Lord." All in "good standing" are entitled to the burial service. And the ritual for that occasion is in many parts very good.

But the ritual in general is a ceremonial compost of Christian phraseology, with puerile symbolism, audacious blasphemies, false benevolence, wretched parodies, licentious instruction, by inference, and pretended or provisional murder.

The free introduction of the name of Christ and the Redeemer in prayer, to give sanction to the other parts, is the very thing that carries the abomination to the climax. I have long had the opinion that Masonry without any Christ was so much the better for Christ and his cause than if his holy name were dragged into the lodge to decorate dog's play. And now that such a mixture has actually been made, if my sensibilities are of any value to me, I am certain that this new order, the Royal Knights of King David, while less barbarous in its penal phrases than old Masonry, has undertaken something that will surely take the salvation power all out of the name of the Saviour, by destroying its sacred associations in the minds of these deluded ritualists. The certain effect of thus using Christ's name and Word and the precious Christian hymnology will be to de-crucify Christ out of their sympathies, and, with this master-piece of some low order of devilism, precipitate these foolish souls into the natural abyss of the unpardonable sin.

—Bro. John Dorcas of Iowa, on his return from the Waterloo Convention, led the way for an excellent United Brethren delegation to visit the Cynosure—brethren Beaucamp, Howell and Phillips being of the number.

Reform News.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

NOTES OF THE NEW ENGLAND JOURNEY.

South Framingham, Mass.

The Boston Herald has a brief sketch of a "New Lodge Instituted" with seventy-five charter members. It ranks No. 2 Chevaliers of Pythias, and has a list of twenty-one renowned officers, "Supreme Chancellor Wilson" heading the list. Whether designed for converting or conquering the world is left to conjecture, but from the number and titles of its officers we may infer that its purposes are judicial, military and financial. The Boston Directory for 1888 gives 571 lodges to 223 churches, and this new comer adds another to the already long list of Satan's agencies for destroying the souls of men by the "deceivableness of unrighteousness." Where such a condition of things exists, it is no wonder that bullies and prize fighters are honored and awarded diamond belts, while ministers of Christ are fined and imprisoned for preaching the Gospel, and the very existence of free schools and free speech threatened with annihilation. It is just as natural as it is for the heathen in other lands who know not God to worship and serve the devil. Boston, once the "cradle of liberty," is in imminent danger of becoming the stronghold of intolerance, and who among her watchmen that "see the wolf coming" is uttering a warning cry? Bro. William Davis, who sought to clear his skirts of "blood guiltiness," and spoke boldly against the lodge system on Chelsea Square and Boston Common, is now serving out the eleventh month of a yearly sentence in jail. Such are the "tender mercies" of the city of the Hancocks, the Sumners and the Adamses, under Jesuitical ring rule.

Providence, R. I.—Bro. A. M. Paull is well and I am to be his guest at Riverside, by invitation, tonight. The Central Hotel near the depot is strictly prohibition, and its proprietor has cast off the yoke of bondage and is no longer in fellowship with unbelievers. Friends passing this way, please make a note of this. The list of lodges in this city is 201, of churches eighty-four, and public schools sixty. A prominent temperance man and fruit dealer here joined the Masons not long since. Subsequently the craft had a supper. Liquor flowed freely and some were overcome. When chided for their conduct they replied, "Why, Mr. H—— is a good temperance man, and he was there and helped pay the bill." Mr. H—— stoutly denies it, but the boys say he did, all the same. Christian Prohibitionist, when did you last grace a lodge "bout with your presence and pay your score for the "cup of devils" under the seal of "secrecy and silence?" When will you do it again?

A well-informed gentleman, who once wore the regalia, whom I chanced to meet, said, "The temperance cause is advancing in our city but the secret temperance orders are on the wane. A few years ago they could marshal a parade of 2,000 or 2,500 on short notice, but now they could not drum up a hundred who would be seen wearing their regalia on the streets. We mean work and not buncombe these days."

Bro. Paull has vigorous and positive convictions upon any question to which he applies his mind. He heartily endorses the New England agency and will do his full share to sustain it. He wants Miss Flagg to attend the Rhode Island State W. C. T. Union in September, and will put her in correspondence with the president of the Union.

Weatogue, Conn., Aug. 4.—Bro. P. Bacon knows the value of time and how to strike a nail on the head. I found him loading a wagon for Collinsville market, but ready to give a good account of Bro. Kimball's work and to hear what I had to say about New England work. He expressed his hearty approval and said, "I'll stand my share;" handed me $5 to use at my discretion, and drove off to supply his hungry customers.

Most of the churches, many private houses and the extensive manufacturing buildings at Tariffville are "empty, swept and garnished." The two "industries" reported as prosperous are the saloon and the lodge. Our old friend Nicholson is still making war on the beast.

Willimantic, Aug. 6.—Nothing could add to the cordial reception and hospitality tendered me by Bro. Conant, in which Mrs. Conant, "Grandma" and, in fact, the whole family heartily joined. Their elder son, George, recently "took unto himself a wife," who is a "helpmeet," indeed, and a benison to the whole family group. Sabbath was excessively hot, with occasional showers, and the attendance at services was limited. My only regret in reviewing this brief visit is that I could not do more to strengthen the hands and encourage the hearts of the faithful, and more fully reward them for the inspiration and aid so cheerfully rendered. May the Lord reward them an "hundred-fold."

New Haven, Conn.—I am not fortunate in finding the men I wished to see, as they are out of town, and so I have been strolling about the college grounds, and have found a resting place under the sheltering arches fronting on the back court, or lawn, surrounded by historic buildings. They are certainly grand, and worthy their wide reputation. Passing on York street near Elm I noticed a gloomy-looking, windowless structure of red brick, and calling at a store near by made inquiry as to its use. All the gentleman could tell me was that it was a "Society" hall. I passed along the side and to the rear, taking in the dimensions as nearly as I could, and should judge it to be about 50 feet by 25, 30 feet high, with a single opening of double doors. This is the department where pagan mysteries and Christless worships are taught to aspiring young men, a tomb in which are buried the manhood and Christian integrity of those who go beyond its portal. It is a fountain sending its polluted streams to hamlet and city, to pulpit and even to Congress, poisoning whatever it touches. How can the management of a Christian college tolerate such a "cage of unclean birds" under the very shadow of its classic halls? And how long will public sentiment endure such an insult to God, and snare to their sons?

CENTRAL LOUISIANA.

THE TRUTH HEARD GLADLY.

Alexandria, La., Aug. 3, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—I came here from Boyce July 27. This is an old city with 3,000 inhabitants, a large percentage of whom are colored. The lodge is very strong here. Shiloh Baptist church, Rev. Israel Thomas, pastor, is the only anti-secret church here. Bro. Thomas don't allow them in his church; but here, as in other places, the people are seeing the evils of secretism, and especially in the churches. The Cynosure and N. C. A. literature have heretofore been unknown in this place. There are two railroads coming in here; and river navigation makes the city begin to look forward for prominence. This has been a prohibition town for several years, but this year the lodge rumites have carried the vote for whisky again. There are seven churches, four colored and three white.

I met Rev. Woods, formerly of New Orleans, and he is entirely in sympathy with our reform work. I have distributed very many N. C. A. tracts, and had several private conversations on the secrecy question. The lodge opponents here, as in other cities, are afraid to be too out-spoken lest the lodge be offended.

I called on Rev. I. Thomas Saturday, and spent an hour in his pleasant company. He showed me his beautiful new church edifice. He anticipates building a school in the rear of the church. The property consists of a whole square of ground. Bro. Thomas has experienced some hardships since he left the Masons and began to rid his church of Baalism. But God has led him out victorious, and now he is held in high esteem in this community.

I next called on Rev. H. Wallace, the oldest M. E. preacher in these parts. He is an out-and-out Anti-mason, having never joined any other society saving the church of Christ, which he thinks is enough for a Christian. The people here are generally very kind, saving a few roughs of both white and black.

I preached Sabbath at the Union Baptist church, Rev. Geo. Washington, pastor, to a respectful congregation. I attended services at 3 P. M. at the M. E. church, Rev. A. J. Ford, pastor. He kindly received me and introduced me to his congregation, and recommended our work to them. This was more than I expected of a Mason. I preached at 8 P. M. to a good congregation at Shiloh Baptist church. My sermon was enthusiastically received. Through the kindness of Mr. Jenks Dickson and Mr. Nero Brown I was conveyed out to McNutt's Hill, eighteen miles, Monday evening, and met and preached to a large and quiet congregation at Mount Triumph Baptist church, Rev. Jos. Randall, pastor. Lodgery is not very strong about McNutt's Hill. I came back down Bayou Rapids eight miles to the Evening Star Baptist church, Rev. H. B. N. Brown, pastor, where I had expected to preach Tuesday night, but owing to a misunderstanding the appointment was not made. I returned back here Wednesday evening where an appointment was awaiting me at the M. E. church to speak on Moral Education. There is a law in this parish to arrest a man for galloping past the residences on Bayou Rapids; also another law if any man's hogs are caught on the public roads they are to be shot, and the owner suffer the loss. The colored men on this part of Bayou Rapids are very ignorant, and although Rapids parish is offering very liberal inducements to Northern immigrants, yet in some parts of the parish a colored man with the least intelligence endangers his life if he attempts to enlighten his race. Miscegenation seems to be very popular in some parts, or at least with Negro women and white men. I have been advised not to speak out too boldly against these sins in Alexandria.

I lectured Wednesday night at the M. E. church, Rev. A. J. Ford, pastor, to a very good audience on the benefit of Moral Education to the Negro. Bro. Ford heartily endorsed my lecture, also Rev. J. H. Ford, the A. M. E. pastor of this place, and commended it to the congregation. Rev. A. J. Ford asked that all who appreciated my lecture to manifest it by a vote of thanks. Every one in the house arose except one lady and one brother who was sleeping as though he was in his bed at home.

Crops in this parish are very good with few exceptions, but the caterpillars or cotton-worms have made their appearance in the cotton-fields, and the poor farmers are much perplexed because of these little visitors. Quite a number of colored people here are buying and becoming owners of their own little homes. Cotton is in full bloom and fast opening. The usual average is twenty to twenty-five boles or burrs to the stalk.

I preached last night at Union Baptist church to a very large congregation of eager listeners. I distributed tracts to the congregation after service. I leave here this morning for Chaneyville. I have received a letter of encouragement from Baton Rouge. I trust the N. C. A. Board will decide to hold the next convention in that city. Pray for our Southern work.

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A PATRIARCH'S BLESSING.

SENECAVILLE, Ohio,

DEAR CYNOSURE:—You have always been a welcome to me ever since you were first brought to my notice. I have read regularly and with unusual interest pondered over your pages for many years, and have desired that my name, though obscure, might be placed among the many others given from time to time as witnesses for Jesus, against the Masonic lodge and its kindred societies of mercenary men. These, of course, are not of God, but look more like some of the "devils" of which the apostle says, "We are not ignorant of his devices."

Having, during the last sixty years and more, carefully and prayerfully considered, in the light of personal observation and other unquestionable evidence, the character, claims and fruits of Freemasonry, the mother and mistress of nearly all the secret orders of our land, I have long since been thoroughly convinced that they are not only wholly unnecessary, but positively injurious to the cause of freedom and fairness; clannish and criminal in principle and practice, dangerous to our civil liberty and sacred institutions; a wilful waste of time and talents, a needless breach of domestic and social unity, and a deliberate violation of the great and glorious Christian principle of love and kindness to all mankind. This I offer deliberately, in the fear of God and high regard for human rights and human welfare, as my humble and earnest judgment, and in full view of my mortal end, which must soon come, as I am now within one day of my eighty-ninth year, and am waiting peacefully and patiently for my dear Master's call to come up higher.

The "National Christian Association" and its various agencies must ultimately succeed to spread "the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ" throughout all the dark regions of the land, and into the many "habitations of cruelty," which still unfortunately exist. In glad anticipation of the surely coming triumph of truth over all falsehood and shams and shame that now stare devout men and women in the face in our corrupt cities and larger towns, I pray and hope and wait, and do say and wish I could sing the following lines:

The consecrated mercy seat,
Where Jesus and his friends oft meet,
As in a sanctified retreat,
Each other heartily to greet,
In thoughts and words and feelings sweet,
Which make their fellowship complete.

Such fellowship we highly prize,
It helps our feeble faith to rise
Above the world—its pride despise—
Yet hear and heed its pauper cries,
And aim by help to give supplies,
In hope to meet beyond the skies.

(Rev.) WM. G. KEIL.

THE SOUTHERN COLLEGES.

The Cynosure publisher has been corresponding with some two hundred colleges and various schools for higher education to learn if books and other literature on the dangers of secretism would be received and suitably used in connection with other educational facilities. The following are a few of the replies received. They may be considered with profit:

ALLEN UNIVERSITY, COLUMBIA, S. C.

Out of a membership of more than two hundred students, we have none who are members of secret orders. We will not matriculate a student who belongs to any secret organization.

BEREA COLLEGE, BEREA, KY.

We shall be very glad to receive a contribution of books and papers to our library. We have two reading rooms, one for young men and one for young ladies. Books opposed to secret societies will be thankfully received.

CENTRAL TENNESSEE COLLEGE, NASHVILLE, TENN.

Personally I have never had much to do with secret societies, and have never been connected with churches where their influence has been felt, but I think our colored people are in danger of putting much more stress on their duties and dues to their various societies (and their name is legion) than to their churches. A library giving the dangers of these societies will be gladly placed on our shelves.

MARYVILLE COLLEGE, MARYVILLE, TENN.

We should be very glad to receive a library of books opposed to secret societies. Our faculty is unanimous against such organizations.

CLAFLIN UNIVERSITY, ORANGEBURG, S. C.

We should be glad to receive any of the publications of the National Christian Association. I am sure that books and papers on the line suggested would be highly appreciated Secret societies are not very common among the people of color, and I think that it is now time to give them such instruction as they need.

BISHOP COLLEGE, MARSHALL, TEXAS.

We would welcome every agency which will discourage the evils of secret societies.

BIDDLE UNIVERSITY, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Would be very glad of a gift of a dozen books or so opposed to secret societies. This country is overrun with such wasteful organizations.

TALLADEGA COLLEGE, ALABAMA.

We have six or eight volumes opposed to secret societies, contributed by Rev. Mr. Hinman. We shall, however, be glad of any additions to this style of literature you may contribute. They will be good for reference.

HOWARD UNIVERSITY, WASHINGTON.

About books on secret societies, we hold to free discussion on all subjects, and shall be happy to receive books of the character referred to.

FISK UNIVERSITY, NASHVILLE, TENN.

Fisk University would be glad to receive a supply of books on the subject of secret societies.

STORER COLLEGE, HARPER'S FERRY, W. VA.

A library of books opposed to secret societies would be acceptable and, I hope, useful. It is a subject on which the colored people have a good deal to learn.

NORMAL INSTITUTE, HUNTSVILLE, ALA.

Books opposed to secret societies would be very acceptable. Also, we shall be very thankful for any help in this line. It will meet a long-felt want, and will be productive of great good.

RICHMOND THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

A library of books opposed to secret societies would be acceptable to our institution.

CLARK UNIVERSITY, ATLANTA, GA.

We have a small library for use of students, containing about 2,000 volumes. We also have a reading room which the students support in part, with quite a good selection of papers. Any books will be very acceptable. The Anti-Society books will be very acceptable.

THE PSEUDO-AMERICAN PARTY.

The American party of California, though unsuspected by its honest, worthy and patriotic rank and file, has been heretofore the private property of the great railroad corporation of San Francisco. It was dead, but has revived and had a State convention recently in that city.

The convention commended Mayor Hewitt for President of the United States for the single reason that he allowed no foreign flags on public edifices in New York; resolved to prohibit aliens from selling liquors; to favor enfranchising all native born women of 21 years, who can read and write and who pay taxes; declared the saloon the great agency of corruption in politics and bossism, and promise for that reason to restrict it to the narrowest limits; objected to immigrants not in sympathy with our government; proposed to lower taxes on farms and raise them on luxuries; advocated protective tariff and the exclusion of cheap labor; supported free schools, and favored coast fortifications for the employment of American labor.

That last is one of the most sublimely asinine propositions ever made, and indicates that the concern is being fooled by its railroad bosses. If the government money is to be expended in millions for the purpose of employing American labor, why not use it in some useful way—in building homes for the American laborer, or in building public halls, gymnasiums, bath houses, colleges—in starting co-operative institutions, or best of all, in building government railroads and telegraphs to be the property of the people.

All these things or any of them would be a judicious and profitable use of the national finances! But the fortifications would be an utterly useless, worthless, crazy waste. Just as useless as building Chinese joss houses and pagodas, or a Chinese wall around the continent. We have no more need of new coast defences than we have to wear suits of barbed wire armour, or to load ourselves in our daily walks with an arsenal of revolvers, bowie knives and dynamite explosives.

The nation donkeying with coast forts would be as dudish and cowardly as the poor imbecile booby who has to go armed in the street. This country is not afraid to live peaceably and go unarmed, and it is to-day and has been for fifty years of all the countries of the world, the safest from foreign invasion or assault, because with the exception of Mr. Blaine, George F. Train and a few belligerent foreigners, we are a peaceable and neighborly people, and have no enemies abroad, and thus we have grown so strong that if we ever do have enemies they will never dare attack our coast or call us out to fight.

The great railroad company does not originate an American party, a Prohibition or a labor party, or other separate party, but as it generally owns the leaders of the two G. O. P.'s it makes a great effort through its Political Bureau and secret agents to control and own all the other parties.—Los Angeles Censer.

LIVING CHURCHES.—The wish to spread the knowledge of the love of Jesus Christ is a strong, overmastering impulse in every man, in every woman, who really knows and loves him. The absence of any kind of anxiety for the spread of the truth implies spiritual paralysis, if it does not imply actual spiritual death. The man who knows the happiness of peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ cannot but desire that other men should share it; and this desire, in its higher, its stronger, its more heroic form, is one of the greatest gifts of God to his church. Churches are generally living churches in exact ratio of their missionary activity.—Canon Liddon.

LITERATURE.

Mr. Henry M. Huguniu has written a little work on "Necromancy," which is to be issued by C. H. Jones, of this city, at an early day. It treats of the origin, operations and consequences of spirit communication, and proves its evil character by divine revelation, observation and the author's personal experiences. His former treatise on "Spirit Possession" has enjoyed a fine circulation.

Babyhood for August is, as usual, full of seasonable hints and practical advice to young mothers. In the department of "Nursery Problems" alone a great variety of interesting topics may be found, such as "Sucking the Tongue," "Quinine as a Cause of Deafness," "Slow Gain in Weight," "Throwing up Milk After Nursing," "Coated Tongue." Rings Under the Eyes," "Time for Weaning," "Slow Teething," etc. It is very desirable that Babyhood, whose many useful suggestions and careful medical advice make it indispensable to every young mother, should be found in every nursery.

The New York Daily Graphic has started a new feature, "Our Poet's Corner," a department "expressly designed for the profit and celebration of our poetic contributors," in which it is intended to publish all the verses sent that paper. This is, we believe, the first attempt of any metropolitan daily to encourage the development of American poetical genius.

Ecience (weekly) has recently contained a number of articles on the movement in this country and England for the dissemination by lectures, tracts, debating clubs, etc., of such information as will tend to make more intelligent citizens of those following the discussions. The columns of the paper following the government scientific work are invaluable to every thoughtful man or woman, and the electrical features are likely to prove of greater and greater interest as they develop.

The Swiss Cross for August contains an interesting article, well illustrated, on the "Flight of Birds." This will doubtless help many in understanding this mysterious power of our feathered friends. Besides other articles of interest there are given the usual reports from the Chapters of the Agassiz Association.

The August issue of the American Garden of New York, is largely taken up with this subject of the culture of water plants, including various beautiful foreign species. The articles are finely illustrated and the number as a whole should have a marked influence upon the development of this interesting phase of gardening.

LODGE NOTES.

A petition thirty feet long was sent to Governor Oglesby lately, asking for the pardon of Dr. C. H. Bean, of Cherry Valley, who was sent to Joliet for one year for criminal assault. Bean is an Odd fellow.

Says the Baptist Messenger of Jackson, Miss., "W. H. Stewart, P. G. M., is chairman of the Committee on Foreign Correspondence of Grand Lodge of F. and A. Masons, of Kentucky. He is also editor of the American Baptist."

The General Committee of the Brotherhood of Engineers is to have a grand meeting in Kansas. The chief object of the meeting is to discuss the advisability of transferring the headquarters of the General Committee from Chicago.

The Roman Catholic rulers of Boston seem to be applying the teaching of their church in the administration of affairs. The Public Library is open every Sabbath, but was closed on St. Patrick's Day. This is but one of many ways in which the man-appointed days are given higher honor than the day which the Lord hath made.

It is announced from Panama that the Government of Columbia has entered into a convention with the Papal See by which the universities, colleges, schools and other educational establishments and all public and private education and instruction shall be organized and directed in conformity with the dogmas and principles of the Roman Catholic Church; that religious instruction in that creed should be obligatory.

George F. Farmer, the permanent secretary of Unity lodge of Odd fellows, Springfield, Mass., is $2,500 short in his accounts, although the local papers have kept still about the matter. Farmer has been permanent secretary of the lodge since its organization, nine years ago, but has usually presented his balance sheet to be audited, instead of bringing in the books semi annually, as the rules of the order require. The books show that they have been tampered with, but what has become of the money is a mystery.

Lieutenant Governor John C. Smith, who hoped to succeed to the higher office, is not only Grand Master of Masons, Past Grand Secretary of Odd-fellows and Past Grand Commander of Knight Templars, but Major General of the Patriarchs Militant of the Odd-fellows, and was lately the chief officer of this order in what is now termed the Division of the Lakes, which comprises Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Illinois, Dakota Territory, Iowa, Missouri, and further territory as far west as the Rocky Mountains. He was a few years since giving his time to the establishment of lodges.

Chinatown, New York, celebrated the first anniversary of the founding of New York colony, July 23. Tom Lee and Gon Hor, the grand master of the Chinese Freemasons, had charge of the tickets, and a number of lawyers, Sixth Ward politicians and their wives bought them. The management was entirely under the anti-Christian element of the Chinese, and no converted Chinamen was allowed to attend, as there is jealousy between the two branches. When the Sunday-school Chinamen, who are nearly all laundrymen, have had their excursions they have invariably excluded the merchants and the Joss worshipers.

The Order of Druids unveiled a monument at Waldheim cemetery near Chicago a few days since. It is intended to mark the last resting place of the members of the order and their families. A large number of the members of the order were present, escorted by the Apollo Arch Chapter uniform rank of the order. After a song by the Orpheus Club, Mr. August Trou delivered an address giving the origin of the order, tracing many of its symbols from the mystic rites of the old Druids, and outlining its general objects and methods. The party held a picnic on the grounds near the "Altenheim," where ex Grand Master John C. Meyer delivered an address.

The work of the boycott and the secret Irish societies is told in this dispatch, July 29, from Dublin: "John Forhan, a boycotted farmer, while returning from Tralee with three laborers in a car today, was shot dead near Listowell, Kerry, by two disguised men, who jumped over a fence, fired, and escaped through a wood. While Farmer McAuliffe was working with a laborer named Ruare in a field at Glounamukle, Cork, on Saturday, a man disguised with a white cloth entered and demanded their names. Ruare gave a false name. He was ordered by the stranger to fall upon his knees, and he did so, whereupon the stranger shot him twice, and he died an hour afterward. The stranger escaped."

The Omaha Daily World of the 21st of July says that the instituting of a body of the Scottish rite of Masons in that city by parties outside of their jurisdiction, threatens to make trouble, and the lodge is holding excited meetings. One of the prominent members of the old consistory said, "By the starting of a pretended new body of the ancient and accepted Scottish rite a fire has been kindled, not likely to be burned out. Nebraska has for thirty years belonged to the southern jurisdiction and working under General Albert Pike, as grand commander; and what is termed as the Corneau rite, was established as a new organization. This is claimed by all bodies of Scottish rite Masons as clandestine, and is not recognized by the body at large in this country or in Europe. The Masonic dictionary says in 1818, in New York city, he (Corneau) established a spurious body. This Masonic charlatan, who claimed the right to organize bodies of the ancient and accepted Scottish rite, was expelled and his pretentions denounced by the legal supreme council, and he and his followers have for years given much trouble to the Scottish rite bodies. The head of this new organization belonged at one time to the rite of Memphis, which was declared by the grand lodges here and elsewhere as a spurious and clandestine organization. If this new body is right, why did they not ask for recognition in the proper way? If all over the country the costs of these degrees are $280 how can they be obtained properly, as they were here, for from $5 to $25? These degrees generally require up to the thirty-second degree over two years, and the thirty-third degree is seldom conferred except as a great honor: and yet all these degrees were obtained in two days. It looks certain that 'there is something wrong in Denmark.' In addition to the foregoing facts, the Masonic grand lodge of Ohio, at its December session, 1887, declared the Cerneau bodies to be spurious and clandestine; and further declared the northern and southern jurisdictions of the A. and A. Scottish rite, as represented by General Albert Pike, to be the only legally organized body of the kind in the United States."

STYLE.

The most fashionable color, at present, is the hue of health, and it will never go out of style. Its shades and tints are various, but all of them are exceedingly becoming. It is perfectly astonishing what a change is being daily wrought by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in the looks of sickly women. Sufferers from any sort of "female weakness" or irregularity, backache or nervous prostration, should give it a trial. All druggists.

Young, old, and middle aged, all experience the wonderfully beneficial effects of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Young children, suffering from sore eyes, sore ears, scald head, or with any scrofulous taint, become healthy and strong by the use of this medicine. Six bottles, $5.

Clark—"Well, I will declare! Smithers, how you have picked up lately." Smithers—"Yes, yes; things were bad enough with me a little while back, but I happened to run across the advertisement of B. F. Johnson & Co., of Richmond, Va., and they put me in position to make money right along. If you know of anybody else needing employment, here is their name and address."

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 16, 1888.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

SAXTON'S RIVER, Vt., August 6, 1888.

TO THE READERS OF THE CYNOSURE:—The clear, bracing air of my native hills, their sweet, soft, cold spring water gushing from the summits, and running down in brooks, have, with God's blessing, restored me to health and action. So now you will hear of our cause. The people of Vermont are among the freest-minded on earth; and the lodge system has most to fear from them.

When I left Vermont in 1832 a Freemason could not be elected "hog-reeve." Rhode Island, Vermont and Massachusetts had laws prohibiting and punishing the imposition of Masonic oaths. That year, 1832, Garrison formed "The New England Anti-slavery Society." The lodges fell in the North, even to the extreme West. The Grand Lodge of Michigan went down, and stayed down thirteen years. The lodge went South and became a Southern institution. All the Northern statesmen, Webster, J. Q. Adams, etc., were Anti masons. But the solid, slave-holding South, with the secret Masons and money of the North, defeated Adams and elected Jackson, who with his Cabinet, Livingston, Eaton, Poinsett and Barry, were all elected honorary members of Federal Lodge, No. 1, District of Columbia. Every lodge-room of the South then became a council-chamber of treason. But Jackson's patriotism was stronger than his Masonry; and he swore that he would hang the nullifiers "higher than Haman" if they attempted to dissolve the Union by secession. That postponed it until 1860, when eleven States seceded. While our "boys" were fighting, the lodge-leaders, who hate all government but their own (see Seward's address to the people of New York), lay low and kept on initiating. And by promising our Union soldiers favors from rebel Masons if they would join their lodges, they have brought back Masonry and her whole dark brood into power without answering one argument or disproving a fact of Morgan Anti-masonry.

In ignorance and in an evil hour the Vermont churches, except the Baptists, took no organized action against Masonry. They relied on the testimony of the old Andover Faculty, etc., and the Anti-masonic party. But lodgery is a plain substitute for Christianity, and political action cannot cure a religious evil, and the Vermont churches are now undergoing disintegration by the secret lodges, which now here boldly assure their dupes that they can fit for and send men to heaven without Christ! It is to meet and change this state of things that we are in Vermont, and hundreds of God's children are praying for our success.

Rev. Joseph A. Leach, who has embarked in this cause, is of an excellent parentage; pastor of a large Congregational church in Keene for years; chaplain in the Union service on the staff of Gen. Thomas; fearless and popular with his commander and the troops; liberally educated, owning a splendid library; respected and strong at home, Mr. Leach seems chosen of God to aid in bringing the churches of Vermont back to the clear, Scriptural, sound state they were in in 1832, when the State set her foot on and crushed the serpent of the lodge. By his procuring, four churches have already been opened to the anti-secret discussion, viz., two at Saxton's River, in Grafton and Cambridgeport.

Yesterday Mr. Leach preached against the lodge in the Congregational church at the village of Cambridgeport. He took "Freemasonry Illustrated" into the pulpit; and when he had preached to the people "Ye must be born again," he read the Royal Arch oath in which Masons swear to stand by each other, be they "right or wrong;" and then asked the congregation what hope there was of their being "born again" in such lodges! The audience had Masons and other secretists in it, but the power of God melted men to tears, and, as the people did with Paul, they asked "that these words might be preached to them next Sabbath day." (Acts 13: 42.)

All the pastors, thus far, have been with us in their pulpits and assisted us. In short, we have every encouragement to pray and look to God for success in this work; and we specially and earnestly request the Cynosure readers to "pray without ceasing" for the work in Vermont. I am hoping to meet the ministers of Addison County Association in Middlebury Aug. 28.

We are here among the children and grand-children of my father's friends and neighbors. The hills and valleys, all green and beautiful as the dreams of my childhood, with air pure as Paradise, and springs like those which murmur in Milton's picture of Paradise, fill us with joy in God; and if prayer ascends continually for us we hope soon to report that God is moving mightily on this interesting people. J. B.

HOW STAND YOUR CANDIDATES?

NOTES OF THE ANTI-SECRECY LEAGUE FOR MICHIGAN.

The Prohibitionists of Michigan have been, on the whole, fortunate in selecting excellent men for their candidates, so far as these have been given to the committee of the League. Three candidates have not been heard from. They are the candidate for governor, A. B. Cheney, of Sparta; for lieutenant governor, Stewart B. Williams, of Saganaw; for auditor, D. A. Waterman, of Detroit. Will not the readers of the Cynosure in Michigan make personal efforts to question these candidates and secure from them as uniform a denial of the claims of secretism as the letters below:

I am not a member of any secret society, and believe the tendency of all such organizations is bad. Respectfully yours, SAMUEL CLUTE.

Mr. Clute is candidate for Attorney General. He resides in Ionia. Anti-masonic voters may safely rely on a man of such convictions, that no lodge grip will swerve him from his duty to the people.

Mr. Wise of Lansing is candidate for Treasurer. He is now treasurer of the Prohibition State committee. With his views of the lodge we take direct issue, but give them at some length, since they reveal to us a Mason who is infinitely better than the system to which he is obligated, and who only needs the light from the Word of God upon this subject to make him abhor the lodge. Mr. Wise has evidently made no critical examination of the Masonic oaths and ceremonies, but accepts the statements of Masonic text-books and orators, without ascertaining that they are a stupendous deception. We beg of him to carefully consider this matter immediately, and so change his views that the best men in all parties may be able to vote for him in November; as they surely cannot now.

Replying to yours of the 19th, would say, I have taken the three degrees of Masonry which make me a Master Mason. I have obligated myself to perform certain duties toward a worthy brother Mason and his family, but they are no greater or more binding on me than those which civilization demands towards every worthy human being in the world. The only fault which I can find with them is, that they are too narrow and limited in their scope and application. They ought in fact to include the whole human race, or in other words, every man should be a Mason. If this were the case and the precepts of Masonry exemplified in the daily conduct of all men, this world would indeed become a paradise. As it is, I have known of no evil that has resulted from Masonry, but believe it has exerted a beneficent influence upon society in general, although I can readily believe that it may have been prostituted to base, dishonorable purposes. When the church and Christianity itself have been used to cloak the vilest crimes, it is no wonder that other and inferior institutions have afforded the means for the accomplishment of evil deeds. I was informed upon entering the order that I should find nothing in the obligation that would interfere with the duties which I owed to my family, my neighbor, my country, or my God, and I found that information correct. You may probably ask, would I, knowing what I do, join the order, if not a member at present. My answer would be, I would not, for the reason that my relations to humanity, either individually or collectively, would not be affected thereby, and as far as social advantages go, I prefer to seek them elsewhere. Very respectfully, ALFRED WISE.

Mr. Hagle, named for Secretary of State, also writes a very candid letter from Columbiaville. On his position the same criticism can be made as above. His principles are not those of the lodge, but of the Cynosure, of the testifying churches, and of the whole Christian, American opposition to the secret societies. What can such a man have to do with grips, winks, secret obligations, religious rites performed by unregenerate men, guarded doors, paraphernalia, etc., etc., that characterize the secret lodge system, Good Templars and Knights of Labor included? We believe Mr. Hagle will be true to his convictions, and hope to hear soon that he renounces his connection with these orders. His letter we quote fully below:

I am free to say that I am not a member of any secret society, unless the I. O. G. T. or the K. of L. may be so considered. I have never been radically anti in anything, perhaps, unless it is anti saloon. I may be considered anti-saloon with "a vengeance." I have never studied to know anything higher or better (beyond my own home) than to be a real Christian and a true citizen. These make opportunities for the exercise of the highest and freest manhood. No secret vows can add to these duties anything more noble or unselfish. These duties come within the scope of the text, "Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's and to God the things are God's." "Collective imbecility" is a thing which I have not yet learned socially or politically, or as a society man. Individualism is the need of the times. To serve God and my country well, to discuss religion and politics openly, expresses my views. No cliques, or rings, social or public, and no private axe to grind, are my sentiments. When I cannot succeed in these, I am willing to go down. Yours in candor, PETER N. HAGLE.

Professor Montgomery, nominated for Superintendent of Public Instruction, may be safely intrusted with the vastly important interests of that office, if his intelligent and manly letter is any indication of his qualifications for it. His views are consistent with those of the ablest and best of the Christian patriots of our nation:

I have never belonged to any secret society or other fraternity, except that during the late war I was a member of the Union League for a short time. I question the real utility of any and all of them. They compromise a man's personal liberty, and generally place him under obligations of such nature that circumstances are likely to arise which compel him to violate the obligations or disregard the dictates of his conscience. Christianity recognizes the brotherhood of humanity. No society should make the limits narrower. True manhood and dignified self-hood cannot be fettered by lines marked by signs and passwords and pins. Hoping that the above will sufficiently answer your inquiries, I remain yours truly, J. MONTGOMERY.

The candidate for Commissioner of the State Land Office, Mr. Warren of Ridgeway, is also a candid American, who may be relied upon. He writes:

I never have belonged to any secret society; never having a desire to. However, am not known as an opponent of secret orders, having never been impressed of their danger and iniquity as some seem to be. I know that those who substitute Masonry and the like for religion will in the great day of accounts find it of no avail. Any documents bearing upon this question I would gladly read and give the consideration desired. Yours in confidence, G. P. WARING.

It is due to Michigan voters that the standing of their other candidates be understood as frankly as those above.

We wish to repeat the request made before to all our readers, that the candidates of all parties be questioned. Write yourselves. The oftener a candidate is called upon for his position on the lodge the better. Send also the names and addresses of all candidates for national offices to W. I. Phillips, superintendent of the Anti-Secrecy League, at this office. And please attend to this matter promptly. Better than all, use your best efforts to secure the nomination of men unsworn to the lodge.

—Rev. Joel Swartz, D. D., our Gettysburg, Pa., contributor, writes a very entertaining article in the Independent, recalling his conversations with General Longstreet of the rebel army, who was his guest during the late reunion of both armies.

—The New York Independent of the 2nd instant has a long and flattering obituary of Courtlandt Palmer, the infidel over whose body the notorious Ingersoll pronounced his last funeral oration. But the Independent would be offended should it be charged with aiding to spread infidelity.

—Rev. M. A. Gault, who has given our readers most valuable information respecting the relations of lodgery to Prohibition, is to make Chicago his headquarters for a short time, and will carry on National Reform work in the surrounding country. His article in this number should be read by every Prohibitionist.

—Secretary Stoddard reached Washington on Thursday to resume his efforts in that city. His letters this week from various points in New England prove that no "grass grew under his feet" while away from the national capital. Meanwhile Mrs. Stoddard proved a very efficient lieutenant, and held the fort in a very spirited manner.

—Bro. Hinman left Chicago for Ohio on the 4th inst., as we tried to tell our readers last week, and the note, with several others, found no room. He went direct to Oberlin to visit his family, lately removed from Washington Four years have passed since all were together. They are now located in a pleasant home. In Oberlin and vicinity two or three brothers and sisters of Mrs. Hinman are living.

—Rev. C. C. Foote, of Detroit, has been for some two months with his sick soldier son in Iowa. An army wound is yet a cause of great suffering. The arm has been once amputated, and it was expected the painful and dangerous operation must be again performed. Father Foote returned last week to his Detroit home quite broken down in health and unable to endure any exhaustive effort. May his disability be soon removed.

—A public conference on the Christian principles of Civil Government was held under the auspices of the National Reform Association, at Ocean Grove, N. J., on the 11th inst. The Sabbath question, the School question, and the Christian Reformation of our Marriage and Divorce Laws were discussed by the conference. Rev. Herrick Johnson, D. D., of Chicago, Rev. Prof. A. Rittenhouse, of Dickinson College, and other eminent speakers delivered addresses. A similar conference will be held at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., on Thursday, the 16th instant.

—The tenth annual temperance assembly at Silver Lake, Wyoming county, New York, is now in session, from the 10th to the 20th of August. John N. Stearns, whom our readers know as a temperance man with Masonic principles, is one of the managers. Perhaps through his influence it is arranged that the 14th shall be Good Templars' day, with a principal address by Dr. Oronhyateka, the 32-degree Indian Freemason from Canada; and Friday is inscribed to the Sons of Temperance, with Walter T. Mills, who now writes "Hon." before his name, in a prominent place. These, we hope, are but specks on the fair face of the assembly, as General Fisk, Sam. Small, Col. Bain, and a number of other speakers whose temperance principles are uncontaminated with a greater curse that the saloon, appear on other days.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, Aug. 10, 1888.

Interminable debate on dozens of subjects and little or no action, is the order of each daily session in Congress at present. Among topics of recent discussion may be mentioned public building bills, the question of looking up old property of the late Confederate States, the General Deficiency Appropriation bill, which touches a variety of subjects; the bill for the relief of the Union Pacific railway, involving 93,000,000, more or less, which the Government is trying to collect; the fortifications business, flags, pensions, vetoes, money to enable the Geological Survey to ascertain and report to what extent the arid regions of the United States can be redeemed by irrigation; the Fisheries question, and even the threadbare tariff comes up occasionally for a share of debate.

The Senate has spent several days this week in open executive sessions over the Fisheries Treaty, and Senator Edmunds renders himself conspicuous by absence whenever this damp subject is brought forward. He was so much opposed to discussing the treaty with open doors, that he registered a vow he would not be present during the proceedings he so thoroughly reprehended. Up to the present he has kept his vow. As soon as the Fisheries Treaty is laid aside, Mr. Edmunds walks into the Senate Chamber, and participates in all the other business.

In army circles the project of making Arlington's 1,200 acres a grand national park is being favorably discussed. It is proposed that the Government Barracks be removed from the low grounds of Washington to this park. It is further proposed that residences be constructed by the Government upon sightly places of the park, for the summer homes of the President and the members of his Cabinet, giving them an opportunity to enjoy the pure air, pure water and grand views of this splendid suburb of the National Capitol, through which will pass the grand national highway to Mount Vernon and the tomb of Washington. The Government has the money, but Congress may be very slow to see fit to appropriate it.

Every one knows that at the beginning of the present term both Houses of Congress were flooded with petitions and memorials from all over the country, praying for the entire abolition of the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia, and that these were referred to their appropriate committees. It is also known that several bills were introduced to carry this request into practical effect.

Last May the Senate committee on District affairs decided to report favorably a high license bill for the District, and to Senator Spooner was entrusted the task of presenting the report. The committee was not unanimous for the bill, however, a minority favoring absolute prohibition, and it was expected that when the majority report was offered, the minority would also present their views, and urge the passage of a prohibitory law.

Nearly three months have elapsed and nothing has been heard from the License bill. Why Senator Spooner has delayed in presenting it is unknown. It is true he has been away from the Senate on business a good part of the time since the bill was entrusted to his charge, and he has repeatedly said that he has been prevented from so doing only by continued absence and a want of time in which to complete the report. The most probable reason for delay is that the committee, or rather the majority of its members, have decided to reconsider their action, and allow the situation to remain exactly as at present. But even if the bill should be reported to the Senate, with the tariff bill to be considered now, there is almost no chance of its being acted upon this session, and matters are likely to remain as they are. *

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The Catholic Abstinence Union—A conundrum—Masonic poet laureates—Mrs. Barnes and the Boston Board of Police—New England N. C. A. matters—Boston's imprisoned preacher—Let the light be turned on.

The Catholic Total Abstinence Union, now holding its eighteenth annual convention in Boston, is taking up considerable space in the newspapers; I will not say more than the actual good it has done warrants, for on this point I have no correct data, but less by far than the excitement over the public school question takes up in these same dailies, though it is everywhere being discussed. Rev. J. W. Hamilton, Rev. Dr. Dorchester and Rev. Dr. Moxon have all given stirring sermons to large congregations on the imminent danger that our free schools, the most important of our American institutions, will pass under sectarian control. It is quite possible that the Jesuit party hope to made a diversion in their favor by this display of temperance sentiment. That there are many sincere temperance men and women who are Romanists nobody doubts, least of all the writer; but it is by her record in general and not in particular that the Catholic church must stand or fall. A part of Boston's Irish Catholic Council were opposed to entertaining the Union, being seized when the question came up with serious qualms about so appropriating the city's money! This sudden conscientiousness in the men who squandered $18,000 out of the public treasury on wine, cigars, and other "extras," at the Kapiolani banquet last summer, is truly edifying; but when we come to consider the fact that nine-tenths of the saloon-keepers in Boston belong to the Catholic communion, the whole question takes on an aspect of farce. Why does not the church excommunicate these men? Is it because their money helps to build her cathedrals, keep up the gorgeousness of her ritual, and sustain her priesthood? Is she afraid of the rum power, this haughty Babylon the Great? or through the Jesuit party, which uses the vices and virtues of men indiscriminately, really one with it? Bishop Keane, the rector of the Catholic university at Washington, "exhorted the Union to seek temperance reform through the way of Catholic faith, Catholic piety and Catholic organization; and if any man arose among them to point out a way other than this, let the brakes be put down upon that man, and if he persisted, let him be cast out from among them as an enemy of the truth." This sentiment, which was applauded, carries one back to the days when Galileo found out the secret of the earth's motion, and was tortured and imprisoned for "pointing out another way" than that taught by the church!

The readers of the Cynosure may derive some mild amusement from the following item in the columns of one of our most literary Boston papers: "Dr. Robert Morris, who recently died at LaGrange, Ky., was one of the only two poet laureates the Freemasons ever had. Robert Burns was the first."

I happen to have a complete copy of Burns's poems in my library, and though some of his bacchanalian songs may well have been inspired by scenes of lodge revelry, I fail to find one in the whole published collection which glorifies or even mentions Freemasonry. Perhaps they showed too marked a lowering of the poetic standard to permit them to be incorporated with his other poems; Tennyson, we all know, expunges his birth-day odes and rhymes to royalty in general from the regular editions of his works for similar reason; but they must be of exceedingly poor order, even below the level of Robert Morris, when the lodge takes so little pains to resurrect them that even those most familiar with the lays of the poet ploughman hear with amazement that he was not only a Freemason, but its first poet laureate.

Mrs. Barnes, the superintendent of police and prison work for the World's National W. C. T. U., is surprised that the Tombs should be made the house of detention by the Boston Board of Police. The appointment of police matrons to have charge of their own sex was one step in advance, and it is a pity the other should not speedily follow. Nothing shows the progress of Christian civilization more than the way in which the State treats its unfortunate and criminal classes, especially those whose age or sex render them most helpless under wrong.

Plans for N. C. A. work must wait until the fall before they can develop into practical action. Meanwhile there is time for council, and above all, time for prayer. The anti secret reformer has this advantage, that he is one in spirit with all other reforms, and is familiar with every part of the battlefield. Among the W. C. T. U. I can think of no agency that would, for the present, be of more practical value than parlor meetings. In this way our cultured Christian women, whose intelligent interest in the work it is so important to gain, can be more easily reached than in any other. As a rule, those who are most interested in temperance and free schools, the two subjects now occupying the public mind, will be the most ready to listen to a candid and fair presentation of any other reform question. When Esther Pugh, "our Queen Esther" of the National W. C. T. U., can say as reported in the last issue of Prof. Kimball's paper, the Christian Witness, "There can be no genuine revival in a church whose pastor or leading members are Masons," there is every reason to believe a diligent canvassing would show that some of its brightest minds and most zealous workers are of the same opinion.

In another letter I hope to give the readers of the Cynosure a detailed statement of the facts regarding the arrest and imprisonment of Wm. F. Davis for preaching on Boston Common. Liberty cannot be imperiled in Boston without imperiling it in San Francisco; nor in the United States without "a dimming of our shining star" for other lands.

"For mankind are one in spirit, and an instinct bears along Round the earth's electric circle the swift flash of right or wrong."

In a letter now before me Mr. Davis writes, "The question at issue in this matter is as clearly a direct issue between Jehovah God in promulgating the glad tidings concerning Jesus Christ, and the city of Boston in prohibiting such promulgation, as it is possible to make or state the issue."

Let the light be turned on. Let all the facts regarding the case of this imprisoned evangelist, the John Bunyan of our day, be as widely published as possible. The priestcraft of Rome is, after all, less powerful than the printing press. E. E. Flagg.

IOWA EIGHTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT, ATTENTION.

All Prohibitionists in the Eighth District are urged to attend the Convention called to meet at Beaconsfield, Ringgold county (on the H. & S. R. R.) August 29th. We expect to put in nomination a full District ticket, and we want all those who have affiliated with the American party to come and help us place on the ticket men free from the dictation of the lodge. Free entertainment provided. If all do their duty, we may wake up a surprise for the old parties hereabouts.

For the committee. S. A. Gilley.

NOMINATIONS IN IOWA.

A Prohibition convention is to be held at Beaconsfield, Aug. 29, to nominate a candidate for Congress from this (eighth) district. Many wanted Rev. M. A. Gault to be the candidate, but he declined in favor of Rev. Wm. Johnston, D.D., of College Springs.

The party is running good men here in Iowa, and it is a loud call for men who love temperance to fall in line with the party that has prohibition for its most prominent plank. It should be the business of all honest, right-minded men to wage an unceasing war against "the enemy of God and home and native land."

We wish to show that the final victory cannot be complete without opposing the lodge. The temperance law is violated most here in Iowa in towns where the lodges are most prominent. As a rule lodgemen use more liquor than any other class of men of any and all other organizations. In towns where there are churches and no lodges, you will not find an establishment that violates the prohibition law. We, however, give no personal fling at lodge men. Many of them intend to be good temperance men and Christians, and if they are, they are so in spite of the lodge.

If a lodgeman keeps a drug store it would be right for him to sell whisky for medicine in a lawful way, but if a brother wants some to drink he can procure it in violation of law by giving a sign, unless the druggist is better than his Masonry. It is purely Masonic to respect its law above that of the church or state. A Freemason friend of mine, to prove to me that Masonry is a benefit, stated that he got whisky for medicine in a strange place by giving a sign. Cyrus Smith.

THE HOME.

MY WALK TO CHURCH.

Breathing the summer-scented air
  Along the bowery mountain way,
Each Lord's-day morning I repair
  To serve my church, a mile away.

Below, the glorious river lies—
  A bright, broad-breasted, sylvan sea—
And round the sumptuous highlands rise
  Fair as the hills of Galilee.

Young flowers are in my path. I hear
  Music of unrecorded tone.
The heart of beauty beats so near,
  Its pulses modulate my own.

The shadow on the meadow's breast
  Is not more calm than my repose,
As, step by step, I am the guest
  Of every living thing that grows.

Ah, something melts along the sky,
  And something rises from the ground,
And fills the inner ear and eye
  Beyond the sense of sight and sound.

It is not that I strive to see
  What love in lovely shapes has wrought—
Its gracious messages to me
  Come, like the gentle dews, unsought.

I merely walk with open heart
  Which feels the secret in the sign;
But, oh, how large and rich my part
  In all that makes the feast divine!

Sometimes I hear the happy birds
  That sang to Christ beyond the sea,
And softly his consoling words
  Blend with their joyous minstrelsy.

Sometimes in royal vesture glow
  The lilies that he called so fair,
Which never toil nor spin, yet show
  The loving Father's tender care.

And then along the fragrant hills
  A radiant presence seems to move,
And earth grows fairer as it fills
  The very air I breathe with love.

And now I see one perfect face,
  And hastening to my church's door,
Find him within the holy place
  Who, all my way, went on before.

HEATHENISM AND CHILDHOOD.

In the Rome of the splendid time of Augustus childhood had practically no other rights than the carelessness or the sentiment of the father might fitfully concede. To the father, as magistrate of the household, belonged an utter authority over liberty, over personal security, and even over life. The law of the Twelve Tables had expressly authorized him to either abandon or kill his children, if he preferred not to rear them; as the Emperor Claudius, suspecting the faithfulness of his wife, Urgulanilla, ordered the daughter who had been born of her to be stripped and exposed. It was a rule, correlative to this, that whoever picked up a child thus deserted, might keep it for a slave. When retained in the house, children were under the tutelage of slaves, with whom their relations were unrestrained; and they learned vice, and exercised cruelty, with a freedom sufficient of itself to explain the decadence of that haughty state which had subjected to its will not only barbarous tribes, but cultivated nations, and had made itself rich from their resources.

No thought whatever of the sacredness of childhood, of the debt which is due to it from the state, appears in the Roman philosophy or law. In all the range of classical poetry there is scarcely a line upon that theme, to us so familiar, of the beauty of life's morning.

Cicero spoke of it as the natural feeling that if a child died young it was no cause for grief; if it died in the cradle, it was matter of entire unconcern. Octavius, father of Augustus, either seriously thought of killing in his infancy the boy whose subsequent beauty gives loveliness to the marble, or he smartly threatened it, because the Senator Nigidius Figulus had predicted for the babe future lordship in Rome. The general facts have nowhere been set forth more lucidly or correctly than by Gibbon, in his forty-fourth chapter. "In the forum, the Senate, or the camp," he says, "the adult son of a Roman citizen enjoyed the public and private rights of a person; in his father's house he was a mere thing; confounded by the laws with the movables, the cattle, and the slaves, whom the capricious master might alienate or destroy, without being responsible to any earthly tribunal....The majesty of a parent was armed with the power of life and death; and the examples of such bloody executions, which were sometimes praised and never punished, may be traced in the annals of Rome beyond the times of Pompey and Augustus." "The exposition of children," he further says, "was the prevailing and stubborn vice of antiquity; it was sometimes prescribed, often omitted, almost always practiced with impunity, by the nations who never entertained the Roman ideas of paternal power; and the dramatic poets, who appeal to the human heart, represent with indifference a popular custom which was palliated by the motives of economy and compassion."

Nor is it to be imagined that this attitude toward children was peculiar to the Roman, a fruit of that fierceness and hardness of will which had made him the unchecked conqueror of the nations; for it is to be observed that it was as common in the Hellenic states as ever on the Tiber. It was not in Sparta, only, that children might be whipped at the altar of Diana till their life-blood ran on the steps of the altar. It was not alone on the forest-sides of Mt. Taygetus, or in the rocky caverns at its base, under the methodical ferocity of ths Peninsula, that weak or sickly children were exposed, to be torn by wild beasts, to die of hunger, or to perish in the blast. Plato and Aristotle, consummate masters of Attic thought, whose names outshine in signal respects those of all their successors, expressly approve of such abandonment of children, in case the parents are unable to support them, or if they fail to give physical promise of service to the State. The doctrine of Plato is, that a child belongs less to his parents than to the city, the latter having need of him for its advancement, for which reason even his infantile sports are proper subjects for public regulation; while Roman moralists, on whom Greek influences has descended, including even Seneca himself, speak as of course, without any denunciation, of the exposure of children if sickly or deformed. It is on such exposure of a son on Mount Cithæron that the memorable Œdipus tragedies are based. The law which permitted a father to sell or expel his son at pleasure was a law in Greece as well as in Rome. The father had the right, in the one as in the other, to accept or reject the child at its birth; the right to give son or daughter in marriage, without debate; the right to exclude the son from the household, even at his maturity, and adopt another in his place. Natural affection was not the organizing principle of the family, in the contemplation of ancient law, either in Europe or in the East. But the family was based on the domestic religion—on the worship that is offered to ancestors; and was maintained as subservient to the State. So the laws of Menu described the oldest son as one who is begotten for the performance of a duty, that the worship due to the dead may be offered, because of which he has the control of the patrimony.

Of course, in societies so founded and organized, and morally ruled by such conceptions of the gods as obtained among them, there could be no effective recognition of public duty toward the feebleness of childhood, or of immediate rights in infants to protection, training, succor, and nurture. The human heart was not wholly transformed, nor its innate sensibilities destroyed. Natural affection was an instinct and a power in the most savage tribes. It could not be wholly or permanently wanting amid Attic culture, or at the centers of Roman power. Many a mother, no doubt, held in her heart of hearts the son or the daughter, who was only the dearer by reason of sickness, or of natural infirmity. Many a father, of nobler nature than the religion which he had inherited, must have felt his children as dear to him as his life, and have shrunk, as the hand shrinks from fire, from any injustice or cruelty toward them. But the customs, legislations and spirit of society were not even a defence for life itself in its earlier years; and the characteristic tone of literature, as it was carried at that very time toward almost its highest historical development, shows how haughtily careless society was, in what we call the classic ages, of what to us appears its imperative and primary duty. Care for the child, when required at all, was so only because of the citizenship which was about to be his. I doubt if any parallel can be found, in the stately treasure-houses of ancient sculpture, to that carved cradle in Westminster Abbey, in the splendid chapel of Henry Seventh, not far from the famous monument of Elizabeth, in which lies sculptured the sleeping figure of the little Sophia, the baby-daughter of James First, whose life had gone out almost at the beginning.—*R. THE HEART'S GARDEN.

The heart is a garden where grow
  Sweet flowers and poisonous weeds,
And each passing moment we sow
  Of one or the other the seeds.

If thoughts are unselfish and kind,
  Good, gentle, and tender, and true,
We shall ne'er in our heart's garden find
  The nightshade and hemlock and rue.

But blossoms than Eden's more fair,
  Exhaling a sweeter perfume,
Their breath bearing balm for all care,
  In richest profusion shall bloom.

Since you, friend, and I, every hour
  Are scattering broadcast this seed,
Know from every good thought blooms a flower,
  From the bad, springs a poisonous weed.

SUCH A COMFORT!

"All the Richter girls are clever, except Kitty," said Mrs. Simpson, as she stood beside Ella Raeburn, pinching here, snipping there, and, with her mouth full of pins, fitting Ella's wedding gown. It was a wonder she could talk under the circumstances, but, as everybody knew, nothing short of the lock-jaw could have quite stopped the flow of Mrs. Simpson's conversation.

"Yes, my dear," she went on, "they are all real smart, except Kitty. Mame, she's a master-hand at pickles and preserves; Louisy's just splendid at the piano, and Clara took every prize there was when she was at school. But that little brown-eyed Kitty isn't good for a thing in the world—except to help other folks."

Ella gave Mrs. Simpson's arm a sharp nudge. Her back was to the door, and she did not see, as startled Ella did, a little figure in a blue-checked gingham dress, with a white apron and a broad-brimmed hat, standing on the lilac-shaded porch, a basket of roses in her hands.

Had Kitty heard the criticism of the free-spoken dressmaker? Perhaps, and perhaps not. If her rosy cheeks were a trifle redder than usual, it might have been the walk in the sun that made them so. If her eyes were bright and wide open, that was nothing new—Kitty Richter always looked you straight in the face, and she had beautiful eyes.

Mrs. Simpson wished she had not spoken so loudly, and Ella felt embarrassed, but Kitty came in with a very cheerful, "Good morning."

"We have so many roses that I felt as if we ought to share them with our friends," she said simply. "So I brought some over for grandma. May I go up to her room?"

"Of course," said Ella. "Grandma is rather neglected in these days. She'll be glad of a visitor."

In the stir of preparation for the first wedding in the family, grandma was indeed a little neglected. She was feeling very lonely as she sat by herself in her chair by the window, her knitting on a stand, her old, worn hands folded on her lap. Nobody had come near her since morning, and she was too feeble to go about the house, as she had been used to doing in her active days. It is very hard for an aged person to realize that others can do without her—that in the world where she was once of importance she has no longer any particular work to do.

"I don't feel as if I could stand it much longer," the poor, tired old lady was saying to herself, when, after a light little tap at the door, Kitty Richter came in with her roses. She brought a perfect sheaf of sunshine. The roses flooded the room with fragrance.

"Let me have them in my hands, child," exclaimed the flower-loving woman, touching the beautiful petals tenderly.

"Beck Lee, your grandma, Kitty, that's been dead these twenty years, planted the white rose-bush by your sitting-room window, and I was there the day she did it. My! how time flies! That's right, dearie. Put them in the old china bowl, and I'll have them where I can see them and smell them all day. Roses are company when they bring old times to mind."

Kitty was stepping lightly about, dusting, arranging, removing the disorderly look which had worried grandma's soul. She brought the old lady a clean cap and 'kerchief, brushed the thick gray hair and fastened it in a comfortable knot, and finally said, "Good-by," with a promise of looking in to-morrow, after having told all the good news of the village.

"That's a dear child," said Grandma Raeburn, as she began to knit, quite cheered by this whiff from the outside world. "May God bless her! She's not too busy to look after an old body like me."

Kitty Richter went her way homeward with a little ache in her heart. So that was what people thought of her. She wasn't particularly a credit to her family. Well, what of it? She fought with the discontented, hurt feeling, which for the moment she could not help, and chided herself for having it. Was she sorry that the others were more gifted than herself?

"Kitty Richter, you ought to be ashamed," she said. "Are you envying Clara and Lou, your own sisters? That cannot please the Master."

In her energy she had spoken the last words aloud, and they were overheard by Rupert Bacon, a boy passing her on his way to the postoffice. Some friends of his had been urging him to join them on an excursion the next day, but his father was short of hands in the field, and needed him. Still, being a very unselfish father, Mr. Bacon had consented that Rupert should go. Rupert's conscience was not quite easy, however, and Kitty's little sentence was enough to decide him to stay at home and do his duty.

Unconscious of the good she had done, the little maiden tripped along and entered her own home to find the notable Mary, Mame, as Mrs. Simpson called her, laid up with one of her worst sick-headaches.

"Mary can never take things moderately," complained Mrs. Richter. "She crowds two days' work into one, and then has a spell of illness. Your Uncle Lem's at the barn with father, Kitty, and I must see to getting tea. Louisa won't sit with Mary. She's provoked because she's got to give up practicing on account of this headache. Seems as though everything was contrary some days."

"Never mind, mother. It will all be right by and by," said Kitty, soothingly. "I'll take care of Mary, and you can have an easy tea. There's half of that jelly cake in the pantry, and Aunt Susy sent over fresh cottage cheese this morning. I put it in the buttery, and never thought to tell you until this moment."

"What a comfort you are, my darling!" said the mother, sitting down to rest for a moment.

Mrs. Richter was proud of her three elder girls, proud of Mary's housewifery, of Louisa's music, of Clara's education, but her little Kitty had never aroused in her that special feeling. With others, she had taken Kitty's quiet lovingness for granted, and been a little sorry that she could boast neither of her bread, her music, nor her French. As though a talent for ministry were not one of the very best talents after all! Our little Kitty, meanwhile, followed the rule of doing what would please the Master. She had a story-book in her room, one of Pansy's latest, and she had left off at a very interesting place. But she said nothing about it as she darkened Mary's room, kept hot-water bandages on her aching head, and watched beside the sufferer until she fell asleep.

"Sleep is the best medicine for poor Mary," said Kitty, stealing quietly away.

She was on her way to her room when, "Tea is ready, daughter," said father's voice; and the brown, sun-tanned man, with the grizzly hair and beard, waited to pat her golden head.

"Lem," he said to his brother, "this is our baby. The rest, somehow, have grown too big for father's petting, but Kitty stays by me still."

"Her Aunt Emily was saying the other day that Kitty Richter was such a comfort to her mother," said grave Uncle Lem, who was a man of few words.

Kitty sat in her little room that night, after reading her New Testament and saying her prayers, and looked out over the farmstead. The full moon silvered the brook, and made a track of light in the lane. The lilac fragrance drifted up from the dewy plumes beneath her window. Now and then a bird, dreaming of day-dawn, stirred in the nest that was hidden somewhere, and uttered a sleepy note. It came very sweetly into Kitty's heart that God was keeping his great world in safety—flowers, birds, people. Herself, small as she was, had a share in the loving care of the great God. There wasn't so very much for her to do that she knew of; but she resolved every day to do the little she could with all her might.

Ella Raeburn, on the eve of her marriage, a few days after, was talking with her old grandmother.

"I tell you, Ella," said the latter, "if it hadn't 'a' been for Kitty Richter, these days latterly, I would have felt like giving up. She's been such a comfort. —Mrs. M. E. Sangster, in Congregationalist.

TEMPERANCE.

THE THIRD PARTY'S CANDIDATE.

General Clinton B. Fisk, candidate of the Prohibition party for President, shows in his letter of acceptance, which was made public yesterday, that he knows exactly why he has been nominated. Like Mr. Cleveland's famous tariff message this letter of Gen. Fisk gains strength from concentration. It is aimed at the life of the liquor traffic and the aim is true.

Whisky cannot be civilized. It is a bad servant and a terrible master. It cannot win back the confidence and friendship of the earnest men who have made war against it. Therefore, the Prohibition party is not ephemeral. It has been built solidly on pure conviction thus far. The walls will stand. Only the future can tell how fast or how high those walls will yet be built.

Prohibition is not fanaticism, because it is the child of education and experience. Fanaticism is born of ignorance. Education, therefore, will not efface prohibition. Look at the party from any standpoint you will, it still remains a fixture which cannot be removed. The rest is a matter of mere vote-getting. Perhaps the party will never elect a Congressman, much less a President. But it is not modest. It boldly declares that it will be voted into full power before many years.

Gen. Fisk is just the best possible standard-bearer for such a party. He is without malice, and is guided by his convictions. He is satisfied that prohibition is a national question, and that it must be treated as such. "No party," he declares, "which is made public administrator by the enemies of temperance, or which owes the election of its candidates to saloon influences, can ever establish prohibition as a binding fact in government anywhere."

BELGIUM AND BEER.

Belgium appears to be the head center of drunkenness and drunken poverty and misery. All drinks are free and untaxed there, and liquors of all kinds and tobacco are very cheap. It is a little country about twice the size of Los Angeles county, and has 5,500,000 people. The drink there is beer, wine and gin. In the year 1850 there were 53,097 dram shops; in 1870 there were 100,753; in 1875 there were 125,000, and now there are 140,000, more than half as many as in the whole United States. One dram shop for every 44 of the population, old and young! France has one for every 100; England, one for every 145; the United States, one for every 280; California, one for every 90, and San Francisco, one for every 60.

Dram shops increase under low license, high license, and free rum. It seems to make little difference. Those who drink this year will drink more next year, if it is to be had, and the children of drinkers drink earlier and more than their fathers, and become drunkards earlier if they drink at all. There is probably no instance of dram shops decreasing much in number, except where they are prohibited, or where they have so thoroughly ruined a town or village that the people have all left or died, and then one or two deadfalls will stay to rob travelers.

Never among the seaport people of the world did we ever see so many deformed, crooked, bloated, crippled, goggle-eyed, cross-eyed, idiotic-looking wrecks of men; never so many who looked as if they had been wrecked in a railroad disaster, blown up in a mine or steam-engine, or escaped from a lunatic asylum; never such a large proportion of drunken men among the workers. We were kept twelve days waiting with a splendid fair wind, a long March easterly gale, taking in some ballast which in any American seaport could have been put on board in twenty-four hours. And all because when forty or fifty tons came alongside the men would go ashore and spree from one to two days before they would discharge it. And no men could be had to do otherwise.

That was and is what a people, once among the most industrious, thrifty, honest, and capable in the world, have come to. And we have already a large class of people who are no better here. And unless we have prohibition we shall get where Belgium is. —Weekly Censor.

The only countries in the world where there is a decrease of the drink habit are England, Sweden and Russia The decline in England has been one-eighth; in Sweden, one-third, and in Russia one-half.

WHAT A WOMAN CAN DO.

Mrs. Lewis Maryth, of Wichita, Kas., caused a saloon operated by Jake Clement to be "pulled" Friday night, claiming that her husband had spent three weeks there, squandering his earnings. She was at the saloon door by sunrise this morning, hatchet in hand. The door was opened, and Jake was getting his place ready for the day's business when the woman locked the door and gave Jake orders to march to a certain corner and await further orders. She is a very large woman and he a very small man, and he "marched." The woman then began business in earnest. The first blow of her hatchet broke in pieces a large mirror behind the bar, and the second demolished another fancy article of the same sort. The woman next proceeded to the more laborious work of breaking up everything breakable. When the task was ended she made Jake walk up the street for a block in front of her. She then gave him orders to never sell any more liquor. The damage done is estimated at $1,000.—Press dispatch.

The great curse of Great Britain is the liquor traffic, and the consequent drinking habits of the people. This is the source of great suffering and of crime and of domestic unhappiness. But for this its people generally would be happy and prosperous. Drinking houses abound on the principal streets and back streets and alleys of the cities. They are patronized by all classes. Many church members drink. A minister does not lose his influence by moderate drinking. In Glasgow we saw a sign which reads, "A–B–Purveyor of whisky to H. R. H., The Prince of Wales." "H. R. H." means "His Royal Highness." If this was considered offensive it would not be allowed—where the police exercise such strict supervision as in the cities of Great Britain. In London women are seen on the streets with black eyes and bruised faces, having every appearance of being hard drinkers. Great Britain needs Prohibition of the liquor traffic quite as much as does the United States.—B. T. Roberts, in Free Methodist.

The Mayor of Leeds, Alderman Scarr, says the people of England are earning by their labor five hundred million pounds, of which they put one hundred and fifty millions into the hands of the publicans and brewers, while they waste, of their working hours, through the drink, about one-fifth, which may be valued at another million pounds. If we add other evils attendant upon our drinking customs, it becomes clear that the drink "helps man to work" indeed—to the extent of just about doubling his hours (or years!) of labor.

A computation of the statistics of the internal revenue department shows that the people of this country spend annually more than $800,000,000 for liquor. If Maine spent as much in proportion to her population, as the people of other States, her share of this would be $15,000,000; but Neal Dow says that one million more than meets the cost of all the liquor smuggled into the State and sold in violation of law.—Selected.

Topeka, Kan., has more churches than any other city of its size in the country, and has not a single saloon or drinking place. There were, four years ago, 144 saloons in the city, and before the whisky element could be convinced that "Prohibition would prohibit," over $25,000 in fines were collected from saloon-keepers for violations of the law, and over thirty of them served terms in the county jail.

There is a whole temperance sermon in the reply of a butcher who was asked for a dollar toward paying a temperance lecturer: "There's your dollar," said he. "I've sold more meat in one day since this town went no license than I used to in a week when we had saloons."

After the most exciting local option fight ever known in Missouri, the Prohibitionists of Independence, the oldest town in the State, won a great victory June 28, carrying the election by over 200 majority, and ending the sale of liquor for four years.

A temperance organization has been started in Bombay, entitled the Indian Temperance Organization, which it is intended to extend throughout India by the formation of affiliated societies. An encouraging beginning has been made.

American statistics show a population of 800,000 paupers, 75 per cent. of which grows out of drunkenness. There are said to be 30,000 idiots in the country, three-fourths of whom are the children of drunken parents.

In the ten States which have voted on the question of Prohibition since 1880, 1,211,000 votes have been cast for Prohibition and 1,160,000 against it. The contest has been close, but we're ahead yet.

Bible Lesson.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON IX.—Third Quarter.—Aug. 26.

SUBJECT.—The Pillar of Cloud and Fire.—Num. 9. 15–23.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Oh, send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me.—Psa. 43: 3.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. God's Guiding Presence with His People. Vs. 15–17. The most beautiful of Scripture symbols is the pillar of cloud and fire that guided the Israelites on their journeyings—a cool, refreshing shade by day, a light by night; to the enemies of God a terror, to his people a refuge. It is one of the Bible's most precious promises, "Thou shalt hear a voice behind thee, saying, This is the way; walk ye in it." When a certain course of conduct looks to us ever so little doubtful, we hear this unseen monitor, and if we persist in doing or saying or thinking that of which it questions the propriety or consistency, we grieve it away, and are in the situation of an ancient Israelite who persisted in going another way from what the pillar of cloud and fire indicated, and will risk spiritually a similar fate—separation from God's true people, and exposure to a variety of dangers. It is said of the King's highway, "no lion shall be there," but he who turns aside will surely meet the adversary, who like a beast of prey lays in wait for unguarded souls. The farther he strays from the way of life the greater the difficulty of retracing his steps, of "stumbling on the dark mountains" never to rise again. Custom blinds the eyes to God's guiding presence. We are to a great extent creatures of custom, and as everybody around us does and thinks, we are apt to do and think ourselves; but the law of God, not custom, should be the rule of our conduct, and the spiritual deadness which afflicts so many churches is the result of their living on this low plane and persisting in living there. When the church presents one solid front against any evil, no matter how gigantic or popular that evil may be, it must go down. Slavery would not have domineered over the nation more than thirty years, if the churches everywhere had frowned upon the institution instead of flattering and truckling to it. Decollette toilets, tight lacing, all immodest and unhealthful fashions would be banished to the demi-monde, the class from which they have generally originated. We see what her influence has been in turning the scale against social drinking, and what it might do if used with equal force against tobacco and the lodge, the latter being as yet an evil to which she has hardly awakened, though it is weakening and debasing her as much as false worships did the ancient Jewish church. When the pillar of cloud and fire ceases to go before her she is no longer formidable. The world does not hate nor fear her.

2. The Pillar of Cloud and Fire often Leads us in Ways quite Contrary to Human Wisdom. Vs. 18–23. When the cloud was taken up from the tabernacle, the children of Israel abode in their tents, no matter how long the period might be, or how important it might seem to mere human wisdom that they should continue their journey. No thoughtful mind can fail to notice how many and various are the interruptions of his usefulness which almost every consecrated Christian has to meet. Some are laid aside on beds of pain, disabled by accident or disease; others have the time and strength, which they would gladly devote to higher employments, frittered away in a round of seemingly trivial duties. But disappointment and trial is the pillar of cloud and fire. "He that believeth shall not make haste," however slow its leadings. It may seem to lead away from Canaan, away from the goal of his most cherished hopes, his most earnest prayers, but Providence will never lead him wrong. To vote for principle irrespective of results may seem to involve a set back to the very principles voted for, but the real point at stake is, Are we following the leadings of God? The history of our globe is full of "set backs" when it seemed as if the forces of death and chaos would triumph over life and order; but life is always stronger than death, and truth than a lie. Set backs are a necessary part of true reform, as wind and rain is a part of Nature's economy in bringing the harvest to perfection.

The American party, which is to hold a national convention in Washington next week, is looking for a candidate for President. Abraham S. Hewitt has declined the position, and Frank M. Pixley is in doubt. By the way, why not nominate that grand old American and hater of foreigners, Sitting Bull? —Chicago News.

HOPE FOR AFRICA.

In connection with the three letters of great interest from Africa in another part of this number, the following from the New York Independent is most timely. It refers to a trip of five months on the upper Congo from Stanley Pool, made by the missionary George Grenfell, of the London Baptist Mission, and Dr. Sims, of the American Baptist Mission, with a small party in a mission steamer. The party, says the account, was in peril many times from rocks and storms, and from the savages. They were attacked a score of times with sticks, stones, spears and poisoned arrows; but managed to escape unhurt. In the course of the expedition, six hundred miles of water way, previously unvisited by white men, was explored. The most important discovery was that the Mobangi river, which entering the Congo from the north, nearly opposite the equatorial station, is the largest tributary of the great Congo water-course. He spent five weeks on it, and ascended it a distance of four hundred to four hundred and fifty miles. It is believed that the upper part of it is identical with the Welle river, which has been so long an African mystery. The banks of the Mobangi are very populous. He also explored, for some distance, the Ikelemba river, and visited Danda, a curious town. At Bangala, a hundred or a hundred and fifty miles above the mouth of the Mobangi, Mr. Grenfell came face to face with cannibalism. He says:

"At the time I commenced this journey I could scarcely bring myself to believe the terrible stories which reached me from time to time. Since coming first to the Congo the farther I traveled the farther cannibalism seemed to recede; everybody had it to say that their neighbors on beyond were bad; that they 'eat men,' till I began to grow skeptical; but here at Bangala I absolutely caught up with it, and was obliged to allow what I had hoped to be able to maintain as 'not proven.' I will not sicken you with the details of the preparation, as some of our boys gave them when they came to tell me, in the hope that I should be able to interfere; but, before they reached the steamer, the big drum's dum-dum announced the final act. Neither will I tell you of the horrible things they saw when they afterwards returned to the scene. The natives could not, or at least appeared not to, understand why the white man and his people should take exception to their proceedings. 'Why,' said they to one of our boys, 'do you interfere with us? We don't trouble you when you kill your goats. We buy our nyama (meat) and kill it; it is not your affair.' Lieutenant Coquilhat has tried his utmost, and placed himself in no small difficulty by his attempts to put a stop to these customs; but he says, and I quite realize it, that it cannot be done without fighting for it, and that to buy the intended victim would only be to give them the price which would purchase three others. From this point on the evidence of cannibalism was continually recurring, though the reluctant manner in which at some places the people acknowledged being 'men eaters,' leads us to hope that a sentiment against it already exists."

This is the state of things in lands where Christianity and the Bible are unknown. Did infidelity or atheism ever explore such a region or civilize such a people? Christians have done it again and again, and infidels find fault with their work. Now let them go to Africa and try their hand on these savages and see what infidelity will do, and report the results.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard was last week at Plano, Ill., holding special meetings with much encouragement. Hopeful results also attended the meetings at Streator and Downer's Grove just before. The reports in the Advance and Elgin Association paper speak of more results in the conversion of the impenitent, than does he himself in his modest account in our present number.

—Rev. J. C. Elliott, of Swanwick, Ill, lectured on Prohibition at the public hall in Coulterville, Ill., recently. His address is reported as able and interesting.

—Rev. J. T. McCrory, of the Third United Presbyterian church, Pittsburgh, preached a sermon to his congregation July 22d from the text: "Up, get you out of this place, for the Lord will destroy this city." He pictured the wickedness of the city, and predicted dire consequences unless it repented as Nineveh did in the days of Jonah.

—The present population of the Empire of Japan is 38,000,000; the number of Japanese Christians is 50,000, which is a number large enough, considering the fact that the Gospel was first preached in Japan only thirty years ago. These 50,000 are a powerful leaven, and its working is felt all over the islands and in every part of society.

—At Lucknow, India, where so many were murdered during the Sepoy rebellion thirty years ago, two thousand children, nearly all of Hindu or Mohammedan parentage, recently marched in a Sunday-school procession.

—Twelve British, thirteen Americans, and four German missionary societies have, in India, 695 male missionaries, 491 female, 8,518 native helpers, and 137,731 communicants. This is an increase in communicants of twenty-three per cent. in four years.

—Rev. M. L. Holt, by whose labors and sacrifices Gates College at Neligh, Nebraska, has gained a standing among Western institutions, has, since his retirement from the presidency of the institution, been preaching in Omaha. He and his family have lately been called to pass through a deep affliction in the death of his oldest son William, a young man of much promise and of devoted Christian character. He was a student at Gates College, and much beloved by his fellows.

—Sad particulars of the general religious persecution which is going on in Russia are furnished by the great French religious paper, La Christianisme. A systematized effort is being made to crush out every kind of nonconformity to the established Greek church. The brutal measures against the Jews continue, and repression is now extended to the Polish Catholics and to the Lutherans of the Baltic provinces. Religious journals conducted in any other interest than that of the established faith are suppressed, and Lutheran pastors are forbidden to allude in any unfavorable way to the actions or teachings of the Greek church.

—A whaling vessel, Queen of the Dart, has left Dundee, and before leaving the Arctic regions will land two of her crew with the object of starting a Christian mission among the British Esquimaux in connection with the British Christian Polar Mission.

—In thirty years the late Rev. R. G. Wilder, of the Presbyterian Board, and founder of the Missionary Review, preached in 3,000 cities, scattered over 3,000,000 pages of tracts, gathered into his schools 3,300 pupils, 300 of whom were girls. Besides all this he was one of the committee on the translation of the Scriptures. He wrote and published Commentaries on three Gospels, and edited and translated many books.

—Another sad story comes from the missionaries of Lake Nyassa. The Rev. W. Percival Johnston, of the Universities' Mission, and Mr. Buchanan, acting British Consul, landed at Makanjilas, a town on the southwest side of the lake, from the Universities' steamer, the Charles Janson. As soon as they landed they were seized and their property stolen. The boat was also taken possession of. The mob stripped Mr. Buchanan and killed one of his men; Mr. Johnson was also deprived of his clothing. The Englishmen finally got away by paying blackmail and by leaving the ship's boat behind them.

—The nine hundredth anniversary of the introduction of Christianity into Russia was celebrated at Kief on July 26 with great pomp. A number of bishops and deputations from Asiatic and European Russia were present. The leading ecclesiastics of the Greek church were also in attendance. General Ignatieff, as President of the Slav Society, took a prominent part in the proceedings.

—The Western Yearly Meeting of Friends, held at Plainfield, Indiana, last fall adopted the following in their report on the state of the society, which is read in the quarterly, monthly and weekly meetings of the Friends comprising the Western Yearly meeting:

"Friends are warned against uniting themselves with, or giving countenance to secret, oath bound societies, as they are evil and dangerous in their tendency, and are to be reckoned as amongst the 'unfruitful works of darkness.' Many, we solemnly believe, infatuated by promise of future good from the lodge, go from degree to degree, to find in sorrow at last that the best part of life, which belonged to Christ, has been spent upon vain and empty forms contrived in the imagination of worldly men, and in secret councils which are largely controlled by corrupt and ungodly persons in the interest of evil purposes. The time is at hand when, as followers of Jesus, we should take a more outspoken and aggressive stand against this harmful system."

—The first Malagasy who ever learned the alphabet died in January, 1883, at the age of seventy-two. He had lived to see 50,000 of his countrymen taught to read, and over 70,000 profess their faith in Christ.

In Brief.

Dr. Ernest Weissenberger, a professor of Heidelberg University, who has been observing the gas wells at Findlay, Ohio, says the earth's crust is very thin there, that a temperature of 3,500 degrees exists 8,000 feet below the surface, and that the earth will ere long burst out with volcanic eruptions.

A traveling man for a certain New York house was put on the witness stand in court. "Do you solemnly swear," said the clerk, "that the evidence you shall give in the case, now on hearing, shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?" The witness hesitated, and then said: "I've been selling goods for Blanks & Co. for five years—but I'll do my best."—Merchant Traveler.

In Massachusetts, in the six years from 1881 to 1886, according to the labor report of Hon. Carroll D. Wright, there were 995 strikes, of which 351 were successful, 457 partially so, and 187 were failures. The loss to the workmen is estimated at $4,200,489, and to the employers, $1,970 881. The largest number of strikes occurred in the building trades, 492; boots and shoes coming next with 171.

An Albany physician says Americans suffer more generally from Bright's disease and nervous complaints than any other people, because they sit down so persistently at their work. While Englishmen, Germans and Frenchmen walk and exercise, an American business man will go to his office, take his seat in his chair, and sit there all day without giving any relief to the tension of the muscles of the back. The result is that these muscles surrounding the kidneys become soft and flabby. They lose their vitality. The kidneys themselves become weak and debilitated. If business men would walk more and stand instead of sitting at their desks their health would be much improved.

J. D. Leary's great log ship is completed at Finger Board, Nova Scotia. Leary is certain that he will get it to market without loss, as was the case with his other great raft, in the big blizzard. The log ship is a monstrous, unwieldly fabric, but it is claimed is nearly indistructible. It is constructed of 30,000 logs, varying in size from a pine tree 200 feet long to a short spar twenty-five feet in length. The logs are placed together in the shape of a ship's hull, and are firmly bolted, besides being lashed into one compact mass with thirty-five tons of wire rope. The ship is 700 feet long—200 feet longer than the steamer City of Rome. She is 65 feet broad, and 35 feet deep. She draws about 22 feet of water. All the inside logs are in the rough, but built about it all is a shell of thick, smooth planks, coming to a sharp point at the bottom, with a heavy cut-water. The bows are very full, running aft to the waist of the ship, where she widens to sixty-five feet. From there aft the lines follow those of a clipper ship. Six spars about seventy feet high are built into the ship to serve as masts. Five of these masts will be fitted up with heavy yards, which will be rigged with a big square-sail. The mizzen-mast is to be fitted with a spanker. The masts will carry an immense spread of canvas. The logs are laid in tiers lapping over one another, the whole resting in an enormous cradle built of spiles. A massive chain runs through the center logs for the entire length. It is made of welded iron, the links being one and three quarter inches thick. Aft, at a distance of ten feet, are the cross-chains. It would take fifty trains of fifty cars each to transport the lumber contained in Leary's log ship. The ship will be launched during the early part of this month, when the tide is the highest in the Bay of Fundy. The cost of the log ship, if landed successfully in New York, is as follows: Timber's cost in Nova Scotia, $13,000. The towage will cost one hundred dollars per day, and the logs will be sold in New York for fifty thousand dollars.

The Railway Age reports, says the Voice, that in the six months ending June 30 there were built 3 320 miles of new railroads in the United States. This comes within 434 miles of equalling the record for the same period last year, when the largest number of miles (11,000) on record were built, with the single exception of 1882. The increase in railroads since 1880 is most amazing. More than one-half as many miles as were then operated have been built since then, until last year there were 148,987 miles in operation, and to-day there are over 150,000 miles. It becomes interesting to estimate the number of locomotives and cars in use on these miles of road. Estimating 21 1 locomotives to each 100 miles of track, we get 81,650 of the snorting iron steeds, enough to reach, if placed end to end with tenders attached, in the neighborhood of 400 miles. Add now the 1,012,500 freight cars, and the 23,070 passenger cars, and the 7,580 baggage, mail, and express cars, and we would have a line of rolling stock that would reach halfway round the world. The State which leads in its length of road is Illinois, which is far in the lead with over 15,000 miles operated, or within 4,000 miles as many as all of Great Britain and Ireland. Ohio is a bad second, with 9,154 miles operated; Pennsylvania third, New York fourth, and "Little Rhody" last, with 140 miles. Of the increase during the current year the South gets a large share, especially Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, South Carolina and Texas. There is no nation in the world that has more than one-fifth as many miles of railroad as the United States, and all the rest of the world have but about one-fifth more. These are interesting figures, and worth boasting on: but, as well, they ought to awaken serious thought. Our railroad power is becoming something monstrous. One stands almost aghast to think of what it might do or undo if combined and wielded by one corporation. If the railroad costs us our Sabbath it is a bad bargain.

PREMIUM.

For "Campaign Clubs" of ten subscribers to the Cynosure at ten cents each, the Club to be sent to one Post-office, the getter up of the club will receive a copy of the new Song Book, "The Glorious Cause," by Dr. Geo. Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2 00

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesman concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body at Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

FARM NOTES.

TREATMENT OF THE GRAPE.

Viticulture may be carried on in different ways. Grapes can be gathered in the primitive forests, and thus you may raise that luscious fruit by planting a vine near to a box elder or a black haw tree and letting nature have her own way, while you confine your interference to the least possible amount. Or you have concluded that some labor and care ought to be devoted to grape growing; you plant your vines (probably Concords) in the ordinary way, trim them according to a certain rule, perform also some summer pruning by pinching off the fruit branch above the second or third leaf beyond the last "form" (embryo grape), and perhaps tying up a down fallen cane occasionally; the ground you roughly plow once or twice, not caring for the tearing of the roots and rootlets: of manuring you think not—may the vines help themselves as best they can. You will make a few tolerable good crops, then your vines will decline in vigor one by another, and after a while your plantation will not pay even for the little labor devoted to it. You give up in despair. You are an unbeliever in "theories," but perhaps you might be persuaded to make an experiment on a small scale, in order to be convinced by your own experience. It is this. Select one row of your vines, or even one single vine, and try the following treatment:

Keep the ground around the stalk clean and loose by several hoeings during the season. The whole ground should be thoroughly worked to the depth of 5 or 6 inches once in two years, with a four-pronged spading fork, care being taken not to injure the roots, and dig in as much as possible of decayed matter, also ashes, smashed bones, and some completely decomposed manure, rotten sawdust, etc. One superficial hoeing in July is sufficient; the object is the killing of the weeds before the maturing of the seeds, while to the ground a sort of mulch is given to protect it during the hottest part of the season. The trimming should be done before winter. You must not be too avaricious, not demand of your vine more fruit bearing than is in just proportion to its vigor. Suppose it be a Norton vine, select two canes grown from spurs (or more if the vine should be very vigorous), as bearing canes for the coming season, and the same number of canes, designed for spurs, cut back to two or three eyes. All the rest of last year's growth to be removed. After having tied up your canes in an oblique direction, you wait for the forthcoming of the new shoots, allowing none to grow except from the eyes of the bearing canes and spurs. But not all the shoots from the former (which ought to have been shortened to the proper length) will be fruitful; those that show no forms must be removed. And what more must be done?

My maxim is, that not one single shoot or even leaf should be allowed to grow unless it answers a certain purpose. Therefore, as soon as the forms are clearly discernible, you pinch off the fruit branch right above the last form (do not want to have more than two or three forms) Within eight or ten days new shoots (laterals) from the eyes opposite to the forms will come forth; these also must be shortened, but one leaf left. The same process must be repeated, then the eye of the lateral will produce a new shoot. Thus you will have an excellent protection for the growing fruit by two or three highly developed leaves near to the grapes, and no particle of the vine's vitality is squandered by the growth of leaves remote from the fruit. The idea is not to rob the vine of its necessary foliage, but to have the leaves where they do most good. What you save of vitality will be a benefit to the fruit and the canes designed for service in the next season.

The young bearing canes you let grow unchecked (if yours be Æstivalis or Riparia vines, while those of the Labrusca family—the Concord, etc —may be differently treated), tie them up and watch the forthcoming of the laterals, which must be treated through the whole season exactly like those of the fruit branches. This is a matter of the greatest importance, as the bearing canes are considerably weakened by the laterals; strong bearing canes of the Concord you may shorten and permit three or four laterals to grow, expecting to get from them more and better fruit than from the main vine. As a matter of course, you select the most vigorous shoots for bearing canes, the others for spurs, and these you may shorten at pleasure. All sprouts from the old wood and the roots must be removed, unless unfortunately you have not a sufficient number of shoots from spurs.

After having treated a few vines in this manner for several years, compare your results with those achieved by the common procedure, and you will be astonished. It is for you to decide whether or not this greater amount of care and labor will pay better than the ordinary slovenly treatment. A great deal of the pruning, even of the hoeing, can be done by the children, by your smart boys and adroit girls; they will learn to like this interesting occupation in the fresh air, and you will be cheered by the aspect of their rosy cheeks.

Make your noble grape vines an object of your affection (not a mere money matter), try and learn, never ceasing to do so, and your happiest hours will be those spent in tending your beloved and grateful vines. As for myself, I could not well do without this one indispensable relaxation, enjoying it daily even in my 83d year.—Fred Muench, in Rural World.

The pink pond lily has been claimed as a native of Cape Cod only, but the American Garden tells us that Sweden is a claimant for the honor of having an original one, and likewise that it is found growing wild in various parts of this country and Canada. There are other native water lilies, such as the Nymphæa odorata and the so-called Lotus, Nelumbium speciosum, which grows naturally in several places as far north as central Michigan, that may be cultivated in many of our ponds, lakes and streams.

RATTLESNAKES AS FOOD.

It was said of a strong political partisan that he would swallow rattlesnakes if party interests demanded it. It is only men of this sort who, without protest, swallow the large, old-fashioned pills. Sensible people, requiring medicine to cleanse their systems, invariable use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They are unrivaled in all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels.

Ask For Ayer's

Sarsaparilla, and be sure you get it, when you want the best blood-purifier.

With its forty years of unexampled success in the cure of Blood Diseases, you can make no mistake in preferring Ayer's to any other. The fore-runner of modern blood medicines, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is still the most popular, being in greater demand than all others combined.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is selling faster than ever before. I never hesitate to recommend it."—George W. Whitman, Druggist, Albany, Ind.

"I am safe in saying that my sales of Ayer's Sarsaparilla far excel those of any other, and it gives thorough satisfaction."—L. H. Bush, Des Moines, Iowa.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla and Ayer's Pills are the best selling medicines in my store. I can recommend them conscientiously."—C. Bickhaus, Pharmacist, Roseland, Ill.

"We have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla here for over thirty years and always recommend it when asked to name the best blood-purifier."—W. T. McLean, Druggist, Augusta, Ohio.

"I have sold your medicines for the last seventeen years, and always keep them in stock, as they are staples. 'There is nothing so good for the youthful blood' as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—R. L. Parker, Fox Lake, Wis.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla gives the best satisfaction of any medicine I have in stock. I recommend it, or, as the Doctors say, 'I prescribe it over the counter.' It never fails to meet the cases for which I recommend it, even where the doctors' prescriptions have been of no avail."—C. F. Calhoun, Monmouth, Kansas.

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.
Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung! What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodge than to sing the truth into the popular conscience!

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT JECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkab alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

TAKE CARE OF YOUR HEALTH.

People have no right to be careless concerning their health. First, they have their own duties to do and they cannot do them properly without health; second, no person can be sick without interfering with the rights and privileges and comforts of others. Probably three-fourths of the sickness and disease in the world could be prevented by a little care, and what a shame it is for people who ought to be, and might be well and useful in the world, to make themselves ill, and dependent, and miserable, and so hinder others from their work, and weary them and make them ill, when a little care might have prevented it all. It is every person's duty to be well and strong, rather than weak, sickly, miserable, helpless, and burdensome to others. Hence all persons should be thoughtful and careful about their health.

Christians especially should care for their bodies, which are the temples of the Holy Ghost, and their health which is necessary for effective service for the Master. No one but a brute would wish to work a horse till it was sick. Yet many who claim to be Christians will work themselves, and their families, in a way which would be cruel in the case of a horse or a mule. People must learn to be careful of the Lord's property, and Christians are not their own, they are bought with a price, and should, therefore, glorify God in their bodies—Common People.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

—A lump of soda laid upon the drain-pipe down which waste water passes will prevent grease, especially if the pipe is flooded every week with boiling water.

—A physician says that the application of the oil of cinnamon, applied with a straw or small brush, is the very best remedy for bee stings. It will slightly blister, but will destroy the poison.

—To remove paint and putty from window glass, put sufficient saleratus into hot water to make a strong solution, and with this saturate the paint or putty which adheres to the glass. Let it remain until nearly dry, then rub off with a woolen cloth.

—Among many methods of removing particles from the eye the following is recommended as an efficient means: Make a loop by doubling a horse-hair. Raise the lid of the eye in which is the foreign particle; slip the loop over it, and placing the lid in contact with the eye-ball, withdraw the loop, and the particle will be drawn out with it.

—For corns put a small quantity of strong vinegar into a teacup and crumble some bread into it; let it stand half an hour, then put a little on a strip of cloth and bind around the toe, with the poultice over the corn; it can be taken out the next morning, but if the corn is an obstinate one it will require two or three applications to effect a cure.

—To clean paint that is not varnished put upon a plate some of the best whiting; have ready some clean warm water, and a piece of flannel, which dip into the water and squeeze nearly dry; then take as much whiting as will adhere to it, apply it to the paint, when a little rubbing will remove any dirt or grease; wash well off with water, and rub dry with a soft cloth. Paint thus cleaned looks equal to new.

—There can be little doubt, says the London Hospital, that were the bath, with friction of the skin, regularly employed by those up in years—and the habit, if acquired, can easily be carried on—much suffering and disablement from bronchitis or winter coughs might be avoided, as well as many of those troublesome forms of skin disease so often met. As a means for preventing colds, the bath is only of use if employed frequently—daily, if that can be; if not, then as often as possible, and with regularity.

—A gentleman who has made a study of the eye says, for the benefit of the people who have to earn a livelihood with the pen: "Never write on white paper if you can get yellow paper. A sheet or card of the same shade placed on the wall over the desk will assist in giving the eyes a rest, and this will facilitate the work." He has made this suggestion to many, and in each case has received the thanks of those who have been benefited by it. It is simple, and does not require any philosophy to prove it.

"A WORD TO THE WISE IS SUFFICIENT."

Catarrh is not simply an inconvenience, unpleasant to the sufferer and disgusting to others—it is an advanced outpost of approaching disease of worse type. Do not neglect its warning; it brings deadly evils in its train. Before it is too late, use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It reaches the seat of the ailment, and is the only thing that will. You may dose yourself with quack medicines 'till it is too late—'till the streamlet becomes a resistless torrent. It is the matured invention of a scientific physician. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

WESTERN AFRICA.
BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."
J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

Baptist Commendation.
"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.
Presbyterian Endorsement.
"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

Two ticket-office clerks arranged a slugging match Friday night in an old building at the Stockyards. They were arrested with 60 or 70 well-dressed spectators and locked up in a police station.

Another immense four-track swing bridge has just been opened to the public at Wells Street, near the Northwestern depot. It will be used only a few hours at morning and night until engines are in place to turn it by steam.

Natural gas is emitted from an abandoned artesian well on Cedar Street, near State. The well is 165 feet deep, and the gas, when lighted, burns a steady flame six feet high.

Judge Tuley administered a scathing rebuke to syndicates and large corporations, for the flagrant way in which they endeavor to override law and equity, and grasp everything within their reach.

Noble women have organized a Working Girls Rest and Fresh Air movement. Girls are sent out by companies to pleasant homes in the suburbs for a week's rest. Ladies outside the city are nobly aiding.

All the limited passenger trains between Chicago and Kansas City and Omaha will be withdrawn Aug. 26. This action is taken for the reason that the trains were unprofitable, and did not increase business in the least.

Several saloon-keepers at Hyde Park, our southern suburb, who violated the State law Sunday, were convicted and fined $5 each by the police magistrate last week. They all took appeals, but closed up on Sunday last.

COUNTRY.

The body of General Sheridan was removed from Nonquitt, Mass., last week to Washington, and was placed in St. Mary's Roman Catholic church. The final services and burial took place on Saturday. The public were permitted to pass through the building and look upon the casket, but at Mrs. Sheridan's desire it was not opened. The funeral services were simple. The final resting place of the great general will be in Arlington National Cemetery across the Potomac from Washington.

James G. Blaine arrived in New York Friday morning. His steamer, the City of New York, was met at quarantine by a thousand friends on board the Starin, which steamer he immediately boarded. On behalf of those present and the entire country, so many different and widely separated parts of which they represented, President Bartlett, of the New York City Republican Club, delivered an address of welcome, to which Mr. Blaine responded, and other welcoming addresses followed. Mr. Blaine—who is described as a picture of ruddy health—was driven to his hotel, where other addresses awaited him. In the evening he addressed an immense mass meeting of working men gathered to give him greeting.

The Indiana Republican State Convention held at Indianapolis on Wednesday nominated for Governor, General Alvin P. Hovey; Lieutenant Governor, Ira J. Chase; Judges of the Supreme Court, Silas T. Coffey, of Brazil, John G. Berkshire, of North Vernon, and Walter Olds, of Columbia City.

Attorney General Hogg of Texas has decided that Sunday base ball playing, where an admission fee is charged, is in violation of the revised statutes. It is the admission fee and not the game, then, that desecrates the Texas Sabbath.—Times.

A fire broke out Thursday in Chattanooga, Tenn. Hundreds of citizens rushed into the burning buildings and endeavored to save the threatened goods. The poorly constructed buildings collapsed. One building fell in when fifty persons were inside. The loss of life is estimated at ten, and four badly wounded.

A Pennsylvania syndicate has closed a deal for 110,000 acres of coal lands in Las Animas and Huerfano counties, Col., for $1,500,000. The land was owned by 900 claimants. Mr. Sibbets of Pennsylvania, who has been negotiating the deal for eight months, will, it is reported, receive $5,505 for his share.

Citizens of Evansburg, Pennsylvania, prosecuted employers of the Meadville and Linesville railroad for running Sunday trains, and the road is now preparing to move its depot two miles out of town.

A company with a capital of $15,000,000 has been chartered at Richmond, Va., to engage in a general telegraph and telephone business, with the telautograph recently invented by Professor Elisha Gray of Highland Park, Illinois.

Hugh M. Brooks, alias Maxwell, was hanged at St. Louis Friday morning for the murder of Charles A. Preller. Henry Landgraf was hung on the same gallows for killing his sweetheart. Maxwell's Masonry did not save him.

A passenger train on the Indianapolis, St. Louis & Chicago railroad was thrown down an embankment near Morgantown, Indiana, and twenty persons were injured, two of whom may die.

An epidemic of unknown nature is prevailing in the home and neighborhood of Philip Seltner, Bucyrus, Ohio. Five of his family are very low, and three neighbors who went in to nurse them have died and others are very ill.

David Arnold of Afton, Iowa, while on a drunken spree, attacked Abraham Bollinger, a locksmith, because of the prominent part the latter has taken in enforcing the prohibitory liquor law. Bollinger drew a revolver and shot Arnold dead. Bollinger then surrendered to the mayor, and is now in jail. Public sentiment seems to be with Bollinger.

Wednesday evening the sloop Flora B., of Pennsville, Del., capsized in a heavy blow near New Castle, and five women from Pennsville, who were in the cabin, were drowned. Their bodies were recovered.

Attorney General Baker, of Iowa, has brought twenty-five suits against the Northwestern, Rock Island, and Burlington Roads to enforce the penalties prescribed by the new schedule for violations of its provisions.

At the dairy farm of E. Hill, West Chester county, New York, about fifty cattle infected with pleuro pneumonia were being killed daily last week.

The Congressional committee which is investigating immigration evils heard the testimony of a factory girl who says Poles and Russians are hired for $4 a week to take the places of girls.

A family of four—Gustav Berg, his wife, mother-in-law, and daughter—living on the top floor of a four story tenement building in New York city, perished in a fire Wednesday morning. The week before twenty perished in a tenement fire in the same city.

The House of Commons passed a bill to investigate the London Times' charges against Parnell and other members of parliament by a vote of 180 to 64. Parnell has entered suit against the Times in the Scotch courts.

Fifty thousand persons gathered in the streets of Paris at the funeral of General Endes, the ex-communist. Cries of "Vive la Commune" and "Vive la Revolution" were raised and red flags unfurled. The police charged on the mob with drawn swords. A bomb was thrown but did not explode.

In a fatal collision at Hampton Wick depot, two passenger carriages were telescoped. The driver and stoker of the passenger locomotive and four passengers were killed.

A meeting of 2,000 Socialists at Berlin was dissolved by the police, who arrested several persons.

An eruption of the volcano Bundai-Zan, in Japan, occurred on July 15 and was one of the greatest calamities of modern times, as four villages were buried by the ashes, 500 killed, 700 wounded and 1,900 rendered homeless and destitute. The explosion is said to be due to the escape of pent-up gas, which carried away the whole side of the mountain. The chief sufferers were hot springs resorts near the summit, where out of 250 visitors from all parts of Japan only four escaped with their lives. This village, with four others in the vicinity, was covered deep with ashes, and nearly every one asphyxiated by sulphur fumes or killed by the shower of stones that fell.

While General Boulanger was riding in an open carriage through the streets of St. Jean d'Angly, in the department of Charente-Inferieure, Sunday, Prof. Perrin, a friend of Mayor Lair, the candidate of the Opportunists, drew a revolver and fired five shots at him. M. Rataplan, a friend of Boulanger, rushed upon Perrin and turned the direction of his weapon, and was himself wounded for his pains, though not seriously. Boulanger was unharmed. A fierce battle was raging between the rival parties at the time.

The Facts Stated.
HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.
This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

CAMPAIGN OFFER.

The CYNOSURE is offered during the Campaign for only ten cents. For the particulars please read the publisher's notice on page 13. The particular value of this paper during the next ten weeks to voters will be the response of candidates on the question of the lodge. Already the Presidential nominees of the Prohibition, Republican, and Equal Rights parties have responded to the desire of their supporters, also two candidates for Vice President and numerous State nominees. These replies are of greatest importance to American voters. We propose to make every number of the paper worth, to even an indifferent person, the price for the campaign, and to interested parties ten times that sum.

The Howe Building of the Memphis Bible and Industrial School is already completed to the eaves and begins to show a handsome front. Elder R. N. Countee, who has been visiting parts of Ohio, Michigan and Illinois, spent last Sabbath at Wenona with Mr. Howe and Prof. Davis, the successor of the lamented Woodsmall, returning to Chicago, from whence he started on Tuesday for Memphis. He hopes to return North in a few weeks for a longer season of rest, and more fully recuperate his shattered health. The institution in accordance with a favorite idea of Mr. Howe's will have an industrial department as well as theological, and provide technical training for the elevation of the colored race in body, mind and heart.

It is the argument of the Socialists that government should control railroads, telegraphs and the Pennsylvania coal mines, since it already manages the post-office successfully. But the express companies transport small sums with more economy, safety and convenience than the mails; and the experience of Mr. Judd will need to be repeated but a few times to entirely change the demand for enlargement of government service. By a mere accident, and the aid of private parties, the post-office authorities of Chicago discovered last week that the street mail boxes had been robbed of thousands of letters containing valuable contents worth over $200,000, and this business has been going on under their noses for over two years! So long as the post-office is made a political machine it will never be an efficient business concern.

We wish to commend to other communities the example of the Prohibition club in Wheaton, Illinois. Instead of spending a campaign fund in drums and pyrotechnics, and semi-military organizations which have nothing to offer in support of their principles after their legs are weary of marching and throats with yelling, debates have been opened with great success. Two college students, Edgar Wylie of the Senior Class of '89, and O. E. Moffett, representing respectively the Prohibitionists and Republicans, had a fine debate before a large audience lately, and are repeating it in various parts of the county. Mr. Wylie is an excellent speaker, and the Prohibition cause is gaining converts through his efforts. He was the first publisher of the Christian Witness of New Market, New Hampshire. The popularity of this debate has induced Prof. H. A. Fischer, of the N. C. A. Board, to arrange a discussion with Mr. N. E. Gary, an able lawyer of Wheaton, and a temperance man after the Republican sort.

George May Powell, president of the Arbitration Council of Philadelphia, and secretary of the Sabbath Association, lately appeared before the Senate Committee on Labor and Education to present the subject of railroad profit-sharing. He gave a detailed statement of the successful working of profit-sharing on the railways of France for more than a generation, showing that the peace and profits of stockholders and employes and the safety of passengers and freight in transit had been greatly enhanced through the system. On January 1, 1887, the Toledo, Ann Arbor & North Michigan road adopted a modification of the French system, and their first year has been highly satisfactory. It was the most prosperous financial year since the road opened; no fatal or even serious accident had occured to take the life of passenger or employe. There are some immediate and obvious advantages in this system, which in other lines of business have proved uniformly successful. It would give the railroad service a more intelligent and conscientious class of men; it would nearly eliminate the strike business from the calculations of managers and men, and so be a death blow to the secret lodges that prey upon railroad men. It would also begin the reform for the restoration of the Sabbath on the roads, since the men are pretty unanimous against the present seven days of labor each week.

The Cynosure has had no favor for the anti-foreigner movement, mis-named "the American party," begun in the anti-Chinese prejudice of California, and fostered by small traders in politics in the East. The fundamental idea of the party was not American enough to entitle it to the name. The national convention, for which the public has been waiting, met in Washington last Tuesday, with sixty-seven delegates (four more than half) from New York, fifteen from California, and the remaining forty-four from fourteen other States and the District. New York held the reins and managed to upset the wagon. The split came on the basis of representation, New York demanding a vote for every two of her delegates. The rest of the convention bolted on the second day, but the New Yorkers kept up their meeting and nominated James L. Curtis, of their State, for President. It has been sharply charged that the Democrats had packed the convention from New York, hoping to get a vote favoring the election of Harrison and Morton, the reaction of which would help their cause, as did Rev. Dr. Burchard's "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion" four years ago. The accusation does not seem, however, to hold good, and neither party in the field has much to fear from this still-born movement.

The Washington Post says: "One of the amusing phases of the political situation is the difference between Northern and Southern Democratic views of the third party. So long as the Prohibition army confines its campaigning in the North it gets only benignant smiles from the Democrats, for it is the avowed enemy of the Republican party and is determined to defeat Gen. Harrison, as it defeated Mr. Blaine, if it can possibly do so. * * * But no sooner does the Prohibition army move southward across the old border line and begin campaigning than the Democratic soul takes flight. Any possible menace to Democratic solidity is vehemently denounced."

At the late National Reform meeting at Ocean Grove, N. J., a communication was read from Hon. G. P. Lord of Elgin, secretary of the State Sabbath Association of Illinois. Since the organization of the Association at Elgin last fall, circulars and blank forms of petition have been sent to all the ministers of the State, and an immense number of signatures have been obtained.

PROHIBITION IN A RUT.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

Two of the characteristic ideas of Masonry are, that it unites its members on a Christless platform, and excludes women from its communion, swearing its members never to initiate a woman. In interviewing public men on the questions of woman suffrage and the recognition of Christ in government, I can nearly always determine if a man is trained in the school of Masonry by his opposition to these principles. A Masonic minister will usually reply by saying that he would recognize Almighty God, but he would oppose the recognition of Christ, because it would shut out the Jew.

While on the train in Wisconsin the other day, I sat with Hon. T. C. Richmond, who argued that the Prohibition platform should drop every plank except prohibition, especially the woman suffrage and God-in-government planks. Mr. Richmond, as I am reliably informed, is a regular adhering Mason. He is the most popular leader of the Wisconsin Prohibitionists, almost constantly in the field pressing this policy for the party. His argument is, the Prohibitionists cannot all agree in regard to the character and authority of Almighty God; therefore let us drop him from the platform. The Seventh-Day people are numerous and earnest, and occasionally there is a Jew who is a Prohibitionist. We can't all agree on the Sabbath plank; therefore let us drop that. Some Prohibitionists are opposed to woman suffrage; let us drop that. Some on the Pacific coast want protection from Chinese immigration; so let us drop the Chinese plank. Let us make only one line of political division. As in sorting potatoes, let us have but two heaps, then our work will be so much easier.

But this politician forgets that Prohibitionists have consciences, and unlike potatoes they will not stay just where you may want to put them. Mr. Richmond, like Walter T. Mills, is not a member of any church, and does not seem to count much on conscience as a factor in politics. They forget that the educated Christian conscience regards God's law as a unit. It cannot be taken up and carried in segments, by picking out one commandment, and ignoring the others. "He that offendeth in one point is guilty of all." The conscience that will ignore Divine authority at one point, will disregard it at any other point if the occasion offers, therefore Prohibition will have force only so far as there is behind it an intelligent recognition of God's authority and law. Leaving out this plank would be like attempting to build without a foundation.

Again, the cry, "Give us a rest," that is going up from the toiling millions, cannot be disregarded. Our government's disregard of the Sabbath, tramples upon as many human rights and liberties as the liquor traffic. It is the lesson of history that a Sabbath-breaking nation will as certainly be doomed as a nation of drunkards. We cannot ignore that plank for the reason that a few differ with us in regard to which day.

And no more can we ignore the woman suffrage plank. To drop that would be to ignore the mightiest agency God has used in creating the Prohibition movement. Without the Woman's Crusade, and its crystallized form in the W. C. T. U., where would the Prohibition movement have been to-day? It would not have been at all. And now shall the prohibition sentiment, created by these devoted Christian women at the cost of so much labor and sacrifice, be used by men who are mere policy politicians, for the purpose of lifting themselves into power, and shall this best moral and intelligent influence of women continue to be ignored in our politics? We say, No! God forbid it. Every principle of right and justice forbids it.

For the Prohibition party now to ignore these great moral questions it would cease to be a party of moral principles, and become one of mere policy. It would not broaden, but greatly narrow the platform. Fewer moral reformers could then stand on it. Those interested in other moral questions would lose interest in the platform in proportion as it dropped these issues. It would be raising no defense against other evils no less dangerous than the liquor traffic. It would ignore the central idea that God's law is the only true standard of right, the only law having authority enough behind it to induce men to respect it; the only law that can bind the conscience; the only law whose enforcement can secure the rights and liberties of all classes of citizens. It would be great injustice to the best Christian sentiment in the churches to ignore these great questions. It would be unjust to the National Reform Association, the National Christian Association, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, whose workers have for many years been laboring and sacrificing in sun and storm, to prepare public sentiment for such a party. And more than all others it would be unjust to God to whom we are indebted for all the progress made by this party. It would virtually be saying that we could better succeed as a party without God's blessing and help, than without the Scandinavian vote, or the vote of the Jew or the infidel.

Waukesha, Wis.

THE WEST END OF THE TABERNACLE.

BY REV. W. W. AMES.

In the study of the recent Sabbath-school lesson concerning the Tabernacle, toward which the people contributed so freely, it is legitimate to inquire why the Tabernacle was located at the western extremity of the outer court, and the Holy of Holies at the extreme west end of the Tabernacle. The account makes no direct answer.

A friend suggests, and I think plausibly, that there is great significance in the fact; and thinks it to be that many of the people had gone into idolatry, especially sun worship, and so God would show them their error by causing them to look toward the west when they came into the tabernacle, instead of saluting the rising sun, bowing toward it with their faces toward the east.

God, whose presence fills immensity, saw fit to instruct Moses to make him a local habitation where he would record his name and manifest his glorious presence. And as it was so natural for man to worship created objects, and the sun as the most prominent and powerful object in nature, paying special homage to it as it ascended the eastern sky, he would rebuke this idolatry or sun worship by fixing his local habitation in the western extremity of the Tabernacle, so that in approaching it, or looking toward it, their backs should be to the rising sun. And although no such reason is stated in the Bible account of the Tabernacle, yet Ezekiel's vision, (chapter 8: 16) seems to throw a strong light upon the subject: "And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and, behold, at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple of the Lord and their faces toward the east; and they worshiped the sun toward the east."

So we see that the arrangement of the Tabernacle and the temple of the Lord was a divine and perpetual protest against Baal or sun worship. Those twenty-five men are said to have constituted one of the twenty-four courses of priests appointed to attend upon the public services of the temple of Jehovah.

To what a pitch of impiety and heaven-provoking sacrilege, therefore, must those priests have come, who, while officiating as priests of God, turned their backs to the mercy seat, the Ark of his testament and the place of his glory, and worshiped the sun toward the east! God himself declared this to be the greatest of a lengthy list of great abominations that were being practiced by Israel in the house of the Lord. "And he said unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? Is it a light thing to the house of Judah that they commit the abominations which they commit here? for they have filled the land with violence, and have returned to provoke me to anger; and lo! they put the branch to their nose. Therefore will I also deal in fury; mine eyes shall not spare, neither will I have pity; and though they cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them."

It is clear as the sun that Freemasonry is but a continuation, perhaps in a modified form, of the ancient Baal or sun worship. The structure and obligations of the system are such as to encourage bad men in crime, to protect them from the just penalty of law, and in this way to "fill the land with violence." Nothing so much as the membership of professed ministers of Christ and prominent laymen helps to bolster up and perpetuate the abominable system. What will they do when God shall rise up to deal with them in fury for thus insulting the Divine Majesty, dishonoring his Son with their Christless prayers in the lodge, encouraging the wicked and profane to hope for heaven by lodge ceremonies while rejecting Christ, to say nothing of the strength they put into the hands of the wicked for all evil deeds? There surely will come a time when these triflers in Zion will be afraid, and trembling will take hold of them with a grip stronger than Masonic obligations.

"Wherefore, come out from among them and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing." Brethren, sound the trumpet of alarm, and pass the fearful warning all through the camp of the Lord's people. And may the Lord help them to hear and heed. Possibly some are conscientious in their adherence to Masonry, thinking because they have been told so gravely, that it is the "handmaid" of religion. But a thoughtful and prayerful investigation must convince any one that there is no agreement between it and Christ, and they should separate from it at once as from a train running to swift destruction.

A SUMMER WITH THE CHURCHES.

BY PRES. C. A. BLANCHARD.

II.

GENEVA.

This beautiful little city is located on both sides of the Fox river at the crossing of the C. & N. W. railroad. It has Congregational, Methodist, Episcopal, Unitarian, and other churches. A creamery, a large glucose factory and a heavy flowering mill are the principal local industries. Many citizens reside here and do business in Chicago, as is common in all these suburban villages. The rise from the river is gentle on the western bank, more abrupt on the eastern, and islands dot the stream, while groves of native trees are scattered here and there. There is much intelligence and kindly fellowship among the people. The county offices are located here also, this being the center of government for Kane county.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH,

where our meetings were held, is a model building. It is of stone, with stained glass windows, the windows being arranged so as to ventilate the auditorium quickly and thoroughly. The lecture room is a double parlor and is pleasantly fitted. The carpets and seats are very nice; in short, as I said above, it is a model building for church purposes.

Spiritually the church has received a great uplift under the constant and self sacrificing labors of Bro. Abbott, their pastor. The Lord rewarded the toils of years with a harvest last winter, in which many dear souls were brought into the kingdom. In this labor and blessing the Methodist church, Bro. Hardin, pastor, shared. I do not intend to slight the latter, but as my work was in the former, and as Bro. Abbott was longer a laborer in the field, I thus speak. The special meetings of last winter began under the leadership of brethren Henry and Jones from Chicago. They also led in the Batavia meeting, where was great blessing.

We had here the meetings planned, except on Saturday, when I was called to Chicago to attend the funeral of Mrs. J. M. Hitchcock, one of my dear friends. She was a quiet, home-keeping, Christian woman. Even in her life, patient in her suffering, ready for her transfer to the heavenly kingdom. Her husband is well known to all the Chicago Y. M. C. A. workers as Superintendent of the Free Employment Bureau. He has been a helper of many and of me also. He who smites binds up, and the time is short until our gathering together in Him. May God bless the empty home.

In our meetings the Holy Spirit was continually present. Bro. Abbott had thoroughly prepared the way, and many of our Methodist friends were also present. The study of the Bible seemed greatly blessed to the Lord's people, and I trust that seed sown will spring up and bear fruit after many days. The creamery question came very distinctly before us at this meeting. The Geneva Creamery is a large one, receiving, I am told, some 18,000 pounds of milk daily. It is very much prospered, the stock paying large dividends steadily. It is, as so many such institutions are, a Sabbath-breaker. Hundreds of men from the region round about pour in on the Lord's day with their milk, and then pour out again to the farms, very few of them, of course, attending church.

The church must assert the law of the Sabbath and afford these hundreds of young men an opportunity to go to the Lord's house, or the curse of Sabbath-breaking nations will come upon us. The young men who manage the creamery say that it could be run on the six-day plan just as well as otherwise; that they wish it were so run, and have questioned whether they ought not to leave it unless it should be so managed. This is only one case out of thousands. Men say: Well, if we keep the Sabbath how can we do this and that and the other thing? They do not begin by saying: We will obey God's law.

My home while in Geneva was with Mr. Benjamin Burton and Mr. C. H. Beers, both old and valued friends. May God return to them in abundant showers of blessing all their kindness. Bro. Abbott and I called on Dea. Evarts while the meetings were in progress. He wept as he spoke of the former revivals of religion, and his sorrow that he could not be with us. He is to be buried to-day,—labor ended, temptations passed, crosses all laid by, and the crown of righteousness given by the Lord, the righteous Judge. May I die the death of the righteous man, and may my last end be like his.

CLARENCE, IOWA.

The only meeting which I hold outside of Illinois is with the Wesleyan church at this place. Bro. C. R. Hunt, one of "our boys," is pastor, having moved here from West Union, Iowa, one year ago. He and his wife welcomed me to the parsonage Tuesday evening, July 17. After tea we went over the hills to the Valley church. It is indeed a beautiful valley, covered with waving grass and ripening grain. Here farm work was pressing and the afternoon meeting was given up. The 10 o'clock and the 8 o'clock meetings were held each day but Saturday, when the evening meeting was given up because of rain. Bro. Frink, with whom I remained most of the time, left his haying every day for the morning meeting, and yet had almost all under cover Saturday night when the storm came.

I was also guest at Bro. Decker's, Bro. McLeod's and Dr. Anderson's. The brother last named lives in the town of Clarence. Here I lectured many years since. God gave me fruit of that sowing. Dr. Anderson arranged for a union meeting in the Presbyterian church. Rev. Pierce is pastor of this church, and welcomed me heartily. The pastor of the United Presbyterian church was present, and Bro. Hunt came up with me, many of his members also being with us. It was, I think, a helpful time. Remaining over night with Dr. Anderson I came on the early train home.

I cannot speak with certainty of results. There were several who affirmed their purpose to seek God. One man of years, another of eighteen or twenty. The whole church seemed stirred and quickened. All were kind to me. May God reward them.

A writer in the American Magazine, speaking of Ecuador, says: "Although Ecuador is set down in the geographies as a republic, it is simply a popish colony, and the power of the Vatican is nowhere felt more completely. The return of a priest from a pilgrimage to Rome is as great an event as the Declaration of Independence; and so subordinate is the state to the church that the latter selects the presidents, the congress, and the judges. A crucifix sits in the audience chamber of the president, and one on the desk of the presiding officer of congress. All the schools are controlled by the bishops, and the children know more about the lives of the saints than about the geography of their own country. There is not even a good map of Ecuador." The picture the writer draws of the ignorance and superstition of the people is indicative of the results which flow from the Romish system of education.—Instructor.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN THE TWO SICILIES.

In Italy secret societies have, from the earliest times, found a congenial soil. The Senate of Rome, when the Senate ruled the world, was baffled even under the shadow of the Curia by the stubborn endurance of secretists, whose persistence in braving death outwearied even the relentless severity of their judges. Later on the Emperors were fain to wink at what they would not sanction and could not extirpate; and wherever the Roman citizen made himself a home he established clubs and associations which circumvented, if they did not violate the laws, de Sodaliciis et Collegiis. The guilds and companies of the middle age communes were based on the same principle of founding a State within a State, whose regulations should override the laws of the commonwealth. The mysterious Academy of Pomponius Liti, and later on the Society of the Arcadians and the Lincei of Rome, brought some of the same spirit of conspiracy into literature and science, as though it were impossible to discuss Dante without giving passwords, or puzzle over problems of physics save under the sanction of signs of recognition. Early in the present century the Carbonari, the Sanfedisti, and other similar societies, led back conspiracy to the more congenial fields of political intrigue; and ever since the establishment of constitutional Italy, sette have been the bugbear and the preoccupation of the executive.

"There is," said Massimo d'Azeglio, as wisely as epigrammatically, "some instinct of civil war in the heart of every Italian;" of civil war, as he might no less truly have added, based on intrigue and plotting. When his political aspirations are not forced to find expression in the manœuvers of oath-bound clubs, with secret pass-words and midnight meetings, the Italian is no less ready to forward his social, commercial, or criminal purposes by similar illegal associations, which often baffle every effort of the executive to put them down. The Squadracce of Romagna, the Ragnalatori of Parma, the Cocca of Turin, the Bagarini of Rome, in their contests with the state, are well able to hold their own; for in the law courts, where the issue is decided, the odds are all in their favor. "If," says the Opinione (Oct. 26, 1879), speaking of the sette of the Marche, "a member commits a crime his associates defend him by manufactured evidence, intrigues, and intimidation; and the influence which they can bring to bear on witnesses, judge and jury is such that a conviction is seldom obtained. The Italian of to-day is hardly more shocked at the mere shedding of blood than were his ancestors when they gloated over the massacre of gladiators in the Colosseum. It is only when some sudden catastrophe appeals to the imagination, or when halting Justice overtakes the criminal, and in cold blood exacts the penalty of life for life, that death seems really terrible. "Quannu ch'e la mortu bisogna piusari a la vivu," (When a man is dead we must think of the living; i. e., a live murderer is of more account than his dead victim), says a Sicilian proverb which formulates accurately enough, if somewhat cynically, the general conception of the duties of the law; and where a sentimental penal code, which actually fixes a close time in favor of crime by establishing a ten years' prescription against prosecution for murder, does not secure sufficient chances of escape, juries—puzzle-headed or sympathetic, or over-weighted by the complex questions left to them—do the rest. "Neapolitan jurymen," says Professor Turiello, "would think it almost a want of courtesy to return an unfavorable verdict against the elcquent appeal of a distinguished lawyer."

The natural result of all this is the ghastly supremacy in the death-roll which Italy holds among all civilized countries. In Naples, with its 500,000 inhabitants—where, by the way, it is said you can even now get a man assassinated for fifty-one francs—there were in 1881, 196 assassinations, 923 homicides, twenty robberies with murder, and parricides; and taking the whole country, the annual average of murder is sixteen times greater than is that of England. It is true that the foreign visitor to Italy goes away with the impression that the country is orderly, and that the risk to life is not greater there than elsewhere, and as regards himself that impression is correct. The vast majority of murders, save when the outcome of a drunken brawl, are due to one of two causes, neither of which concern the tourist. They are the result either of jealousy or "interesse"—trade disputes, shall we say? Such, for instance, was the cause of the terrible murder committed in Rome last July, when a building contractor was shot dead at mid nay by a business rival in front of the general postoffice amid a crowd of terrified onlookers; or, less frequently, they are the execution of sentences pronounced by secret societies for some infraction of their rules.

In Naples, and still more in Sicily, it has been well said, the distinguishing features of the Italian national character exist in their most accentuated form; and it is in the provinces of the old kingdom of the Two Sicilies that the operations of secret societies may be best observed. It is there that they are most openly, and it must be added, most successfully, in conflict with the constituted authorities. The Maffia of Sicily, and the Camorra of the mainland, though the ultimate end of the two is identical—the overriding of the law of the land by anti-social conspiracies, and the enrichment of their members by plunder—though both depend on murder as their ultimate sanction, and are in close alliance with brigandage where brigandage exists, differ somewhat in their methods. The Camorra, though it often dabbles in jobbery, and by playing into the hands of influential men finds protection in high places, is, in its essence, mere vulgar robbery reduced to a system. The object of the Maffia is, in the first place, to grasp at power, and by intimidation to wrest the machinery of local government to its own purpose, and is the more dangerous because when once it has imposed itself by terror it often acts under the forms of law. Neither of the societies, however, in spite of what has been sometimes pretended, though they sometimes avail themselves of political discontent to further their own ends, has, or ever had, any political purpose. The Camorra, it is said, was imported from Spain, and it is certain that when Sancho Panza banished from Barattaria the "Mirone," who asserted a prescriptive right to take toll of the winnings of gamblers in the island "hell," he had to deal with one of the best known forms of the Neapolitan Camorra. So, too, the "younger brethren" of Monopodio's brotherhood, so humorously described by Cervantes, divided their booty under fixed rules, had the police in their pay, and undertook to inflict beatings and death for fees paid by their employers, precisely as did the Camorristi of Naples in Bourbon times. It is by an extension of the term that Camorra is applied to a sort of trades unionism, or organized jobbery, that includes all classes, banding them together against any outsider.

Since 1862 the Camorra has been divided into the Camorra alta, or, as it is sometimes called, "Camorra in kid gloves," and the Camorra bassa. The latter is recruited mainly from the prisons and bagnios of the State, and lives by thieving and vulgar extortion. The former busies itself mainly with elections and jobbery, using, when violence is needed, members of the lower Camorra as its tools, and melts insensibly into the Clientele, groups of factious, unscrupulous electors, who look upon their votes simply as a source of income, and get in their candidate on the understanding that he shall share with them the plunder of the State or the municipality. Both orders of the society are, however, in alliance, and they cannot always be distinguished from each other.

But it is not so easy to classify the associations of farmers, whose operations were brought to light near Naples in 1880, having a common chest to support evicted members, and acting on a common determination to allow no land to be taken at higher rentals than what were agreed upon by the unionists. In these latter cases the Camorra has allied itself with the discontent due partly to the agricultural crisis and the fall in prices of produce, partly to other causes. In many of the smaller communes of the Apennines the appropriation of communal land at nominal rentals by the ruling families has led to something like a revival of feudalism. The angry discontent thus caused, though often checked by fear, finds expression sometimes in the burning of woods and crops, or in riots, which though seldom spoken of, are to the full as serious as those in Ireland. Petty tyrants, resembling Mr. Forster's "village ruffians" in this, at least, that they serve as figure-heads in the social war, use the blind rage of the peasants to serve their own ends, and are themselves instruments of the Camorra alta, which under this aspect can hardly be distinguished from the Maffia of Sicily.

If the Camorra has been weakened on the mainland, the sister society, the Maffia of Sicily, is still as powerful as ever. "Men of all classes and ranks belong to it," says the Blue Book on Sicily, published in 1877, "and Government has always been beaten when it fought the Maffia." "Maffia," we read in the official report on the agricultural condition of Sicily, published only three years ago, "though often apparently extinct, always breaks out again." "Perjury ordered by the Maffia is common in our courts." Professor Turiello, quoting with approval a letter of Prince Galati, says, "Though murders are now seldom necessary the rule of the Maffia is not less absolute. The comparative fewness of murders is really a bad sign. It proves the complete subjection of the population to secret societies; even if the aristocratic Maffia has often sacrificed its instruments, Maffia in high places has never been even vigorously attacked." "There is a wide-spread conviction," says the well-informed Signor Alongi, who, as member of the Sicilian police, is hardly likely to disparage the power of the executive, "that law is less to be feared than the Maffia. Many rich men are persuaded that either to belong to the Maffia or to keep on good terms with it is an absolute necessity for them." This evidence as to the power of the institution is so overwhelming that nothing further need be added on that score.

CRIME AND IMMORALITY.

A correspondent of the English Churchman furnishes the following statistics, copied from a papal source, viz.: L'amico di Casa Almanico Populare, published at Turin:

BIRTHS.

	Legitimate.	Illegitimate.	Legitimate		Illegitimate.
London	75 097	3,207	24¾	to	1
Paris	19,921	9,707	2 1-19	"	1
Brussells	3,448	1,833	1⅞	"	1
Monaco	1,854	1,760	1	"	1⅛
Vienna	8,821	10,360	1	"	1 1-6
Rome	1,215	3,160	1	"	2⅜

Rome, therefore, as regards the standard of illegitimacy, is six times worse than Paris, and sixty-six times worse than London.

In relation to murders the statistics are equally unfavorable. Here they are taken from the same source:

MURDERS.

			Proportional average.
England	has 1	in 178 000 people	1
Holland	"	163,000 "	1 1 5
Prussia	"	100,000 "	1 8-10
Austria	"	77,000 "	2 1-7
Spain	"	4,113 "	44¼
Naples	"	2,750 "	64 4-5
Roman States	"	750 "	237½

Comment is needless, unless it be to say that two-thirds of the murders which occur in Great Britain are committed by Papists.—The Christian, Boston.

A NOBLE SENTIMENT FROM RUFUS CHOATE.

The tendency to follow the baser rather than the nobler utterances of the great men of a country is a curious trait of perversity in shallow minds. We would recommend to their study the following noble thought and language of the great Rufus Choate, which is worthy of being enshrined in the hearts of all high-minded Americans. "National Hatred" was the topic of one of his orations. In it he said:

"No, sir, we are above all this. Let the Highland clansman, half-naked, half-civilized, half-blinded by the peat smoke of his cavern, have the hereditary enemy and his hereditary enmity, and keep the keen, deep and precious hatred, set on fire of hell, alive if he can; let the North American Indian have his and hand it down from father to son by heaven knows what symbols of alligators and rattlesnakes and war-clubs smeared with vermilion and entwined with scarlet; let such a country as Poland, cloven to the earth, the armed heel on the radiant forehead, her body dead, her soul incapable to die—let her remember the wrongs of days long past; let the lost and wandering tribes of Israel remember theirs—the manliness and the sympathy of the world may allow or pardon this to them; but shall America, young, free and prosperous, just setting out on the highway of heaven, decorating and cheering the elevated sphere she just begins to move in, glittering like the morning star, full of life and joy—shall she be supposed to be polluting and corroding her noble and happy heart by moping over old stories of stamp act, and tea tax, and the firing of the Leopard on the Chesapeake in the time of peace?"—The Critic, Halifax, N. S.

Our readers should be devoutly thankful for what they have been saved from. Read the names of the reception committee below, and then imagine what the result would have been had Mr. Blaine been nominated for the Presidency. The Republican party would have been the nest of every Roman Irishman in the country—if not this year, in at least four years. These are the men who made the arrangements for Mr. Blaine's reception in New York: Patrick Ford, Patrick Carrick, Patrick J. Howe, Patrick J. O'Grady, Patrick Cunniam, Michael Logan, T. F. Driscoll, John Fitzgerald, James Mullane, John McGarvey, Peter Brereton, James Carey, David Healey, etc., etc.—British American, Boston.

AN APPEAL FOR KANSAS.

TOPEKA, Kans., Aug. 15, 1888.

It seems to me that Kansas is a field much neglected by the N. C. A. workers. At present I know of nothing being done against the lodge in this important State. I have just returned home after seven weeks of preaching at Jamestown and Beloit, in northern Kansas. On this return trip I spent two days with old neighbors at Abilene, one of the most beautiful towns I have seen. At these and other places I find the lodge a dominant force. The number of these in many small towns in surprising. In Jamestown, a place of less than 500 people, there are eight or nine different lodges. One of these is a woman's lodge. There is hardly a prominent man in many Kansas towns who is not contaminated by lodge influence. An old friend in Abilene, Rev. C. H. Bagley, a native of the isle of St. Helena, and known to many Allegheny, Penn., people, told me that he knew of but four persons of any kind of prominence or intelligence in that town of 5,000 inhabitants who were not members of some lodge. One man there, belonging to a chief congregation, is also a member in nine different lodges. Mr. Bagley tries now and then to lift a warning voice. Once lately a lodgite told him he was crazy, and added that the lodge had grown more rapidly during the last three years, in both the number of different societies and of members, in the State of Kansas than in any other State in the Union. There is no reason to doubt this statement. There is no trumpet voice sounding a warning, and young men go into the lodge without a thought of its evil character. The cause of truth has friends in many places, but they are powerless to stem the tide.

I had the pleasure of meeting President Blanchard's brother at Beloit, and others whose hearts are with Jehovah against Baal. But there is no organization, no scattering of literature, and hardly a minister to witness by public voice against this iniquity that is sapping the spiritual strength of our great men.

In view of such facts as these, who can doubt the need of this mighty field? It is a time of laying foundations, and the magnificent empire that must rise on these vast plains cannot stand on a base planned in hell. No one awake to the questions of the present can doubt the transcendent need and importance of the West as a field for Christian labor. Whoever reads and ponders Dr. Strong's "Our Country" must be cognizant of this. The South may cry mightily, and the East demand instant putting forth of every energy to save its cities from becoming suburbs of hell, but the lines of power are focusing here in the West, and that influence, be it Jehovah's or Satan's, that grasps the opportunity will wield the destinies of America and of the world. I believe the time is ripe for immediate aggressive anti-secret work. After personal conferences, and distributing N. C. A. literature on trains and elsewhere, I feel sure that many are ready to listen. The present is a good time from the fact that the lodges are overreaching themselves. They are becoming a burden to the people; they have in cases mixed in with strikers, and shown other anarchical tendencies. Why not begin systematic work? I appeal to the N. C. A. to do something for Kansas. In my small way I would be glad to further the cause in my own State. But I expect to leave soon for New York, and yet I cannot go without saying something for this needy field. May not some one be secured to canvass the State, and turn "the Lord's great light" on the dark dens that breed corruption for the devouring of this central commonwealth? Yours for Jehovah, THOS. M. CHALMERS.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17, 1888.

This has already been, I believe, the longest Congressional session since the war. Many of the old Senators are predicting there will be no adjournment of Congress before some time in October. The Senate tariff bill is in the way. It may be two weeks before the measure will be ready. Then, it is said, there are fifty-five Senators who have signified their desire to make speeches in the general debate, and although this will occupy nearly a month, the Senate cannot be blamed, in these stirring campaign days, for seizing the opportunity, so long monopolized by the House, of pouring forth its pent-up tariff eloquence. Then, again, after the close of the general debate, the bill must be discussed by paragraphs, under the five-minute rule, before a vote can be taken.

The Fisheries Treaty has continued to be the bone of contention in the Senate, and on Tuesday a personal debate was almost precipitated, in which Senators George and Hoar were the principal figures. Senator George had read to the Senate resolutions of the Glouster Knights of Labor, denunciatory of capitalists in general, and of the Eastern owners of fishing vessels in particular, showing the condition of the laboring classes to be one of poverty and oppression, and commenting as he read. This brought the Senator from Massachusetts to his feet with a bound. He replied that the Senator from Mississippi did not know what he was talking about, and that the picture he had drawn of the fisheries and the fishery interests, and of the laboring men and capitalists of Massachusetts, was a slander in general, a slander in detail, a slander in gross, and a slander in particular. He thought it exceeded the limits of comedy and burlesque for Senator George, whose ideas of capital and labor (until within the last twenty-five years) were that capital should own labor, and have a right to whip the laborer and separate him from his wife and sell his children, to get up in the Senate and undertake to taunt the people of Massachusetts about shackles and unrequited toil.

The spot chosen for General Sheridan's grave is on the steep hillside, a few rods distant from Arlington House, the old Lee Mansion, now the office and headquarters of the National Soldiers' Cemetery. It is the only grave in front of the Mansion, and so, fittingly, Sherman lies in front of that army of dead heroes which finds a resting place at Arlington. The spot is in plain view from the opposite side of the river, and any monument which may be erected there will be visible from every high point in Washington.

In the District of Columbia the number of barroom licenses issued since November 1 is about 150 less than the number issued during the same period last year. This does not mean, however, that there are 150 less saloons. On the contrary, over 100 restaurants are now doing business without a license, and in defiance of law. Their proprietors having asked for licenses, and been refused, have simply continued their business without the necessery legal qualifications. The excuse which the police give for not having taken measures to prevent this state of affairs, is that until the recent decision of the District Supreme Court there was no certainty as to how far the authority of the Commissioners, and their power to refuse licenses, extended. This decision, however, was very sweeping, and gave to the Commissioners plenary power to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District, and to limit the number of saloons. *

—Elder Joel H. Austin writes from Lima, Indiana, of the brief visit to that place of brethren Shaw and Johnston. The old-time enthusiasm against the lodge was stirred in many souls; but too many heard them as if speaking a strange language. But the people discussed the secret lodge after their departure with more interest than for years.

REFORM NEWS.

NOTES OF THE WASHINGTON WORK.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 10, 1888.

At the noon prayer meeting to-day I met a dear brother in Christ from Norfolk, Va. His remarks came from the heart and reached the hearts of all who heard him. I learned that he was a minister, and engaged not simply in preaching as a profession, but in saving souls. I handed him a few leaflets and invited him to call at No. 215, 4½ street. He took the number and came in a little later. I noticed a modest emblem of the third degree of Freemasonry on his tie and felt a great desire to say a few words to him on the subject. He read at once on entering the N. C. A. office the character of our mission in the placards on the walls. When I spoke of objections to the lodge and gave as my chief reason for opposing the system that it rejected Christ, he smiled and expressed surprise at my ignorance. He said, "I am not always recognized by my brethren in the church and ministry, but my Masonic brethren are always and everywhere true, and I find it a great help in reaching many I could not otherwise approach," etc. I admitted the seeming advantages, because it is true; but called his attention to the price of personal liberty and private judgment at which those favors were purchased, and urged that to deny Christ before men for any consideration was a dangerous experiment. He listened attentively, but made no reply. He was evidently not well informed, but unlike many others, was willing to read. I gave him a supply of our tracts, and received a cordial invitation to visit him at his home, and I shall ask that the Cynosure be sent him for three months, as I am confident he is a man of God, and only needs the light to induce him to break the yoke which joins him with unbelievers. He is a man of Southern birth and ancestral pride, but knows no distinction among God's people. His brief remarks to Mrs. Stoddard's Industrial School were "apples of gold in pictures of silver," and will long remain a blessed memory with pupils and teacher. He is devoting a portion of his time in his own city to similar work. J. P. STODDARD.

GLIMPSES OF IOWA SUMMER WORK.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I preached for Rev. Mr. Wylie, the pastor in the U. P. church at Red Oak, Montgomery county, and at Pleasant Lawn, eight miles in the country. During the week following I canvassed the community. The congregations were small and the brethren were scattered, but as far as I could see them I found a commendable willingness to aid our reform work in Iowa. I had a pleasant home with Rev. Mr. Wylie, the pastor, while at Red Oak.

From Red Oak I went to Riverton in Fremont county. I called on Rev. Lytle, the pastor of Mount Carmel W. M. church, but found him gone to another appointment. I preached, however, at the Mount Carmel chapel on the Sabbath at 11 A. M. and at 5 P. M. The first part of the following week I devoted to scattering literature, as is my custom wherever I go, and to canvassing for the Iowa Association and the Cynosure. The W. M. brethren are few in numbers here, but they all showed a willingness to aid the cause. I called on Rev. Lytle on his return home. He heartily sympathized with the Iowa work; and he and his wife, who is also an earnest Christian reformer, contributed five dollars to it.

From Riverton I went to Shenandoah and called on the editor of the Fire Brand. I also saw Rev. Stannard, pastor of the Free Methodist circuit, and Rev. Mr. Allen, the district chairman. I went to Bingham, five miles distant, and took three subscriptions to the Cynosure among the Free Methodist brethren, and attended their prayer meeting. I then went to Imogene, a small town a few miles from Shenandoah, and secured one donation. I then returned to Shenandoah and, by invitation, stopped over the Sabbath with Bro. Allen.

It was Saturday. A district camp meeting was in progress, having been begun the night before. Being cordially invited to do so, I preached once, and followed other ministers with remarks a couple of times. On Monday, after an early prayer meeting and a love feast, I came on to Stanton, Montgomery county, where I now am. I sent thirteen new subscribers to the Cynosure last week, all for a year. C. F. HAWLEY.

CENTRAL LOUISIANA.

FURTHER NOTES OF TRAVEL AND LABOR.

CHENEYVILLE, La., Aug. 4, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I came here from Alexandria on the 3d, and was kindly received and entertained by Rev. C. L. Roberts. There are about 300 inhabitants in this place, the majority of whom are colored, a few of them doing very well. Mr. O'Neil, a colored gentleman, has one of the largest retail business houses in the place. Cheneyville sets on Bayou Boeuf, formerly a navigable stream. The T. & P. and the M. L. & T. railroads pass through here.

There are one Baptist, one Episcopal and one Disciple church here (white), with one Baptist and one M. E., colored. The secret Tabernacles existed here once, but they are all broken to pieces. There is but one secret lodge here among the colored, and that is the Farmers' Alliance. It is trying to lay every inducement possible before the people to make proselytes. They have been running a school three months in the St. Paul M. E. church, under the auspices of the Alliance. They have paid their teacher thus far regularly $25 per month. I visited the school yesterday and was introduced to Miss Lotta M. Davis of Jackson, La., the faithful teacher. Rev. C. L Roberts, pastor of Edgefield Baptist church, belongs to no secret lodge. He was at the N. C. A. convention in New Orleans, and heard Bro. Countee's ever-memorable speech and the wonderful lecture of Rev. J. F. Browne. He thinks secrecy an injury to the church. The white and colored citizens seem to live in harmony here. Bro. Roberts teaches his people temperance and morality. He has a handsome little farm of six acres, with a comfortable dwelling and a fine crop.

The Alliance school had their barbecue and exhibition to-day. There were several addresses delivered, and I was among them. My subject, by request of Mr. Luroy, one of the heads of the Alliance, was "The Benefit of Education to the Negro." I showed the uselessness of lodgery in educating the Negro. After I had finished Mr. Luroy moved to tender the N. C. A. lecturer a vote of thanks for the excellent lecture. It was unanimouslv carried. I had no tracts to distribute, and I left at 3:30 P. M. to take the train, with a promise to Elder Roberts to return Wednesday evening next and meet his church and distribute tracts to his congregation.

Opelousas, La., Aug. 7.—I left Cheneyville Saturday and arrived here at 7:30 P. M. I was kindly received by Rev. A. M. Newman, president elect of the Baptist State Convention. I attended Sabbath-school at Zion Baptist church, and lectured to the school by invitation of Bro. Newman. This school is one of the most intelligent in our State. I attended covenant meeting at the same church. The Spirit of the Lord was present. I preached at 8 P.M. by invitation of Bro. Newman on "The Clandestine Marriage." I also arraigned the lodge and distributed about 200 tracts and copies of the Cynosure.

This place has been for years the seat of the Supreme Court of the State. Opelousas is an inland town, on the Southern Pacific railway and at the northwest corner of the great Opelousas prairie. There are about 4,500 inhabitants, the majority of whom are colored; and, praise the Lord! there is not a colored secret lodge in the city—a strange thing, indeed. There were two lodges here, but they have both broken down—as all of them will eventually do.

There is nothing excellent on the Southern Pacific, saving its excellent fare of four cents per mile, if you purchase tickets before entering the cars, or whatever the conductor pleases to charge after entering the cars. Bro. Newman is a go-ahead anti-lodge man. It will be well for friends to write to him here and send him tracts.

It is strange to see that down here in Louisiana six miles distance makes such changes in the people. Vernon parish from Walnut Hill to Cliftons is perfect unity between races; also from Hemphill to the Rapides Bayou. Then from there very near to Alexandria, a strict color line is drawn, and the Negro best not attempt to cross it.

A part of this city is slightly hilly and the other part is almost a perfect table-land. Washington is about six miles northeast from here on the Bayou Courtableau. It is an American town, secretism having little hold there.

Opelousas is an old Creole city. About eight-tenths of the natives here are Roman Catholics. This may, in part, account for the scarcity of secretism. However, the secret lodges are not altogether forgotten here by the whites. The Farmers' Alliance (white), with about 150 members and delegates, are in secret session here since Aug. 1st, according to the St. Landry Democrat. The great fight in Zion Baptist church with the Baptist State Convention here last year, had the effect to draw every Baptist member out of the secret lodges; and as soon as the Christians withdrew from them, they went to pieces. That is just what lodgery all over the country would do if every Christian would step down and out of them. But just so long as the Christians and ministers will fellowship these deviltries, just so long they will continue to swear its candidates "to hail, forever conceal and never reveal."

I attended prayer meeting at Zion Baptist church last night, and spoke by invitation of the pastor. The people seemed to be deeply interested in what I said. Bro. Newman very heartily endorsed me and recommended our work as a grand one among the colored people. The district conference of the M. E. church of this district meets here to-morrow (Wednesday), but as I did not know it in time, other engagements will prevent me from remaining over for it. However, I am in hope to be able to meet the Eighth District Baptist association on the 16th, at Bayou Desglaize. I leave here to-day for Eola and Cheneyville. There are five white and two colored churches here in Opelousas. The colored people are very poor; wages are lower here than in any other large town I know of.

Eola, La., Aug. 8.—I left Opelousas yesterday morning, and had a plain view of the great Opelousas prairie. We were soon in the town of Washington, where I had a fifteen minutes' peep at the city where the remains of the noble De Soto were laid. The country west of the Courtableau between this place and Washington is an almost perfect table-land.

This is a small place with three stores, two colored and one small white church. I was kindly received and entertained by sister and Bro. M. A. Wade. I walked two miles down on Bayou Boeuf to the New Pilgrim Baptist church, where I met sister Wade, busy in her large school. I distributed many tracts here. There is a lodge of colored K. of P. here in the M. E. church. They are trying to make other converts to lodgery, but they have not, as yet, been very successful. It is a shame to see that these poor people work for from 50 to 70 cents per day and board themselves, some of them having four and five small children to support, and their lodges to keep up. Yea, some of them will let their families suffer rather than neglect their secret lodges. I have not seen either of the pastors, as they are both absent. I think I reached Eola just in time (D. V.) to prevent the lodge cancer from spreading. It is not an easy matter to get subscribers here, so we must have a few Cynosures sent here free to save these poor, poor people.

Cheneyville, La., Aug. 9.—I left Eola yesterday afternoon and reached this place at 3 P. M. Bro. Roberts was quietly waiting for me. I preached at Edgefield Baptist church last night and distributed very many tracts. After services several of the Alliance brethren came up to me and tried to explain the object of their lodge as being different from and better than other secret lodges. One argued that the churches don't do their duty, therefore the members resort to secret lodges for help. The good work has begun here. It will be well for friends to write to Rev. C. L. Roberts, Cheneyville, La., and send reform tracts. He is an out-and-out temperance man, and says if he votes in November, it will be the Prohibition ticket. Both Revs. Roberts and Newman are Prohibitionists. Bro. Roberts is president of the Eighth, and Bro. Newman of Opelousas is president of the Seventh District Baptist association. So you can see those two faithful servants of God have great influence among their brethren.

A WEEK IN OBERLIN.

Oberlin, Ohio, Aug. 14, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—A reunion with all the members of my family has been such an enjoyment, and the many things to do in getting settled in a new home have made me so busy, that I could not write till now. I reached here on the evening of the 4th inst., and found my family well; attended service in the Second Congregational church on Sabbath, and listened to an excellent discourse by Rev. Dr. Hutchins, who expects soon to leave for Los Angeles, Cal., to which place he is called. Dr. Brand of the First Church is away, and yesterday Rev. John Nutting (a Wheaton graduate) supplied his pulpit. Bro. Nutting is staying here for the time being, but has a call to Newport, Ky., to which place he soon expects to go.

On last Thursday was held here the Prohibition County Convention. It was large and enthusiastic. A procession three-fourths of a mile long, with many banners and a fine band of music, indicated the enthusiasm, while the part that the ladies had in the whole affair was quite conspicuous. The principal orator of the occasion, Mr. Logan of Delaware county, is an able speaker, and the crowded audience in the college chapel listened with attention and much applause to his speech of more than an hour. This was not distinctively an Oberlin movement. The delegations from other parts of the county were prominent, while the college people proper had little to do with the convention. A full county ticket was nominated, and a large vote will be given.

The Ohio Christian Alliance has been in session for several days at Linnwood, on the Lake shore. This is an association for the promotion of "Sanctification," "Faith-healing," and the doctrine of the pre-millenial advent of our Lord. They hold annual meetings at that place, and are about to secure permanent grounds for their use. Our most excel- and devoted co-worker, Dea. O. M. Brown of this place, is a leader in this movement.

Miss Carrie Judd of Buffalo, N. Y., who was a prominent worker in the convention, afterwards came here and gave two Bible readings in the chapel of the First Church. To one of these I listened, and was greatly impressed with the simplicity, earnestness and marked ability of this Christian young lady. I wish to say, however, with all due deference to the exalted character and motives of those conducting such meetings, that the practice of going away into the woods once a year, at much cost and considerable inconvenience, to discuss questions that could be quite as well considered in the quiet of home, or in one's own place of public worship, looks like a religious dissipation and a waste of resources. I know that this kind of religious gatherings is very prevalent and popular, but it seems to me they tend to build up a piety that is effeminate and has in it a large element of self-indulgence. Those who are waiting for the coming of their Lord will be best prepared by a careful attention to the work he has given them.

I have found the old Anti-masonic guard here all faithful. They have abated not one atom of their abhorrence of the lodge system. Nevertheless, their time and means seem specially demanded for the promotion of the cause of National and State Prohibition. "One thing at a time" seems to be as much a law in moral and political development, as in the functions of man's physical system. The theory that "Similar cures similar" rests on this law. The overthrow of the liquor traffic, when once it has been decided on by the popular voice, will necessitate, as well as make way for, the overthrow of the lodge system. There are multitudes, including such men as the honored president of Oberlin College, who thoroughly despise the lodge, but do not feel constrained to make war upon it. There is a great host of conservative anti-secrecy people here and elsewhere, who will ere long be forced to meet this question and settle it, as slavery was settled; and as every iniquitous system must be eventually suppressed. After a brief visit to Medina county I hope to return West. Yours in the Lord, H. H. Hinman.

NOTES FROM THE BIG ARNOLD TENT.

While making active preparations for again starting on a lengthy lecturing tour, came the sad news that Mr. A. was now an orphan. He was fatherless before our marriage, and now the dear mother who had for many years watched with kind solicitude over both the temporal and the eternal interests of her boys, had breathed her last prayer for them and gone—"where God and the angels live."

With the double duty of laying away in the silent tomb the form of Mother Arnold and of beginning work, we bade adieu to Wheaton and took the train for Sycamore, where the excellent Free Methodist minister gave Gospel consolation.

There is wonderful consecration on the part of the ministry of the Free Methodist church, hence the presence of the Holy Spirit in a wonderful degree attends their efforts. The Sycamore pastor called at our large tent one day and was introduced to an aged man who chanced to be in. Now what do you suppose the man of God did? Why just the thing that any Christian who believes heaven else hell awaits every man. He wisely inquired after the health of the man's soul, and finding him lost, did as a lawyer would do, brought to bear upon the case the very best reasonings and persuasions he could command. This was done so kindly and yet so plainly that the man, though old in sin, almost became as a little child. Reader, will you be faithful in personal work?

Mr. A.'s first course of lectures, ending with the two on Baal worship, were given in a hall in Genoa. We rented vacant rooms in a house occupied in part by the family of the saloon-keeper. The men were at first painfully bold; but after overhearing the godly conversation, sacred songs and prayer, their manners were greatly changed. The mother and little girl went with us to the M. E. church Sabbath morning, and seemed to enjoy the class-meeting. The partition between our sitting-rooms was so frail that the two families could hear what was going on in each other's apartment. Sabbath afternoon the little girl came in and said her papa wanted us to sing; so Mr. A. got the Gospel Songs and gladly we sang with the Spirit as well as the understanding.

Two lectures were held in the M. E. church next, when we met the excellent family of Bro. M. Worcester, with whom we used to enjoy quarterly meetings in the Wesleyan church at Brush Point.

Next we went to Sycamore, where we met the two students who were to be our helpers. Here the large tent was brought. Four lectures were given in which God gave to Mr. Arnold great boldness of speech against tobacco, rum, gambling, Masonry and Odd-fellowship and other evils. Some of the dear friends of Sycamore expressed their opinion that the life of the lecturer was in jeopardy.

While here the Noss family, who were advertised for a pure, sensible, refined, splendid concert—one which would not hurt the most conscientious—were listened to by our family in the large hall of the little city, with the hope of self-improvement in the line of music. But as that which causes the soul of the listener intense agony is not easily copied, we probably came away without benefit. The daughters, who handled their musical instruments with skill, were showily dressed, and their bold air, if copied by all the children who were present, would mar the bliss of many a home. One of the young women came upon the stage dressed as a man. He piece, as also nearly if not quite all the pieces, were far from being to the glory of God or the elevation of mankind. A Catholic girl has since informed us that for girls to appear on the stage dressed in tights is a common practice at theaters.

Reader, do you know that God's Word says, "The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment: for all that do so are abomination unto the Lord thy God." Added to this is a law of our land similar to the one quoted. That young woman ought to have been arrested right on the spot. It would have been a wholesome lesson to this class of people who are turning society into channels of sin. Not knowing it to be our privilege to call for the arrest of the girl, we simply groaned aloud and soon found our way to the door. Some time ago we learned that some of the good women of Chicago moved the authorities of that place to cause the removal of shameful posters which had been put up in the interest of some sort of entertainment. Who ever saw a poster advertising a circus that was not indecent? Even P. T. Barnum, who is said to be a Presbyterian, has large pictures of people in shameful dress and position. And although there may be a show of good reasoning in the idea of it being a legitimate matter to allow the public the privilege of seeing a large collection of animals, yet when we take into consideration the enormous waste of money on gorgeous equipage, the vain pomp and glory which each of us, who have been baptized or joined the church, have publicly renounced—solemnly promising to forsake the lusts of the flesh so that we will not desire or be led by them. Added to this the ludicrous clowns who perform among the animals, and the needless excitement occasioned by seeing uncommon feats, have a very great demoralizing influence on the children and youth of our country. Barnum and Bailey claim that their daily expenses are six thousand eight hundred dollars. God calls for at least one-tenth of the income of all his children, and of course his right to the hearts and tithes of the rebellious is just the same. How many of the half dollars that go to make up that $6,800 belonged directly to the cause of Christ on earth?

Oh, reader, awake! gird on your armor, grasp your sword and slay sin on your right and on your left. Our Sabbaths are almost gone. Our churches are becoming cold and lifeless. Our pulpits are being filled by lecturers rather than preachers, and what shall I say more? Oh, that the Spirit of the Lord would raise up a standard against these evils! Oh, for a sweeping revival of pure and undefiled religion! Lord, are there few that be saved?

MRS. I. R. B. ARNOLD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LABOR AND LODGERY.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Union Labor party, like the late Greenback Labor party, is manned and manacled by Freemasonry. Gen. Weaver and his co-workers are zealous lodgeites, sworn to Masonic despotism and favoritism. Not satisfied with heading their ticket with a sworn lodge minion, they must needs inflict others upon the movement. Ahira Manring, the Union Labor candidate for governor of Missouri, is a Royal Arch Mason, who has, perhaps, made more Masonic slaves on Grand river than any other man. He has grown gray in the service of Most Worshipful Grand Masters and Grand Kings.

The government of Masonry is "completely despotic," so says the Grand Lodge of Missouri; then what consummation of cheek and gall to ask honest laboring men to vote for Ahira Manring and his ilk. God and humanity pity working men who rely on men sworn to the very life to mastery and despotism. Such Masonic agitators, prating about oppression and privileged classes, are a living lie from the crown of the head to the soles of the feet. The man bound by the most horrible oaths and barbarous, mutilating death penalties to one-man power, to kingcraft and priestcraft—the quintessence of treason and conspiracy—is hardly a suitable represesentative of working men.

What must be the intelligence and acumen of laborers who vote for such sworn enemies of popular government? Those deluded voters deserve the hearty commiseration of all honest patriots. What a stupendous farce to cast a ballot for an avowed Freemason to better the condition of American working men. A sincere Freemason is the sworn enemy of American principles, doctrines and institutions. Let every voter send to W. I. Phillips, 221 West Madison street, Chicago, and get a sworn exposition of Royal Arch Masonry, before supporting Streeter, Manring, or their Masonic company.

M. N. BUTLER.

AMONG CHICAGO REFORMERS.

BLOOM, Ill., Aug. 13, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After several weeks spent in Wisconsin, running against Good Templars at nearly every turn, and finding whole lodges opposed to third party prohibition, I came down to Chicago Saturday and met with the Cook County Prohibition Committee at their headquarters, No. 95 Dearborn street. About fifty of the Prohibition leaders of the county were assembled here in the rooms of the Post, the county Prohibition paper. I never saw a body of men in such dead earnest. The very atmosphere seemed loaded with prohibition sentiment. The time was occupied in discussing campaign work; how to push the tent work and the agitation generally.

Chicago may be the headquarters of dynamiters and anarchists, but it is also the headquarters of moral reform for the nation. Here the National Christian Association, the W. C. T. U. and the National Prohibition headquarters are located, and from here reform sentiment radiates to all parts of the land.

The difficulty in Wisconsin was to find places where meetings might be held. But the difficult question here is, what points shall I select from the many proposed? Bro. William Morrow, who is a member of the County Committee, was present at the meeting Saturday and took me down to Bloom, where he is pastor of a fine congregation of Presbyterians, who turned out twice on Sabbath to hear my presentations of National Reform. One brother, when asked how he liked the sermon, said he felt as though they had a slice of the day of judgment.

In the afternoon I drove with Bro. Morrow over to Glenwood, to hear my old friend, B. F. Worrell, who ministers here to a Presbyterian congregation. He was just rising to begin his sermon when his eye caught me in the audience. He almost collared me and dragged me out before his people, and made me preach. It was a very pleasant Sabbath I spent with these brethren at Bloom and Glenwood.

PITH AND POINT.

A FIELD FOR SWINDLERS.

I wish you would send me the facts as to what God says about secretism. I wish to give my people the truth on the subject. I have them now so that I can speak on the subject without their becoming offended over the matter. If I can get a "thus saith the Lord," it will do more good than anything else. I see where Bro. F. J. Davidson says it would be a good thing to publish the ritual of the S. S C., and other minor lodges. I would suggest that the ritual of U. B. F. be published; this is the lodge that is taking the day in Texas. The secret orders are multiplying every day. The old ones are dying out, and new ones being made—yes, they are made; that is the way they get them. When a man wants to make some money without working for it, he gets up an order and starts out, and in a few months he has all the money he wants. I wish there was a law to have every person arrested who attempts to make a living off the people in this way —J. R MCLEAN, Paris, Texas.

WILL SOME HOUSEWIFE ANSWER?

My wife wants me to ask you to tell us through "Farm Notes," in your valuable paper, how to can green corn, as she has tried different ways but it won't keep. A reliable recipe would be of great benefit. Our crops are plentiful; corn never looked more promising. This is a very quiet corner. We don't have any political excitement. The two old parties only are represented here. I am so disgusted with both that I have not voted for a long time.—J. D. GUENGERICK, Amish, Iowa.

ANOTHER VETERAN SUBSCRIBER.

I don't want to be without the paper, since I have taken it from its beginning It is becoming a power for good, and I feel more and more that its position on the secrecy question is right.—(Rev.) C. D. BROOKS, Candor, N. Y.

PASSING AWAY.

Coming to my old home in Rochester, I find many of my old friends and fellow workers gone ! and I realize the more:

"Time flies! man dies!
Eternity's at hand!"

But

"What's best, my rest
Is in Emanuel's hand."

GEO. W. CLARK.

THE MEMPHIS SCHOOL COMMENDED.

I am glad to see that Bro. Countee is recovering, and is on the right track for the moral and religious training of our race. It is the only way to make a people self-sustaining, with intelligence sufficient to accept Christ, not only in theory, but in fact. Three years ago we began the same work but failed on accout of local preachers. We will in a few days start again. I call Reformed Episcopalians' attention to this important field in the South. We must have a church and industrial work in Mobile.—I. M. WILLIAMS, Mobile, Ala.

THE SOUTHERN COLLEGES.

To the interesting notes from Southern Colleges of last week we have the pleasure of making a large addition. A considerable number write in general terms that books in opposition to secret societies will be received. To most they will be welcome and will be gladly put to good use among the students. Besides those quoted below, replies from scores of others have been received, and indicate the wide field of usefulness open to the generous friend who may be able to help the N. C. A. place its books in the hands of thousands of Southern students. The following extracts will be of interest:

THE COLUMBIAN UNIVERSITY, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Books opposed to secret societies would be admitted if deemed valuable. We are ourselves opposed to them.

JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY, BALTIMORE.

Works on social or economic subjects, such as secret societie, sbeneficial societies, labor organizations, strikes, etc., would be very acceptable, and would be thankfully acknowledged.

NEW WINDSOR COLLEGE, NEW WINDSOR, MD.

We are very happy to place in our library any books "of good, moral character," and we would not object discussing fairly on both or either side secret societies.

TULANE UNIVERSITY, OF NEW ORLEANS, LA.

I discourage, but do not forbid secret societies. Here they generally meet at the houses of parents. It is not a special evil with us, as our students all live in families. I would gladly place books mentioned in the free reading room.

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, ANNAPOLIS, MD.

We shall be much obliged for any contributions. Our library is most wanting in works of fiction. There are no secret societies at the college.

WAKE FOREST COLLEGE, N. C.

We do not allow secret Greek-letter societies here. I would be glad to have any literature on the subject.

GEORGETOWN COLLEGE, GEORGETOWN, KY.

As we do not allow secret societies in the college here, we would be glad to get "a library of books" on that subject.

UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH, SEWANEE, TENN.

There is no prejudice against secret societies here. On the contrary, the university encourages the growth of fraternities among the students.

LITERATURE.

Rev. H. A. Thompson, D. D., of Westerville, Ohio, late president of Otterbein University, who has been appointed Commissioner of the Department of Education at the Ohio Centennial Exposition, Columbus, desires to make a collection of books written by Ohio men and women, whether the authors were born in the State or were at any time residents. It is designed to get a copy of every such book, and the collection is to become the property of the Archæological and Historical Society, and will be under the custody of the State Librarian.

The midsummer issue of The American Magazine abounds with interesting and timely literature. Dr. W. F. Hutchinson presents the fourth of his finely illustrated articles in the series, "Along tne Caribbean," in this instance dealing with Trinidad. Another entertaining paper is entitled "Where Burgoyne Surrendered," by C. H. Crandall, in which is described the Saratoga Monument that is soon to be unveiled. Frederick G. Schwatka, the noted Arctic explorer, tells about "The American Arctic Savage" in an entertaining manner, and Trebor Ohl has an illustrated paper on "Six Story-Tellers for Children," in which she speaks of the lives and work of Louise Imogen Guiney, Margaret Sidney, Mrs. Abby Morton Diaz, Nora Perry, Mrs. Lizzie W. Champney and Alice Wellington Rollins. Joel Benton has a poem on "Midsummer," and Sara F. Goodrich describes "The Country in Midsummer." An article on the "First Capital of Kansas is full of historical interest, though lacking in literary merit. Pawnee was the name of the now long defunct city.

Through the kindness of President S. H. Peabody we have a copy of the second bulletin issued by the Agricultural Experiment Station connected with the University of Illinois at Champaign. It is on the subject of Ensilage. This document will be of value to all stock-raisers of the State, who can obtain a copy at the university.

The Cosmopolitan Magazine, after dropping a number, has renewed publication with a brilliant number. A legitimate use is at last found for the colored plates in illustrating a bright paper full of rose-lore, on "The Romance of Roses," by Mrs. Sophia B. Herrick. China-town of New York, with its 10,000 inhabitants, is described by Wong Chin Foo, the Chinese philosopher and lecturer, who is also a semi-heathen infidel. He takes occasion to slander his countrymen who have given up their dark superstitions and embraced Christianity. He describes quaintly many of the Chinese customs in America, as the "fan tan" gambling games which are so carefully guarded in San Francisco, the restaurants where dried ducks and cuttle-fish are served unsavory to the eye, the barber shop, joss worship. A conspicuous article is by Frank G. Carpenter, the Washington correspondent and painter, on the "Ladies of the American Court." Twenty portraits are given, and the stories of Washington social life make us glad to avoid it, and shrink from the vortex of fashion, pride, ambition and hateful old-world aristocracy which is thus revealed.

Sheridan's Franco-Prussian war article in the November Scribner will be called "From Gravelotte to Sedan." Sheridan was with Bismarck when the great statesman sprung from his carriage with a pistol in each hand and cleared the streets of the village of Garge. He was also with him when he dismounted abreast of the carriage of the defeated Napoleon. Sheriban's description is very interesting and graphic. He says Bismarck saluted the Emperor "in a quick, brusque way, which seemed to startle him."

The Century proposes to devote a single issue—the forthcoming September number—largely to educational themes. The contributions will include "The University and the Bible," by T. T. Munger, a plea for the study of Christian as well as heathen classics; "Women who go to College," by Arthur Gilman, and "The Industrial Idea in Education," by Charles M. Carter. One illustrated paper is on "College Fraternities," with pictures of twenty-eight chapter-houses and society halls at Yale, Harvard, Princeton, and other colleges.

The New York Daily Graphic is issuing a timely political library. Number One contains a concise and comprehensive life of Grover Cleveland, embracing all his notable State papers. It is illustrated by pictures of the President and Mrs. Cleveland, the wedding at the White House, Cleveland's birthplace and other interesting places and events. Number Two presents the great Tariff speech of Roger Q. Mills, of Texas, summarizing the Mills bill.

Words and Weapons is more then ever devoted to news from the evangelists, who are generally resting this summer. Mr. Pentecost is in England. The editorials are on church work and organization. Dr. Pierson biography begins the life of Bunyan. Bro. Charles Herald, the singing evangelist, pleads for the poor in our great cities. The Christian worker needs such a live and earnest journal to help him to deeper zeal.

Vick's Magazine has a fine August number. Eben E. Rexford, the well-known authority on gardening, writes of "Border Plants." The editorial on "Care and Culture of Trees and Plants" is worth the reader's attention, and there are scores of hints and scraps of experience of greatest value to the florist and gardener.

OBITUARY.

Leland M. Rhodes, an old subscriber of the Cynosure, fell asleep after weeks of great suffering. He died April 18, 1888, aged nearly 72 years.

He was born in Berlin, N. Y., in 1816; married to Caroline Clark and came to Geneva, Wis., in 1849, where he lived for twenty-seven years. During that time he became involved in a lawsuit with the Freemasons, by which he came near losing all his earthly possessions and his good name; but after much loss of property gained his suit at last. He moved to Esmen, Livingston county, Ill., in the spring of 1876, with his family, where he remained until his death. He became a Christian when he was very young, and made the Bible his daily study from his youth up. He was very zealous for the cause of Christ, and was instrumental in building the First Baptist church in Esmen, which is opposed to all secret organizations. He was a strong advocate against all secret societies, spoke against them always wherever he had an opportunity, and has been a great worker for the cause. He leaves a wife, three sons and three daughters.

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. W. Tanner, of Pontiac.

LODGE NOTES.

Charles Wolford, Past Grand Master of the Sovereign Lodge of the World, I. O. O. F., died at his home in Louisville, Ky., lately, aged 78. He had been an Odd-fellow fifty-five years.

The bill introduced by Frank Lawler to amend the Interstate Commerce act was constructed by that Congressman himself, out of a petition sent by the Chicago Knights of Labor. Lawler is an old Chicago saloon keeper.

Saturday, the 11th instant, was an anniversary for the order of Foresters. In Chicago they celebrated by parading the streets with bands and a picnic. This order has a kind of Knight Templar degree for its aristocratic members, known as Uniform rank.

The High Court of Foresters, sitting at Reading, England, has carried, by a vote of 403 to 93, a motion revoking the powers of the Subsidiary High Court of America, and suspending American courts until they comply with the rules regarding the admission of colored persons.

Last Monday afternoon a delegation of 150 colored Masons, members of Concordia Commandery of Knights Templar, from Chicago, paid General Harrison a visit in regalia, at his home in Indianapolis. They were en route to Louisville to attend the Knights Templar convocation. The General and Mrs. Harrison met them at the door, and in response to a brief congratulatory address, General Harrison cordially thanked them for their visit.

Andrew Carnegie's profit-sharing scheme with his 3,500 employes at the steel works at Braddock, Pa., has gone into effect. The men have formally elected an accountant, to be paid by Mr. Carnegie for examining the firm's books, and making a monthly division of the assets. One hitch, however, has been developed. The Knights of Labor would not countenance the scheme, and, as a consequence, the three assemblies of that order in Braddock have surrendered their charters. Mr. Carnegie's contract treats with every man individually.

Chief of Police Hubbard, of Chicago, in commenting upon part of Herr Most's testimony before the Congressional Committee, where the arch anarchist says that the Chicago anarchists are not obliged to hold their meetings in secret, pronounces it a lie. The Chief has, he says, spies among the Chicago anarchists, and, except when they meet by threes or fours, everything they do is reported to him. He is well advised as to their methods, and says they are very quiet at present. In the town of Jefferson, Eighteenth street and Center avenue districts, children are taught the principles of anarchy in the Sunday-school. Should Herr Most come to Chicago he would be treated in a way savoring of anything but the leniency with which he is treated by the police there.

The State Federation of Trades and Labor Unions of Indiana held its fourth annual session on the 7th. Resolutions were adopted declaring that these lodges "cannot support the candidates of the Republican party for President and Vice President, because both of them are wanting in sympathy for the laboring classes." The sessions of the federation were held with closed doors, and it is charged openly that some thirty to forty accredited delegates known to be Republicans were refused admittance to the hall. From all that can be learned from reliable sources it seems that both the Democratic and Republican State organizations made efforts to secure the control of the federation through the District assemblies, and that the Democrats were most successful.

The meeting of the chairmen of the grievance committees of the Brotherhood of Engineers at St. Louis August 9 and 10 was a secret one. It was learned, however, that the object of the conference was two-fold—to refer respecting the status of the "Q" strike, and consult regarding the proposed amalgamation of the engineers, firemen, brakemen, and switchmen. It is given on the authority of a prominent engineer that a strong alliance has been formed between the orders named. Resolutions were adopted indorsing Mr. Arthur and Mr. Sargeant, and it was decided to continue the "Q" strike and to increase the pay of the strikers from the strikers' fund so that they may make provision for the winter. The engineers will hereafter receive $60 per month, and the firemen $40. Plans are in progress in regard to the strike, but no one would reveal what they are.

In mirthful measures, warm and free,
I sing, dear maid, and sing for thee!
But I think I would be performing a greater service to you and your sex by singing, not in measured rythm but by setting out some strong truths in simple prose. If you or any of your female friends are suffering from ulcerations, displacements, bearing-down sensations, or unnatural discharges, use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Perscription, which is sure to eradicate these complaints in a short time. It is the only medicine for woman's peculiar ailments, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

OLD WORLD LODGERY.

The article which is begun in this number from the English Fortnightly Review, "Secret Societies in the Two Sicilies," will repay a careful perusal. It is a life-picture of the sunny south of Europe, near Rome, where Christianity, or a system by that name, became mistress of the world. And the fact that Corsica gave the world Napoleon Bonaparte, proves that these beautiful islands have produced intellectual giants. But whoever reads the article will see Christianity paganized, and a population, weak, timid, ignorant of their rights, and wholly incapable of keeping up a state of society much above the owest level of heathenism in regard to security of lproperty, life, and the fundamental relations of society. And they will see this revolting state of things produced by secret societies, the natural born descendants of priestism and the doctrine of salvation by ceremonies. For if I must be saved or lost as I practice or refuse certain rites administered by men, my priest has my salvation in his hands: and by refusing me the ceremonies, he can shut me out of heaven. And, further, as all such systems are Christless, the mind of the worshiper is stunned, stupefied and sunk. And this explains the utter degradation of the people in the Sicilies to-day: and their picture given in this article is a mirror in which the United States can see its face fifty years hence unless God interposes and the lodges are destroyed.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

WINDHAM, Vt., Aug. 13, 1888.

I am here amid the green crests of the Green Mountains. Rev. Mr. Leach had arranged with the pastor, Rev. Mr. Beckwith, for me to preach here yesterday, while he went three miles farther to preach at South Windham.

It were useless for me to try to give you the emotions which thrill me as I write here in Mr. Beckwith's study, while he is away at Saratoga. This was the mountain home of Rev. U. C. Burnap, who came into Chester Academy when I was fourteen years old. I was in the room of George S. Park, founder of Parkville and its college in Missouri, whose press the rebel mob destroyed, and whose life they attempted to take. Mr. Park was then a Grafton boy, a little younger than myself. He is now the wealthy brother of the wife of Mr. Peter Howe, well known to the readers of the Cynosure, and to Masonic lodges also. I was scuffling with an older lad, and was having decidedly the best of it, when Mr. Burnap, then both pastor and preceptor, came up to the room, and was shaking with laughter at the scuffle. I saw him, as he pronounced my name, and I need not say I was abashed enough when I heard his familiar voice. Instead of the reproof which I expected, I received an invitation to become a member of his family, where I studied and took care of his cow for two years. I loved him as a father. There I experienced religion and began a life of prayer. In after years I procured him a call to the Appleton Street church, Lowell, Mass.; and no memory, except that of near kindred, is to me so hallowed as his.

This town of Windham was the home of the Burnaps, all upright men and women, and all children of God. Asa Burnap was the first person who suggested to me that I was entitled to hope in Christ. We stood in the bright moonlight by the roadside, in front of Mr. Burnap's house on the bank of Williams river in Chester, a mile below Chester village.

I had been in mental distress for six months; praying, but not daring to hope in Christ, because I was conscious of sins, or the workings of depravity. Mr. Burnap said, "How do you know that you are not now converted" to Christ?

"I know I am not," I replied; "for it seems such a wonderful thing that the Son of the infinite God should come to this earth, and love, labor and die for such insignificant, sinful creatures as I am, that I cannot believe it."

Mr. Burnap quickly and calmly replied, "Shouldn't it always be a wonder? I expect to wonder to all eternity that the Son of God loved me and died for me."

My emotions at that reply are fresh as yesterday, though more than fifty years have rolled away since. And the joy of that first hour of hope in Christ remains with me yet. And now I am here in sight of the tombstones where the Burnaps sleep. And, though

> "I feel like one
> Who treads alone
> Some banquet hall deserted,
> Whose lights are fled
> Whose garlands dead,
> And all but he departed:"

I am filled with joy by the memories of a large family of saints whose lives were living proofs of the religion of Christ, and to whom my early boyhood was indebted for a holy, consistent, religious example; for ideas and instructions, too, which have largely produced what little good I have done, and may yet do.

THE SABBATH SERVICES.

This Windham church has a nice house, and perhaps a hundred members, widely scattered through these mountain valleys. They have an excellent pastor, whose wife was daughter of a Connecticut pastor, Rev. Mr. Brigham. They take up six missionary collections in a year. Like Dr. Richard S. Storrs of Brooklyn, the men are Republicans "by the momentum of habit," but like Dr. Storrs, too, they lean strongly to Fisk and Brooks and the Prohibition party. I cannot learn that there is a Freemason in the church. The old people remember Morgan, and Dea. Burnap who was sent by the Antimasons to the Legislature at Montpelier. But there is a Mason, the wealthiest man in the small mountain village, whose voice leads the choir, though he is "old and full of days." I went to him, on my arrival, about the hymns. He had been at Chester Academy under Preceptor Whipple, who followed Mr. Burnap; and although he knew the Baptist pastor was an immoral man and Mason, and the Chester lodge had many such; and although the Vermont lodges were afterwards turned inside out, and every candidate is swindled out of his money, who pays for secrets which are not secrets, this unhappy man is the only one I have met who condemns Vermont for crushing the lodges in 1832; and is closing a long life without God or hope, except that hope which is as the spider's web. He stayed away from church and kept the choir away and all others whom he could influence. I earnestly exhorted him to turn to God, and prayed sincerely for his salvation. Though the rain fell steadily all day, and the congregation is widely dispersed, the deacons living three or four miles away, I had a very attentive, though small audience, and good, I trust, was done.

Rev. Mr. Leach was more fortunate. At South Windham the Baptist church gave him a fair congregation for a rainy day. The audience gave him a vote of thanks for his visit, and their leaders urged him to come there again. There is no Masonic lodge in Windham. The people are beginning to read, and the little secret orders, got up by Masons, under other names, to drill the young people to secrecy, are weak and fading; and as soon as light is shed upon them they will be abandoned by that interesting people. Rev. U. C. Burnap, mentioned above, had taken the Entered Apprentice degree, but loathed and left the order. He assured me that Morgan's book was true, and kept me from the swindling blasphemies of the lodge.

ELYMAS THE SORCERER—WHOSE GOD IS MAMMON, AND HIS GODLINESS GAIN.

As Paul met Elymas the sorcerer at Paphos (Acts 13: 8), we have met one of his descendants here; sent by Satan, doubtless, to divert and distract the attention of Saxton's River people from the truth we have taught on secret societies. His handbills flooded the village, promising "a most crushing blow aimed against the performance of the mediums;" "which is regarded by fifteen millions of intelligent people as their religion."

This juggler's name is Dayton. His bill promises to "perform all the fundamental phenomena of so-called spiritual mediums," and this by jugglery and sleight of hand, and so prove there are no devils' responses in modern spiritualism, and so overthrow the false religion of fifteen million worshipers of familiar spirits, by trick and legerdemain. This performance was advertised to take place in "the vestry of the Congregational church!" The pastors had meetings the same night, and I determined to attend the juggler's meeting, and see if anything could be done to rescue his deluded followers. By the laws of Vermont he should have been taken up as a swindling vagrant and sorcerer. But, instead, he had warm written endorsements by Congregational and Baptist clergymen, and on the strength of them was admitted to the house of God.

I went into his room at the hotel and conversed an hour or more with him. I report our talk as near as I can.

"Are you a spiritualist?"

"I was as good a medium as the best of them; but I am opposing them."

"Do you oppose them in them in the name of Christ?"

"No. I show that it is all humbug, by doing the things they profess to do without any spirits. I don't believe the witch of Endor had any familiar spirit; I believe it was imposture, like the mediums."

"Do you believe the Bible?"

"Yes, and no. I believe what commends itself to my reason. I don't believe God made man out of the earth."

"Then you believe the story of Eden and man's creation is a myth?"

"Yes."

"And may not the miracles of the New Testament be humbugs like those of the mediums?"

"Yes."

"Then Christ would be a magician?"

"That is possible."

"And you can do all the mediums profess to do?"

"Yes."

"Your bill says the sheriff may put his own handcuffs on you, and you can take them off?"

"Yes."

"Can this gentleman (a Mr. Spaulding) do the same?"

"I can teach you so you can."

I answered: "That is good news for all thieves, pickpockets and murderers. They should hire you to teach them to throw off handcuffs, and pay you a good salary."

"Oh!" he rejoined, "I am opposed to criminals; I have been a detective;" and he pulled out a printed certificate that he was a member of the "Iowa detective Association."

"And you say you can lay your hand on a table and it will rise up in the air?"

"Yes."

I replied, "My dear sir, you can do that or you cannot. If you cannot, you are an impostor and cheat. But if you can do it, the devil helps you, for by natural means no such things can be done. And now, as you have spoken candidly to me, I will fairly say to you, that I think you are a hypocrite and deceiver, medium and spirit-monger yourself. You deny the Bible as they do. Of course, as they do, you teach free-love, for Christ is the only author of Christian marriage; and the only difference you claim, is that you work miracles by jugglery and legerdemain, while they, more honest, say they get help from familiar spirits, called in the Bible devils or demons." I said further, "I think your performance should be excluded from the church of God; but since you are admitted, if this gentleman (Mr. Spaulding) will rent the vestry to me, as he has to you, I will endeavor to show the men and women, whom you are deluding, that your work, instead of opposing spiritualism, is morally identical with theirs."

I went that night to the church to witness his performance. A gaping crowd attended,—more than an ordinary Sabbath congregation at the same church. But his jugglery was too weak and contemptible to be worthy of description, and after half an hour or so I went away.

If I lecture here again, I will endeavor to show the people:

1. That any attempt to do marvels, or draw knowledge or power from the unseen world, by contraband or forbidden methods, is worshiping devils, or evil angels.

2. That the hoodwink of Masonry and Odd-fellowship, the solemn oaths and obligations administered in the night by persons unauthorized, and the endlessly diversified mock-solemn religious balderdash of the secret worships in heathen and Christian countries are one and the same system mentioned by Paul. 1 Cor. 10: 20.

3. And, finally, that when Christ sent forth the twelve, the seventy, and afterwards the whole body of his disciples, he gave them their first charge against evil spirits; and their chief cause of rejoicing, when they returned and reported to him their success, was that devils were subject to them through his name.

—The Wheaton students, who have been for some two months visiting portions of Indiana and Illinois, are returning from their work. Brief reports have appeared from time to time of their success, and we shall endeavor to secure other facts from them.

—Elder J. F. Browne returned at the close of the school year at Howe Institute, New Iberia, La., to Berea, Ky. We learn through Mrs. Browne that he has been dangerously ill from blood poisoning. The latest word reports him recovering, for which many will return thanks to God.

HOW STAND YOUR CANDIDATES?

NOTES OF THE ANTI SECRECY LEAGUE.

T. R. Carskadon of Keyser, West Virginia, is the candidate of the Prohibitionists for Governor of that State. He is a man of convictions and courage to express them; and if elected, as we hope he will be, he will be a Josiah among the saloons. He writes:

Long years ago I formed an aversion to secret societies—even good meaning organizations, as all have been abused, anyhow. The childish mummeries are sickening to me. In our own State, in the last few years, societies like these, inaugurated, perhaps, for good purposes, and containing, I know, good men, have degenerated into thieving marauders, ending with a number in the penitentiary. I recognize but the one great organization, the common brotherhood of man.

If our New York friends made a grave mistake in nominating a lodgeman for Governor, the selection for Lieutenant Governor was more suitable for a reform party. Mr. George T. Rowell, of Ghent, who has this honor, responds as below to the committee. He will have the endorsement of the thousands of Anti-masons of New York:

While without doubt there is much good done by co-operative assistance to dependent families from some secret societies, yet I have never felt called upon to work with them. I believe in free public discussion of all public questions, and that every public servant should be entirely free to subserve the best interests of all.

Mr. S. A. Hyer, a lawyer of McPherson, Kansas, is the Prohibition candidate for Attorney General. While in college he was a member of a students' fraternity, but his present convictions are frankly stated below. Mr. Hyer will be heartily supported by the patriots of Kansas, who have given to the country a St. John:

I am not a member of any secret society, and have never been in any way connected with one. My knowledge is, therefore, rather limited concerning them. They are all living, I believe, upon an alleged charitable basis, but I think charity confined within the limits of any secret society is too narrow for the good of this or any other country. In short, I believe they accomplish no good which would not be as efficiently done without them, and that they are directly responsible for much of evil in the government of our cities, States and nation, in the administration of justice and in the management of society.

L. K. McIntyre, of Dodge City, is candidate for Secretary of State on the same ticket as Mr. Hyer. His letter will also be read with deep interest, although not so pronounced in its judgment on the lodge. If Mr. McIntyre would acquaint himself with the writings of Pease, Stearns, Colver, Bernard, Barlow and other of his Baptist brethren, he would see clearly the relations of the lodge system to the church and civil society. He writes:

I am a member of one organization, but have not been an active member for some time. My convictions are that the principles of the order are excellent if lived up to, but that a Christian cannot find any better principles than those laid down in the Bible, and no organization can be of much, if any benefit to him, unless it is the denomination of which he is a member, and I sometimes doubt the wisdom of denominations, although I am a Baptist. To sum up, I think pure Christianity requires but few if any organizations, and what is not of pure Christianity is more or less of evil.

The Prohibition candidate for Treasurer in Minnesota is J. H. Allen, president of the Fergus Flour Mills company at Fergus Falls. As he belongs to the Masonic order, we prefer he should state more at length his position, which in justice to Minnesota voters should be understood. It must be regretted that Mr. Allen allowed himself to become a member of an order whose principles and oaths we do not believe he understands. Otherwise he would, in making good his word below, abandon it:

I am a Mason, and that some of the best Christian clergy I know of are Masons. This information I give you freely, believing that the public has a right to know, that they may judge of the fitness of any who are candidates for the suffrage of the people. No doubt, in view of the general opinion of your League, it would be useless for me to say that I know of no obligation as a Mason that would prevent me from performing the duties of the office for which I am a candidate, should I be elected fairly, impartially and honestly. I know of nothing in my obligations that would, could or should require me, under any circumstances, to do anything other than what is right, correct and just; did I believe they in any manner would interfere with my judgment or acts as between man and man, or right and wrong, I would renounce them and my connections therewith. I never do and never have made use of my Masonic connections to further my ends, or advance my interests in any particular; but should I be sick or in want among strangers I would feel more at liverty to call upon a brother Mason for assistance than any other stranger.

—President C. A. Blanchard was last week with the church in Cambridge, the county seat of Henry county, Ill. This is, we believe, the last of his eight summer appointments. His account of these meetings may be read with profit elsewhere.

—Rev. M. A. Gault, district secretary of the National Reform Association, is spending a month in Chicago and vicinity. He spent the Sabbath in Waukegan, and next Lord's day expects to be in Wheaton, where he will also address a Prohibition meeting on Monday evening.

—The Du Page County Prohibition Convention met at Wheaton, Ill., last Wednesday and nominated a full county ticket. Resolutions were adopted emphasizing the importance of the portions of the National platform recognizing the authority of the God of the Bible, and of his Word, which should have a place in the public school; and the requirement of his Day as a necessity for man. They also declared for open work only in the good cause of the American home against the saloon.

—The Christian Statesman in a note on Rev. David McFall, pastor of the Chambers Street Reformed Presbyterian church, Boston, says that since his severe illness in June, which prevented him from sailing for Europe, he has been spending the summer in Delaware county, New York. A severe attack of sciatic rheumatism which followed has left him greatly weakened. Though convalescent, he is unable to undertake any work whatever. Those who have listened to his eloquent words for Christ against the iniquitous lodge and other national evils will with us join the Statesman in praying for his speedy and complete recovery.

—Rev. Byron Gunner, president of Howe Institute, spoke in Prospect Park and Wheaton on Sabbath, the 12th. His discourse to the College church in the evening was one of the most entertaining and instructive respecting the condition of the colored churches of the South ever given there; and the Wheaton people have had in times past the very best speaking on this topic from both white and colored men. We should be unjust to our readers not to recommend that they should hear him if possible during his present sojourn in the North. A new and warm sympathy for Christian work in the South must surely be the result.

—Bro. J. A. Conant sends us word of the Connecticut State Prohibition meeting. The debate, which we reported from the daily press, was not, he says, on the question of woman suffrage, but on a a divided report upon this question. As for the standing of Connecticut Prohibitionists, Bro. Conant says: "One or two advocates of woman suffrage defended the minority report with the hope of keeping peace in the family, but were wofully defeated. I doubt there being a dozen of the over 400 delegates present who were opposed to woman suffrage." Mr. Richmond of Wisconsin attended the meeting and spoke, and the Cynosure called attention to the fact as having probable connection with the division. He did not mention the subject of suffrage in his address, but from the uniform reports that reach this office, he is not a man to be implicitly trusted by Christian Prohibitionists.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Lodge Matters—Kate Field and Her "New Departure"—The Public School Question—Paganism in Our Churches—Mr. Blaine and "the Dear People"—Mrs. Cleveland—Shall we have another Mrs. Hayes in the White House?

The semi-annual session of the Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows just held in Boston, develops the usual statistics: receipts $200,782.40; amount paid out for relief, $72,579 50. That is, for every three dollars received, about one dollar has been paid in relief. How long would an insurance company stand, carried on upon such an unbusiness-like basis? And yet, well-meaning but ill-informed people will continue to talk of "the charity" of the order!

One of the very few Boston dailies which publish a "temperance column", is the Traveler; a paper, which though its Republicanism makes it fling many sneers and gibes at the Prohibitionists, utterly indifferent to the lack of truth at the bottom of its would-be sarcasms, deservedly stands at the head for cleanliness and good literary style. But unfortunately this "temperance column" is so largely given up to lodge advertising that to one who knows how very little practical good is accomplished by organized secrecy, it is only vanity and vexation of spirit to read it. How many of these Sons of Temperance and Good Templars will be ready to vote Prohibition next fall remains to be seen. Those who might be efficient workers against the saloon, but are kept learning a puerile system of degrees and grips and passwords, and imagining all the time that they are doing temperance work, should be undeceived, and then they will no longer consent to train in the treadmill of a secret ring, and pray, to save corrupt political parties from deserved dissolution.

"Thy kingdom come,
Then vote for rum,"

Kate Field, so says a personal in the Post, is coming East to deliver lectures on the virtues of California wines. She claims, with Dr. Crosby and the late Freeman Clarke, that the substitution of light and cheap wines for beer and whisky will solve the vexed temperance question in a most easy and delightful fashion. But unfortunately the genius of reform exacts self-denial. A people cannot have the good of Prohibition and indulge their appetites at the same time; and it is not alone in Miss Edgworth's stories that poor little Rosamond, unwilling to sacrifice the purple jar for shoes, is at last left to bewail the loss of both. It may be true that the sight of reeling drunkards is less common in the cities of Southern Europe than here. I am not prepared to dispute the point, but I should like to know how many of the tourists, who tell us so confidently that drunkenness is such a rare vice in France and Italy, ever examined the police reports of a single French or Italian city, or had a half hour's talk with one of their policemen. Probably not one in ninety-nine thousand; but till they are willing to accept this drudgery, instead of skimming lightly and jauntily over the question like a butterfly, I don't see how thinking minds can consider it definitely settled. I am sorry that Miss Field, after her grand battling with the Mormon iniquity, is willing to embark in so bad and weak a cause. Personally she is the most attractive woman on the platform to-day, and as original and strong-minded as Anna Dickinson, but she is essentially an actress with an actress' thirst for admiration. She lacks entirely that moral earnestness which draws the heart of the people so powerfully to Miss Willard.

Whether the substitution of California wines for whisky would prevent John L. Sullivan, the pugilist, whom Boston's mayor has so delighted to honor, from getting royally drunk last Saturday night, and doing so much mischief while in that condition as to cause his arrest; whether it would diminish the wife murders and stabbing affrays which fill up the criminal column, is an experiment yet to be tried; but if it should ever come to the trial, God help America!

The public school question, like Banquo's ghost, will not down. At Cottage City the Baptist tabernacle listens to ringing sermons on this subject—notably one from Rev. Philip S. Moxon, who, though a comparatively new-comer, is already one of the foremost preachers in Boston, on Romish priests and our free schools. The life of every false system depends upon its either suppressing or controlling popular education. In Spain and Italy it tries the first plan; here in America, where it finds the public school in posssession of the field, its only hope is to try the second.

The "heated term" which has lingered until August is now upon us in torrid fierceness. Meanwhile, the world of politics and the world of fashion know no "summer rest." James G. Blaine's journey home has been like a triumphal progress. "The greatest living American," as his admirers are fond of calling him, is still the idol of the crowd, which may be partly accounted for by his Irish gift at "blarney." His brief speeches at the various stations on the line, neat, apt, and full of adroit flattery of the dear people who thronged by thousands to greet him, are models in this particular line.

The little fishing town of Marion, on the Cape, still rejoices in the presence of Mrs. Cleveland, who lives in the broad blaze of publicity quite as much as Mr. Blaine, and seems to enjoy it equally well. She evidently tries as hard to make herself popular in her woman's way, for though she does not make speeches she can smile and throw kisses at the crowd, which answers the same general purpose. Why should a young woman who has absolutely nothing to recommend her beyond what she shares in common with ten thousand other women, winning manners and a fair share of good looks, be elevated into a goddess simply because she has married a President? This thoughtless homage is well illustrated by a gushing article in one of our exchanges, in which she is alluded to, with equal disregard of facts and all proprieties of the English language, as our "fair young Presidentess." Fulsome adulation in its power to nauseate can no farther go.

Democratic papers sneeringly attribute General Harrison's temperance principles entirely to the influence of his wife. This is one straw of comfort for those who, like the writer, would rejoice to see another Mrs. Hayes in the White House.

E. E. Flagg.

THE HOME.

A STRIKE.

Once upon an evening dreary,
As I pondered, sad and weary,
O'er the basket with the mending from the wash the day before;
As I thought of countless stitches
To be placed in little breeches,
Rose my heart rebellious in me, as it oft had done before,
At the fate that did condemn me, when my daily task was o'er,
To that basket evermore.

John, with not a sign or motion,
Sat and read the Yankee Notion,
With no thought of the commotion
Which within me rankled sore.
"He," thought I, "when day is ended,
Has no stockings to be mended,
Has no babies to be tended.
He can sit and read and snore;
He can sit and read and rest him:
Must I work thus evermore?"
And my heart rebellious answered,
"Nevermore; no, nevermore."

For though I am but a woman,
Every nerve within is human,
Aching, throbbing, overworked,
Mind and body sick and sore,
I will strike. When day is ended,
Though the stockings are not mended,
Though my course can't be defended,
Safe behind the closet door
Goes the basket with the mending, and I'll haunted be no more.
In the daylight shall be crowded all the work that I will do;
When the evening lamps are lighted, I will read the papers, too.

THE HUSBANDMAN.

John Smith is a neighbor of mine, but no relation. He is a good farmer, but—well, I will let him tell his own story. He came to me the other day and said:

"I want you to advise me what to do. We are are having awful times over at my house. The boys are falling into bad habits. The girls are gadding about all the time. My wife is as cross as a bear. She says it is all my fault that the children don't do better, and that I have nobody but myself to blame. But you know that I have always been a sober, hard-working man. I have made a good living for my family, and I can't see how things turn out so. What do you think I ought to do?"

"Shall I tell you just what I think?"

"Yes."

"Well, John, my opinion is that if you had been as good a husbandman in doors as you are out of doors, your family would be in as good a condition as your farm is. You know that the Bible calls the farmer a husbandman, and we speak of farming as husbandry. And I take it, the idea is that a man ought to care for and cultivate his land just as he does his home. But if you had treated your farm as you treated your home, it would all be overgrown with weeds and thistles."

"What do you mean by cultivating my home? I understand about cultivating land. But that is a very different thing from cultivating people."

"I am not so sure of that. Let us look at the matter. Soon after you bought your farm you married your wife. In becoming a husband, you assumed in regard to her the duties of a husbandman. She expected you to study her capabilities and her wants, as you studied your fields. Your idea when you looked on your land was, How can I make it more productive, and yet keep it in good heart? If you saw the crops beginning to grow light, you summer fallowed, or changed the seed. But did you study your wife in that way? Did you ever think that she needed encouragement? Did you ever see how she was drooping from the monotony of her daily toil and cares, and try to give her a change? Did you ever say, 'Come, Sarah, we will take a journey to the mountains or to the sea-shore and rest a while?' I tell you, John, people need summer fallowing as well as land. And if they don't get it now and then, their spirits grow worn and weary, and the crop of comfort for them, and for those who are dependent on them, will be very light. Nay, in spite of themselves, they will get to be irritable. You say that your wife is cross. Don't you see why? She was a young, light-hearted girl. She loved you, and thought you loved her. But after you married her, how did you treat her? Did you cultivate her, or did you neglect her? Didn't you act just as if she had nothing to expect of you but to keep the family supplied with provisions and to eat your meals when she had prepared them? And didn't you sometimes grumble even when she wanted money for things necessary to the comfort of the family? And didn't you complain of her cooking, when she was doing the best she could to please you? Now, just remember how much more careful you were of your land than you were of your wife! how much more time you spent in trying to mellow it and smooth it, and to find seeds adapted to it, than you spent in trying to make her happy, and you will see why you have such a harvest of thistles, when you might have had wheat, and fruit and flowers!

"And then about the children. You are the best man I know of to handle horses. I have often wondered at your patience with your colts. You seem never to get tired of petting and training them. You are so kind to them, and yet so firm with them, that by the time they are old enough to work, they will do anything you want them to. That pair of bay geldings that you drive is the finest team in the country, and it is because you have taken so much pains in breaking them. Now, if you had done as well by your children as you have by your colts, they would be just as nice boys and girls. But while you have petted your colts, you have repelled your children. I have seen little Johnny come to you when you were in a corral trying to gentle the horses, and you would order him away harshly and then turn and speak as softly and caressingly to the beasts as a mother talks to her babes. You know that if you had spoken to the beasts as you spoke to Johnny you would have spoiled them. Is it any wonder, then, that you have spoiled him?

"I tell you, John, your wife is right. You have nobody but yourself to blame. You have been a good land farmer, but a careless and shiftless house farmer. You have been a first-rate husbandman, but a very indifferent husband and father. And you are reaping just what you sowed. Now, my advice to you is to do just as you would if you had a field that had been neglected until it was covered with underbrush and thistles. Clear the land and begin to cultivate it. Take an interest in your wife and children, and it may not be too late for you to secure a happy home. Be kind to your boys and girls, and yet firm with them, as you are with your horses, and they will learn to love you and to obey you."

I write out the substance of this conversation because I am afraid that there are a good many such John Smiths in the world. Men who have homes ought to know how to husband them. Husband as defined by Webster, "to use in the manner best suited to produce the greatest effects." Every head of a family has a grand opportunity. What noble men and women have gone forth from the well-cultivated homes of Christendom to bless their country and the world! All our homes should be the nurseries of plants of righteousness. But to have a good nursery one must devote time and thought and toil to it. It won't grow and flourish of itself, uncared for. Neither will a home.—Herald and Presbyter.

CLEVER BIRDS.

One morning when my little sister was walking with mamma, she found a young lettuce bird in the path. It had evidently fallen from the nest, but they could not see where it was, and fearing the bird would be killed if it were left in the road, mamma told Bessie she might bring it home, and, as it was a seed-eating bird, they hoped to be able to raise it in the cage with the canary bird.

She carried the little thing home and put it in the canary's cage which hung in the shady front porch.

In a little while we heard a commotion among the birds, and hurrying into the porch we saw a pretty sight. Two full-grown lettuce birds, evidently the parents of the one in the cage, were fluttering about with food for their baby. He was standing on the perch, and seemed afraid to fly down; so the canary flew down, took ths seeds from the old birds, and carried them to the little one. They did this several times.

The next day Bessie met a small boy who had another yellow bird, about the size of the one she had found the day before, apparently one of the same brood. She bought it from him for five cents, and carried the frightened birdling tenderly home, and put it with the caged birds. After that for two days the parent birds came at daylight and flew in and out until dark, feeding the two young ones.

On the third day the male bird came alone, and we feared the little mother had been killed. After about a week, however, she came again, bringing with her a third bird about the size of our two pets. It seemed clear, that after trying to care for the divided family together, the intelligent birds had agreed that the father should take care of the caged birds, while the mother tended the lonely birdling in the nest until it was able to fly, when she brought it to visit its brother and sister. They were all by this time old enough to fly, so, although we grieved to part with our little friends, we determined to reward the wise and loving parents by giving their children the freedom all birds love so well. We opened the cage door, and after a few timid twitters and flutters, the young birds flew out, and the reunited family flew away in the sweet summer air. As for the canary, virtue had to be its own reward, but it seemed to satisfy him, for he followed his departing guests with a beautiful burst of song.—The Swiss Cross.

WHAT I LIVE FOR.

I live for those who love me,
For those I know are true,
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirit, too;
For all human ties that bind me,
For the task by God assigned me,
For the bright hopes left behind me,
And the good that I can do.

I live to learn their story
Who've suffered for my sake,
To emulate their glory,
And follow in their wake;
Bards, martyrs, patriots, sages,
The noble of all ages,
Whose deeds crowd history's pages,
And Time's great volume make.

I live to hail that season,
By gifted minds foretold,
When men shall live by reason,
And not alone by gold—
When man to man united,
And every wrong thing righted,
The whole world shall be lighted,
As Eden was of old.

I live to hold communion
With all that is divine,
To feel there is a union
'Twixt Nature's heart and mine;
To profit by affliction,
Reap truths from fields of fiction,
Grow wiser from conviction
And fulfill each great design.

I live for those who love me,
For those who know me true,
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirit, too;
For the wrong that needs resistance,
For the cause that lacks assistance,
For the future in the distance,
And the good that I can do.

THE PERFECTED PHONOGRAPH.

Take a sheet of letter paper and roll it up into a tube or cylinder about an inch and a half in diameter. Hold it lightly in the left hand, and cover the other end with the right hand. Then bring the open end close to the mouth and just in front of the lower lip. Now sing the scale, do, re, me, etc., loudly and in exact pitch. At certain notes a delicate tremor will be felt in the tube, as if it vibrated or trembled with the sound of your voice.

This simple experiment plainly shows that sound is a vibration. Every word you speak, every note you sing sets the air in motion, and when the air in the tube is affected by just the right number of vibrations, it, too, vibrates in sympathy with our voice, and this motion of the air in the tube causes the elastic paper to spring backward and forward, and you feel the tube trembling and shaking.

The motion we call sound consists of a number of beats or waves following each other quickly in succession. When you speak the air is set in motion, and these invisible waves fall on the walls, the furniture, and other objects in the room. If they are elastic they quiver under the beating of the waves of sound. If they are soft and unelastic, like a curtain, they absorb the motion and it is lost.

We cannot see nor feel this motion unless the object is very thin and elastic, like your paper tube, and even then we can only feel it as a faint quivering or tremor.

These facts have long been known to men of science, and various uses have been made of them, particularly in the construction of musical instruments. Perhaps the most interesting use that was ever made of the facts shown by the experiment was first announced by Mr. Edison. In making some experiments with the telephone, he invented that curious machine he called the phonograph.

The idea of the phonograph is very simple. Waves of sound falling on a thin sheet of metal cause it to spring backward and forward. By fastening a small needle point to the back of such a plate or diaphragm, little dents can be made in a sheet of soft tinfoil. This foil was wrapped around a cylinder, and by turning the cylinder the foil traveled in a spiral under the point at the back of the diaphragm.

Words spoken before the diaphragm caused the point to make minute dents in the foil. After the words had been spoken, the cylinder could be moved backward and then the point would travel over the series of dents in the foil and thus shake or jar the diaphragm, and this motion was almost the same as the motion given to it by the waves of sound. Thus it happened that the diaphragm seemed to repeat or respeak the very words spoken before it.

The phonograph attracted the greatest attention, and was regarded as a most wonderful invention, and many people thought it would prove to be an exceedingly valuable machine, both in recording speech and music, and in enabling us to hear anything spoken before it many times over, and perhaps years after the speaker had died.

In one respect the phonograph was a failure. It would, indeed, repeat words, but in a high squeeking voice and only a few times, and then it became dumb and useless. The phonograph began with wonderful promise, and ended in being only a curious, scientific toy of no particular value.

Mr. Edison recognized this, but being very busy with other inventions he left the phonograph incomplete and unfinished. Within the past year he has again taken it up and brought it to perfection; and now it seems as though we were to see another great step in the progress of science.

The new phonograph is a curious looking machine. It stands on top of the box containing the motor, and consists of a copper cylinder supported horizontally and a steel shaft that has a fine spiral groove cut in it. This shaft is connected by frictional gearing with the motor, and turns in bearings at each end.

On one side of this shaft is a second shaft, also having a spiral groove or screw cut in it, and by means of a little band the two shafts both revolve at the same speed. On the other side is a long bar in which slides a frame that supports the two diaphragms. One of these diaphragms is for receiving the words spoken into the machine, and the other is to give back the sounds or words impressed by the waves of sound. Either diaphragm can be used, and by a device for connecting them with the revolving shaft they travel either backward or forward over the cylinder as it revolves.

The receiving diaphragm has a point at the back of the plate for making the dents, and the diaphragm that gives out the sounds has a very fine needle that travels over these dents without injuring or breaking them, and thus destroying the record. In the old phonograph you shouted out the words into a big funnel. Now you speak easily and naturally into the mouth-piece of a flexible speaking tube.

The young man who showed me the new phonograph at Mr. Edison's laboratory turned a switch and the machine silently began to move. In place of the old foil he put a thin cylinder, made of some composition resembling beeswax, on the copper cylinder, and then he spoke a few words into the tube.

Then the diaphragms were changed, the speaking tube was taken off and I held another tube, resembling a double stethoscope, to my ears. Every word came back clearly and plainly in a soft, whispering voice, that was exactly like the voice of the young man who had just spoken. It was very odd to hear even the little imperfections of the voice repeated in a strange fairy-like whisper, as if the young gentleman had somehow crept into my ear and was quietly talking there.

Then, by changing the machine, it repeated some of the words many times over, just to show it had not forgotten them. And the funny part was, it sometimes began again in the middle of a word, as if it had forgotten all but the last syllables. It had not forgotten, for the next time it went further and gave the whole word. The cylinder on which the sound-vibrations (or speech) are impressed can be taken off the machine, and, if taken to a strong light, shows the indentations made by the diaphragm on the smooth wax.

Of course, it is not written, nor does it reprint words. It is merely a delicate spiral, or trace on the wax, so minute that it cannot be seen except under a strong glass, and, to the eye, looks merely like a glistening band wound round the cylinder. On slipping the cylinder back the machine again repeats the words spoken to it.

Suppose two people have a phonograph, one in Chicago, and one in Boston. The Boston man wishes to speak to the Chicago man, and he says what he wishes him to hear before the machine. Then he slips off the wax cylinder, packs the phonogram in a paper box and mails it to Chicago.

When it arrives the receiver slips the cylinder into his phonograph, moves the switch to set the motor going, and, holding the receiving tube to his ear, hears, in a soft, clear voice, that exactly resembles the Boston man's voice, every word spoken in the East. If he is not sure about any sentence, he can hear it over again, then, or at any time thereafter.

This is a wonderful age. New and strange things appear so often that we hardly notice them. Let us not look upon them in stupid wonder, but try to see and understand the great laws upon which they are founded, and thus keep ourselves abreast of the grand procession that marks the wonderful times in which we live.—C. Barnard, in Youth's Companion.

TEMPERANCE.

A COSTLY "BEER."

Two hundred thousand dollars may seem a large sum for a small article, but it was virtually paid by a man of great resources who had an ingenious expedient for saving the horseflesh of the world. About ten years ago a veterinary surgeon, who was with the army at Bombay, found that the excessive heat of that country caused the tops of the horses' necks to sweat freely, and thereby produce sores under the leather collar. All the expedients that he could suggest were of no avail to remedy this state of things. One-fourth of the horses used for draught purposes were laid up by what is called "sore neck."

This "vet." in his younger days had studied chemistry, and he found that sulphate of zinc was the best and almost only cure for horses' "sore necks," but the difficulty in applying this preparation lay in the fact that the horses had to rest during the time of its application, otherwise the collar would rub it off, and there was no chance for the horse's recovery. A thought struck him that to make a zinc pad and fit it under the collar would, at any rate, prove an ameliorative, and may be cure. The man, though ingenious in his way, was much given to drink, and was looked upon by the officers of the army as a "ne'er-do-weel" with bright ideas. While this was simmering in his mind, and before he had put it into an actual test, he happened to be in a drinking bar.

His finances at this time were at the lowest ebb, for his future was mortgaged for all it was worth, and the publican refused to trust him with any more drinks. An American drummer happened to be representing a large leather house, and knew a good deal of the difficulty with which the American farmers of the Southwest had to contend. The two men got into conversation, and, as a natural result, the veterinary surgeon spoke of the idea that was uppermost in his mind, and said that he thought he knew of a remedy for that most troublesome complaint of which all horses in hot countries suffered. The American was perfectly convinced that he was talking to a man of good ideas, though bad principles, and asked what he would take for the idea.

"I am awfully hard up and can get no more drink on trust, so I will give you the idea for a glass of beer."

"Done!" said the other.

The American at once saw there was probably millions in this, and he conceived the notion that the matter oozing from the sores on horses' necks would corrode the pad and produce sulphate of zinc —thus the disease would provide its own remedy. He also saw that zinc, being a non-conductor of heat, would keep the parts cool. The more he thought of it the more he liked it, and although his business should have kept him in Bombay some months longer, he in a few days took the first steamship to Liverpool and then to Boston. Arriving in Boston, he threw up his appointment with the house and started the manufacturing of zinc pads, after obtaining a patent for the idea, and he is now worth $200,000. These zinc pads are used in every country on earth, and are the greatest blessing the farmer enjoys.—London Tid-Bits.

SUCCESS IN KANSAS.

Among the many proofs of the success of prohibition in Kansas is the following statement in reference to the city of Topeka by Mr. Curtis, the county attorney:

"At one time there were one hundred and fifty saloons open in Topeka; their average sales per day were not less than $30 each, which would make $4,200 spent daily for liquor. This amount came largely from the working people. To day there is not one dollar of that amount spent for whisky. Where does it go to? It goes for food and clothing for children and wife. I know of scores of instances where families were suffering for food because the father gave his wages to the saloon-keeper. Now they are living in a cosy home of their own; they have all the necessities of life, and, indeed, a few of the luxuries; the children who were once poverty stricken and living in rags, are now attending the public school, and the father will tell you he is the happiest man in the State, and that Prohibition rescued him."

A SAD ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

A dispatch, dated the 15th, from Dubuque, Iowa, published in the Inter Ocean of Thursday last, says: "Judge Lenehan to-day ordered permanent injunctions to issue against forty-seven saloon-keepers in this city. The defendants will file supersedeas bonds and appeal to the State Supreme Court. The bond cannot, however, stay the service of the injunction. It is not likely, though, that the injunctions will be served, and the saloons will operate right along. Prohibition is a dead letter in Dubuque." Is it possible that Republican Iowa allows such a condition of affairs?

A widowed mother in Michigan is suing a saloon-keeper for the ruin of her three sons, aged respectively 18, 17, and 14 years.

The Philadelphia brewers say their business has increased 20 per cent since the high license law went into effect that abolished nearly four-fifths of the saloons.

June 26, 5,663 petitions were presented to the British House of Commons praying for the abandonment of the licensing clauses of the local government bill.

. The National Temperance Demonstration will be held at the International Exhibition, Glasgow, Aug. 20. All bars will be closed, and an immense gathering is anticipated.

It has been stated before the select committee in the House of Commons on Sunday closing that the 2,000 clerks in Dublin liquor shops are required to work 101 hours per week.

The W. C. T. U., of Mississippi, presented a most eloquent plea to their State Democratic Convention, asking for an anti-saloon plank. No notice was taken of it by the convention.

The W. C. T. U. of Shiawassee county, Michigan, has succeeded, after three years of hard work, in having all games of chance, wheels of fortune, and even sweet cider prohibited on the fair grounds, and preaching and speaking substituted instead.

Master—"No, Pat; there's no use you're asking me for more money. You're your own worst enemy, and will drink till your death." Patrick Monahan—"Thrue for ye, sir. Oi'm me own wor-rst inimy, but the dhrink puts me on good ter-rms wid mesilf."—Time.

The eminent French economist, M. Leon Say, and the members of the commission of alcohols over which he presides, have, through the result of their own inquiries, become converted to the views of the extreme abolitionists. They have become uncompromising enemies of the liquor traffic.

John B. Gough expressed his mature judgment in the statement that nothing but the religion of Jesus can really reform a drunkard. In the same line is the declaration of Warden Hatch, of the Michigan State prison at Jackson, made at the prison congress in Boston, that "nothing can really be done for the improvement of the prisoners unless the Christian religion is taken into the prison. If Christ is good for anything in the world, he is good in prison. He does more in the Michigan prison than all the discipline." We are glad this met with approval and applause. It is certain that if every prison had a warden with such views the right men would be in the right place, and prison reform make rapid advances.

The New Jersey prohibitionist was despondent. "I am afraid," he said, sadly, "that the vote of our party will be light in this State next fall." "Why?" inquired his sympathizing friend. "Well, you see," explained the prohibitionist, "the mosquitoes are very bad this year. The two old parties send speakers into this State who are capable of protecting their audiences with their breaths from the attacks of ravenous insects. What chance has the Prohibition party to compete with them? While we talk prohibition the people fight mosquitoes and do not get the benefit of our arguments." "There is but one thing for you to do," said his friend. "You must hire a few politicians from the other parties to attend your meetings and pose as terrible examples."

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON X.—Third Quarter.—Sept. 2.

SUBJECT.—The Spies Sent into Canaan.—Num. 13. 17-33.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Let us go up at once, and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it.—Num. 13: 30.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Spies Sent. Vs. 17-20. The sending of the spies seems to have been prompted (Deut. 1: 22) more by worldly wisdom than faith in their divine Commander. Instead of trusting to His infinite knowledge to map out the way and tell them what points to first attack, they chose to take council of flesh; and by this want of trust they prepared the way for the discouragement that followed, which ended in that whole generation, with two exceptions, being debarred from entering the promised land. In Hebrews important lessons are drawn from this episode in Jewish history. We are warned against having, like them, "an evil heart of unbelief in departing from God." That desire to pry into the future which leads so many people into the vagaries of spiritualism is simply unbelief. Why should they want to search out the land? why should they seek to know its trials, or its dangers; its sorrows or its joys, as if God's promises were not enough? Unbelief thus nourished will grow till all faith is choked out, and the soul becomes like a once fair garden overrun with the weeds of skepticism. A desire to pry into the mysteries of the other world is a form of unbelief. God has told us enough of the heavenly Canaan to make us desire the possession of such a goodly land. What advantage would it be for us to know more? Whatever giants meet us in the path of duty it remains the path of duty just the same, and to desire to search out the land and know beforehand all the lions in the way, springs from a spirit of cowardice as well as of faithlessness. It is evidence of a secret inclination to turn back to Egypt when the obstacles seem too great to conquer.

2. Their Evil Report. Vs. 21-33. The spies found the land to be all God had promised, for his word never fails, but they found the sons of Anak there. God had never promised that they should enter Canaan without a struggle, but this was what the great mass of the people evidently expected. Many young Christians suppose that the initial step once taken in the divine life, all its greatest difficulties are over. But it is "through much tribulation" that we enter into eternal life. Neither is there any part of the divine way in which we can count on being safe from enemies. The Amalekites dwelt in "the land of the South," other tribes "in the mountains," and the Canaanites "by the sea and the coast of Jordan." All we have to do is to "go up and possess the land," not taking cowardly counsel of our fears. "We are well able to overcome." We must have faith in our ability to conquer. A brave heart is half the battle. There are many things people say they can't do, simply because they think they can't. This is one reason why the Bible lays such emphasis on the necessity for faith. If we thoroughly believe that a divine Leader goes with us who never was and never can be defeated, we cannot help but march confidently on to victory. Our nation must pass through a great moral warfare before it can become the goodly Canaan of freedom for all the world's poor and oppressed. One giant "son of Anah" whom we must destroy is the saloon, and with it we shall destroy much of the poverty and misery, and nine-tenths of the crime which curses our nation. Another giant foe is the lodge. Laboring men are compelled to enter a secret union to get work; to join a strike which may be against their judgment at the risk of ill-treatment and even death; and otherwise surrender their manhood and liberty at the bidding of leaders who have their own selfish ends to serve. There is the giant Monopoly which seeks to cut down wages to the starvation point, and "make corners" in the necessities of life. Socialism will never destroy this giant, for it belongs to the same family. Satan cannot cast out Satan. The hand of law must kill him; a law made and upheld by the people whom he seeks to grind under his iron heel. There is the giant of Sabbath desecration stalking everywhere through the land; of licentiousness, "scattering firebrands, arrows and death" by means of a corrupt press; of caste prejudice, which would array class against class, and his twin brother, ignorance, who stands ready to lead mobs and direct insurrections. Let every Christian man vote as he prays, and we shall soon drive out these giants and make of our beloved America a new political Canaan.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. Dr. G. F. Pentecost is now in London expecting to engage in evangelical work.

—At the late meeting of the Moody Bible school in Northfield, Mass, ninety persons pledged themselves to foreign missionary work, twenty of them having formed a band since the school opened. Several of them will begin work abroad this year.

—The memorial of St. Paul, which some Americans propose to set up in his native city of Tarsus, will take the practical shape of a training school for orphans, of whom there are a great many in Cilicia. About $2,500 a year has been pledged, a sum sufficient to support about fifty children. Dr. Howard Crosby is the president of the board of managers.

—The Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church, representing 2,000,000 communicants and 6,000,000 of adherents, has appealed to the United States Government for the exercise of its undoubted legal right to prohibit the exportation of alcoholic liquors into Africa.

—Drs. A. T. Pierson of Philadelphia and A. J. Gordon of Boston have agreed to remain for some months in Scotland to co-operate with representatives of various organizations in spreading the missionary spirit throughout the land.

—Rabbi Lichtenstein, of Tapio-Szele, Hungary, perseveres in his confession of Christ, but he has not yet sought baptism, believing this step would separate him from his people and put a stop to his testimony for Jesus in the synagogues. He receives letters from influential Jews, and even rabbis assure him of their secret sympathy. But there are also some Jews who follow him about as spies.

—Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon are both ill. Mr. Spurgeon's physician says that he is suffering from nervous debility, and must do no work that he can possibly avoid for the next three months. Mrs. Spurgeon is said to be "utterly prostrated," but her illness is not described as dangerous.

—George Muller, known throughout the Christian world for his faith and work, is now eighty-two years old, yet he is hale and hearty, and as full of zeal and activity as ever. He has just returned to England after a preaching tour of 37,000 miles, principally in Australia, China and Japan. Upon his arrival at Bristol he was greeted most warmly by 2,000 children.

—Looking toward the final separation of church and state in France, the government has prepared a bill relating to associations. It provides that associations such as free churches may hold property provided they do not derive any profit from it, and provided also that members of such associations do not use it for their personal ends. The measure is looked upon with favor by many, for as the law now stands free churches and evangelical societies are unable to hold property in trust.

—A convention representing the four Scandinavian Lutheran denominations in the States and Territories between Chicago and the Pacific slope, met last Wednesday at one of the Scandinavian churches of Eau Claire, Wisconsin. The delegates were elected at the annual meetings last summer of the four denominations namely: The Norske Synod, the Norske Danske Conference, the Augustana Synod and the Houges Synod. The convention will formulate a plan for the union of all the denominations in one body, which will be submitted at the annual meeting of each body next spring.

—One afternoon Dr. Cullis, at the late Intervale Park convention, gave a rapid account of the growth of the "faith work" and the principles on which it was based. When he heard that there was no place in the country for consumptives, he felt that that work was given to him by God, and, without making any appeal for funds, he opened a house in Willard street, Boston. The one house grew to seven in a few years, and then they moved out to the present Grove Hall building in Boston Highlands, where there are at present the following institutions: The Consumptives' Home, two orphanages, the Spinal Home, the Deaconesses' Home, the Faith Cure House, and Grove Hall church, with its pastor, the Rev. E D. Mallory. In Boston itself, there is the Beacon Hill church and the "Faith Training" College and the Lewis Street Mission among sailors and drunkards. In Walpole, Mass., there is the Cancer Home. In connection with the work there are two missions in California and two in Virginia and one in India—all of which are supported by money sent in answer to prayer.

—Thursday, August 9th, was the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of that famous, pioneer missionary, Adoniram Judson. No man, we think, can look over the mission field of the world to-day, and see the thousands of missionaries at work in them, behold the Christian churches dotting those once heathen lands, see the hundreds of thousands of Christian people who have come out of heathen darkness, behold what vast resources are employed in carrying forward the work of the various Christian denominations in heathen lands, and reflect that it is only one hundred years since one of the first movers in this grand march of the kingdom was born, without exclaiming inglad surprise, "What hath God wrought!" It is a grand thing to live in such a century, and a grander thing to have some part in such a work.—Sabbath Recorder.

—The China Inland Mission, represented by the Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, is, on account of its peculiar methods, attracting much attention. With no organized society to collect funds, it has had 294 missionaries at work under the supervision of the senior missionary, Mr. Taylor, or, in his absence, the one next longest in the field. No one is promised a salary, but the funds are distributed according as each has need. There is a home agency for receiving and forwarding funds for the mission at 2, 4, 6 Mildmay, London, but no agency for collecting these funds. Dependence is placed directly on God for gathering these supplies. Mr. Taylor was led to adopt this method because the society that sent him out was so constantly burdened with debt. "We told the Lord if he would supply us the funds we would on our part try to do the work he gave to our hands, but we could not do both. We entered into partnership in this matter, and he has never failed us. Now, one-third of all the missionary work of China is done by the China Inland Missionaries. Last year special prayer was offered that 100 missionaries might be added to their number, and the money given for their expenses. Both money and men came.—Christian Inquirer.

—The eleventh conference of the Young Men's Christian Associations of the world convened in Stockholm, Sweden, Aug. 15. The convention was formally opened in a brief address by Count Bernstorff, of Berlin, president of the convention held four years ago at Berlin. An address of welcome was delivered by the Bishop of Visby, and the address of inauguration by the Baron of Ugglas. Following these addresses was the election of officers and the opening devotional exercises, conducted by Professor Rudin of Upsala. Dr. Von Scheele was elected president, and Mr. George Williams of London, Count Bernstorff of Berlin, and Mr. Lucian Warner of New York, vice presidents. The world's committee report was presented. It shows what had been done in the four years since the Berlin convention. It has grown largely in Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Norway and Sweden, and under the fostering care of American friends the work in Paris and France is making rapid progress. There are now 3,804 associations—a growth of nearly one theusand since the last report. The American report showed that the value of association property has increased since 1884 from about three to seven million dollars, and the number of secretaries from less than 400 to nearly 800. Four hundred delegates are in attendance, of whom 200 are English speaking, and some sixty are from America.

—We hear every now and again of a revival in some city or village, and there are many revivals of more or less importance which are never heard of beyond the circle of those specially interested in them; but why should we not have one grand revival over the whole country? Why should we not have such an outpouring of the Holy Spirit that, in all the churches from Maine to California, there would not be room enough to receive the crowds gathering for the worship of God? There is only one answer to this question, and it is a terrible indictment of the church. There is no limit to the willingness of God, and only one limit to his power to reach and save sinners. That limit is regulated by the measure of faith shown by the church. God himself can go no farther or faster in the work of winning souls than he can carry his people with him, for it is written of Jesus that he could not do many mighty works in his own country "because of their unbelief." The only thing that can hinder the progress of the Redeemer's kingdom is the unreadiness and lack of faith of his servants. Awake, O pastors! Awake, elders, class-leaders, and deacons! Awake, all ye servants of Christ, and cry mightily to God for grace, wisdom and power to work for him! Make up your minds that by the grace of God you shall have a glorious revival of his work in your town, and you will find that his ear is not shortened that it cannot hear, nor his arm that it cannot save. Ask, and ye shall receive.—New York Witness.

Home and Health.

FOOD FOR THE SICK.

A fish pudding is a nice way to reserve the remains of any cooked fish. To two tablespoonfuls of fish, cut small, add one of bread crumbs; the latter to be soaked a little in warm milk, then strained and beaten fine. Add a beaten egg and a little salt, pour into a buttered cup, cover with a piece of white paper buttered, and steam half an hour. The water should only reach half way up the cup, and should not boil too fast, or the egg will become more hardened than is desirable. Salmon, eels, mackeral and herring, being oily, are unsuitable for invalids.

A few words on beef tea, or our paper will be incomplete.

It used to be looked upon as a sign of goodness if beef tea "jellied" when cold. This is an error. No good beef-tea can possibly "jelley," for this reason—it must not, or rather should not, be made from gelatinous parts of the beef. Shin of beef is suitable to make stock for clear soup, but that is another matter. If shin be used at all, it ought to be the top, where a thick piece of meat can be cut; but other parts are better—the round or the roll of the bladebone. Ask the butcher for a lean, tender steak; cut it as if it were to be cooked as a steak, and exercise the same care in the selection, and the patient will reap the benefit. Now, as to the mode of making the tea: it is a mistake to cut the beef in large pieces, or to let it boil for a single minute. Scrape the meat finely, and put it in a jar of cold water, with a pinch of salt, to soak for an hour, or more if convenient; then tie it down with paper over the mouth, and set the jar in a saucepan of cold water; bring this to the boil and let the water simmer two or three hours (in the saucepan we mean), and then strain off the tea; not through a fine strainer—nothing should be left behind but the meat; the brown, thick looking particles that float about contain nutriment. Now, as long as anything is cooked in a vessel set in another, the contents of the inner one cannot boil; this, in the case of beef-tea, is as it should be. The quantity of water must be regulated by the strength required, but a pint to a pound is about the average.—Cassell's Family Magazine.

SLEEP A PREVENTATIVE OF HEADACHE.

A scientific writer says: "Sleep, if taken at the right moment, will prevent an attack of nervous headache. If the subjects of such headaches will watch the symptoms of its coming, they can notice that it begins with a feeling of weariness or heaviness. This is the time the sleep of an hour, or even two, as nature guides, will effectually prevent the headache. If not taken just then it will be too late, for after the attack is fairly under way, it will be impossible to get sleep till far into the night, perhaps. It is so common in these days for doctors to forbid having their patients waked to take medicine, if they are asleep when the hour comes round, that the people have learned the lesson pretty well, and they generally know that sleep is far better for the sick than medicine. But it is not so well known that sleep is a wonderful preventive of disease—better than tonics, regulators, and stimulents."—Selected.

TO PRESERVE CORN WITH SALT.

I often keep corn in this way; it is quite handy and good: Cut the corn raw from the cob, pack in anything convenient. I sometimes use a jar and sometimes a keg, put in a layer of corn ½ an inch in thickness, and a layer of salt not so thick, and so on till the vessel is full, covering the whole with salt. When wanted for use, soak in clear water 12 or 14 hours, and cook as in summer.—Mrs. Gray, in Prairie Farmer.

TO CAN CORN.

I prefer tin cans for corn. I find the best way is to place the corn in the cans, soldering on the lids, then make a small air hole and put them in a boiler of water and boil three hours. Then seal up the air-hole and boil three hours longer. I use the prepared solder, that comes in little sticks about as thick as a knitting needle. Corn canned in this way keeps its natural flavor and the peculiar sweetness of fresh corn better than by any other method.—Mrs. Johnson, in Prairie Farmer.

THE GLORIOUS CAUSE.

The new song book, "The Glorious Cause," by Dr. Geo. F. Root (single copy 30 cents; 20 copies or over, 27 cents each, express unpaid), is exactly what is needed for general temperance, Gospel temperance and local Union meetings. It has a fine selection of old tunes, while the new ones "hit the nail" squarely on the head.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

FARM NOTES.

TIMELY HINTS.

This is a good time to shorten in the evergreens to make them grow compact and stocky. Simply nip off the ends of limbs and leaders that are growing too spindling.

Vacancies in strawberry rows can be filled up now by taking young plants with the runners attached, and setting them in these vacancies, and training the runners along the rows. If you have no strawberry bed, set a few this month, and if your soil is too heavy and stiff draw on a few loads of sand and mix thoroughly through it. If sand is not to be had, haul leaf mold from the woods, and also put on coal ashes and work in well. If your strawberry rows are uneven, having vacant spaces, take up plants from well-filled spaces and transplant. Go through the strawberries often, and train the runners along in rows.

Watch the flower seeds and gather as fast as ripe, as they waste very easy.

Look out for manure, and make compost heaps as fast as you collect suitable materials.

Pears are ripening up this month Most varieties are better to gather just before they are ripe, and place them on shelves or the floor in a dark, close room.

Don't allow weeds in the garden to go to seed. If you can't do better to prevent it, cut them down with a scythe or sickle.

LAYERING GRAPES.—If there are new canes growing next to the crown of your plants lay them in and out of the ground, so that canes six feet in length will pass under the soil at least three times. They can be held in bottom trench with little forked pegs and covered over with earth. Many shrubs can be layered and increased this month. Currant cuttings should now be taken off, cut up into cuttings six to eight inches long, and set firmly into the soil up to the topmost bud.

Tips of the black raspberries can be layered through this month. Simply open holes with a trowel and place the tips of new growth in at an angle of 45 degrees and cover with earth.

Have all the old wood trimmed out of your blackberry and raspberry plantations.

This is a good time to scatter a little well prepared compost along the strawberry rows. Also put a small shovelful around each raspberry bush, but none around blackberries, for the latter do not need any stimulant until the plant shows exhaustion, when manure may be thrown around them late in the fall.

WORKERS AND THE SABBATH.

The distinguished Dr. John W. Draper has also left on record the following in relation to the physiology of the Sabbath:

"The constitution of the brain is such that it must have its time of repose. Periodicity is stamped upon it. Nor is it enough that it is awake and in action by day, and in the silence of the night obtains rest and repose; that same periodicity which belongs to it as a whole belongs to all its constituent parts. One portion of it cannot be called into incessant activity without the risk of injury. Its different regions, devoted to different functions, must have their separate times to rest. The excitement of one part must be coincident with a pause in the action of another. The Sabbath is a boon to all classes of men; for in whatever position of life we may be placed, it is needful for us to have an opportunity to rest. No one can, for any length of time, pursue one avocation or one train of thought without mental, and, therefore, bodily injury—nay, without insanity."

CORN CHANGED BY SELECTION.

Professor Morrow, of Illinois University, says: It is well known that the character of both stalk and ear may be considerably changed in a few years by selection. In three years we have made white the color of a large majority of the ears in a variety which, when received, produced white ears only in very rare cases. This gives additional encouragement in attempts to increase productiveness by increase of number of ears.

Success results from merit. Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer is placed before the public solely on its merits. Its success is indisputable.

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—R. T. Schmittou, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more light and profit. It is not a theological book. No fort is made to change the theological views of a one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finis."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment

"It contains much clear pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees or citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body at Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DeGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Salvation, as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cts.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Admiral Luce has received orders to proceed to Port au Prince, Hayti, to protect American interests in the Haytien waters, on account of the state of martial law which exists.

The President issued an order Aug. 14 placing Major-General Schofield in command of the army, with headquarters at Washington.

The bills to admit North Dakota and Montana are next on the Republican caucus program in the Senate, and if these are disposed of before the end of the week (which is not likely) the Senate bill to repeal the pre-emption and the timber-culture laws and amend the homestead law may be taken up. The attendance of members in the House has fallen off to a point where a quorum can be obtained only with difficulty, and a single objection is usually sufficient to defeat legislation.

POLITICAL.

It is reported from Washington that the Democratic managers intend to challenge Mr. Blaine to a joint discussion of the tariff question with Speaker Carlisle, in twelve principal cities of the Union, six to be named by Speaker Carlisle and six by Mr. Blaine.

It is understood here that both General Hovey and Mr. Matson, the rival candidates for governor in Indiana, favor the proposed plan of taking the stump together in joint discussion. They are both getting restive.

James G. Blaine, Senator Ingalls and Robert G. Ingersoll are announced to speak at a Republican rally at Farmer City, Ill., the first week in September.

Chairman Dickie announces that the Prohibition headquarters are to be moved from Chicago to New York, at the request of General Fisk "and for other weighty reasons," chief among which is probably the supremacy of the Voice, as organ of the party.

It is reported that President Cleveland is displeased with the management of the campaign by Mr. Brice, of the Democratic committee, and that Senator Gorman, of Maryland, is to take the place and do the work.

At a regular monthly of the executive committee of the American Protective Tariff League in New York Thursday, it was stated that during the month 796,-590 pamphlets had been sent out, with about 17,000,000 pages.

CHICAGO.

Another immense double swing bridge, said to be the finest in the city, is nearly ready for public use at Jackson street.

The suburb of South Lawn was the scene of a collision between an Illinois Central passenger train and a Grand Trunk freight at the crossing, Thursday, in which several coaches were smashed to kindling wood, and seven persons were injured. The escape of the rest is like a miracle.

The Heavy Hardware Jobbers' National Union, whose prime purpose is claimed to be an opposition to trusts, combinations and syndicates, as related to their business, was organized at the Grand Pacific Hotel last week, after a two days' conference of heavy jobbers.

COUNTRY.

Emma Traxel, aged 18, living near New Philadelphia, Ohio, Saturday last went into a trance, in which she remained for thirty-six hours. Preparations had been made for her funeral when she awoke. She was conscious of all her surroundings.

"Regulators" visited the home of a negro at Abbeville, La., Wednesday, for the purpose of administering a switching, and were fired upon by his white wife, one of their number being wounded. They departed without accomplishing their purpose.

The new Catholic church at Coleman, Wis., collapsed Thursday, killing one man and crushing seven others so that several may die.

Near Cumberland Falls, Ky., Sunday, three constables who had Andy Hamlin under arrest, were overtaken by the friends of the prisoner, under command of his brother, Alexander Hamlin, who demanded Andy's release. During the fusillade which ensued two of the officers were killed and the third mortally wounded.

An east-bound Erie freight was wrecked near Shohola, N. Y., last Monday morning by rocks washed down on the track, and a west-bound express train dashed into the wreck before it could be flagged, and the engine, baggage-car, a car loaded with horses, the smoker, and a day car were thrown down an embankment eighty feet from the track. Three men were killed or mortally hurt, eight others seriously injured, and twelve race-horses killed.

It is reported from Freetown, La., that more than twenty negroes were killed on Thursday by political regulator E. Payson Smith, of Chicago, a civil engineer being reported among the killed.

Masked men attempted to rob a Union Pacific express train near Dana Station, Wyoming, early Friday morning, but were beaten off by the train hands. Many shots were fired and a brakeman was wounded. Several companies have been organized, and are pursuing closely.

FOREIGN.

The Japanese Government have decided to spend £10,000,000 in five years in purchasing men-of-war.

The coroner's jury in the case of James Ridley, medical officer in the Tullamore (Ireland) jail, who recently committed suicide, returned a verdict that he killed himself owing to apprehensions of disclosures with reference to the treatment of John Mandeville, a political prisoner who died in the jail.

Bush fires have been raging fiercely in the vicinity of Kingston, Canada, and have already done damage to the extent of nearly $500,000. The whole section has been devastated, and many settlers have lost everything they possessed. Communication is cut off, as the bridges and corduroy roads have been burned or else rendered impassable by fallen trees. The Ontario government will be appealed to for aid.

A famine prevails in Epirus, and serious disorders have occurred. The Albanian garrison in Metzovo, owing to the non-receipt of their wages, attempted to sack the town. The soldiers killed many Christians and plundered their shops. Ten houses were burned.

The business district of Cayenne, French Guiana, has been burned, entailing a loss of $2,000,000.

Florence Morse, aged 12, made the ascent of Mont Blanc on Tuesday, being the youngest tourist that ever accomplished that feat.

A collision took place off Sable Island, between the Geiser and the Thingvalla, of the Hamburg-American Line, which occurred at 4 o'clock on the morning of August 14. The Geiser sank in a few minutes after the collision, and 117 were drowned. The Thingvalla was so disabled that she had to be put into Halifax after transfering all her passengers to the Wieland, of the same line. The Geiser had eighty six passengers aboard, seventy-two of whom were drowned or killed in the collision, and fourteen were taken first on the Thingvalla and then on the Wieland. The collision took place in a heavy fog.

The amount of damages which Mr. Parnell asks for in his suit against the London Times is £50,000. He bases his action on letters which the Times published in 1887, and on letters and statements introduced by the defense in the trial of O'Donnell's case against the Times. The trial will take place before Lord Kinnear, of the Court of Sessions, in Edinburgh.

Gen. Boulanger's arrival at Amiens last Wednesday resulted in several conflicts between the rival political parties. During the fighting several persons were wounded. A number of arrests were made. At a banquet given in his honor Gen. Boulanger made a violent speech against the parliamentary republic. He left the town amid a great tumult.

At Calais, France, troops dispersed riotous unemployed workmen who had invaded the ship yards for the purpose of inducing the employes to go on a strike.

Thirty convicts, en route to Siberia, made a desperate attempt to escape at Tashkend. Eleven were killed, ten wounded, and six escaped.

The Turkish government has ordered the removal from railway stations in Turkish territory of all bunting which was put up by the railway officials to commemorate the opening of the through line from Paris. Turkey opposes the opening of the road.

General Boulanger was unable to stay at Moienet Friday night on account of the riotous reception accorded him. He was compelled to return to Amiens. At Corbi a supporter of General Boulanger attempted to shoot a magistrate with a revolver and was arrested.

General Boulanger was elected to the Chamber of Deputies Sunday to represent the Department of Somme, of which Amiens is the capital. His majority was 34,723. The announcement of the figures created great excitement in Paris in view of the reported insurrection there.

The return of Herr Von Poetticher to office is the natural sequence of the death of Emperor Frederick. The Emperor William, besides having a strong personal regard for Herr Von Poetticher, supported him during the crisis which ended with his resignation, and has taken the first opportunity to reinstate him in office as Vice President of the Prussian ministry. Sweeping changes in the command of the army are impending, and are simultaneous with energetic reforms regarding the clothing and drilling of the troops and a reorganization of the artillery. Feverish activity pervades every department of the army.

VITAL WICKS.

"There are three wicks to the lamp of a man's life; brain, blood, and breath." Thus writes an eminent American author. The most frequent derangements occur in the blood and in the liver, by which, when in healthy condition, the blood is purified. Look out for the terrible chain of diseases that owe their inception to torpid liver and consequent impure blood. When the symptoms of liver and kidney troubles, consumption (Lung-scrofula), bronchitis, and dropsy, make their appearance, the system is in immediate need of a course of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Its marvelous effects have been tested and proven in the cure of tens of thousands of cases. It purifies and enriches the blood, restores lost vitality, and effectually eradicates the seeds of the worst maladies that afflict mankind.

If you desire to possess a beautiful complexion take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It cleanses and purifies the blood, and removes blotches and pimples, making the skin smooth and clear, and giving it a bright and healthy appearance. Take it this month.

"Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit; there is more hope of a fool than of him." It is the men who are open to conviction—who are teachable, who take hold of things out of the beaten track, and "Taking time by the forelock and not by the fetlock," go forward to success. To this latter class we desire especially to appeal and urge them to write to B. F. Johnson & Co., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va., they will do you good and not evil.

The queen of the Tonga Islands has petitioned to have her country taken under the protection of Great Britain, to save her land from the curse of strong drink, which the traders are forcing on her people. Great Britain led the way in the abolition of the slave trade. Cannot she join with other Christian nations in the abolition of this international drink traffic?

One of our Southern exchanges, representing the colored churches, contains a brief note from Richmond Theological Seminary (Baptist), mentioning with approval the fact that one of the professors is Grand Chief Templar of the Dual Grand Lodge, of Virginia. Would there were another Woodsmall to undertake such a work in the Atlantic States which that now departed saint did in the Mississippi valley against secretism!

It is worth noting in the above, that the work of John B. Finch in uniting the discordant parties among the Good Templars is being carried out. At the Saratoga meeting in May, 1887, the two branches of this lodge, long separated because the American lodges would not admit a black member, were united through the scheming of Finch and with a pretended abolition of the color line. But in fact that obnoxious division was continued under another name, as above. The Negro Good Templars have their own lodges which have their separate Grand Lodge called a "Dual" affair.

At the late National Teachers' Convention in San Francisco a gentleman from Texas read a paper on "The Culture most Valuable for Educating Law-respecting and Law-abiding Citizens." He urged that every child needs to be baptized into the spirit of our institutions; to be familiar with our history, our plan of government, and the elements of our political economy, and especially with an impartial history of our political parties. But following this clear statement of the case the paper made a singular recommendation, that the work best adapted to give this instruction was the life of Henry Clay. It is true that this volume gives us a record of political compromise and vacillation; but for illustrious examples of the true spirit of American principles maintained with dignity and integrity through trials of misfortune and success, let us thank God that our youth are rather inclined to the lives of Washington, Hamilton, Wilson, Sumner and the Adamses.

The imprisoned evangelist, William F. Davis, has written from his cell in Boston jail to Mr. Samuel A. Pratt of Worcester an impressive letter which the latter has published. He says that the chairman of the committee which assumed control of the Boston parks and forbade the preaching of the Gospel in them; the district attorney who prosecuted Mr. Davis; the Irish Roman Catholic rumseller and alderman who was most interested in passing the gag ordinance; Judge Bacon who pronounced the four sentences against the preacher in a single trial, giving the highest possible penalty under the law—all these men have lately fallen by death. The hand of God seems to be displayed in judgment upon these public officers. Will it also fall upon the great city which allows such iniquity?

A war has begun in Cleveland against open saloons on the Sabbath under the State law. Twenty-four keepers were arrested last week, and the saloonists have resolved unitedly to defy the authorities and the law, and if arrested to be taken in such numbers to the courts as to block their business. In Pittsburgh an Anti Law and Order Society has resolved to retaliate upon the good citizens who wish the law enforced against the Sunday saloon, by closing cigar stores, soda and ice-cream stands, and are moving against street cars, Sunday papers, telegraph companies, etc. This is a fortunate retaliation for Pittsburgh. May the struggle be kept up until the city shall find it possible to live without these accessories for one day, and shall proclaim that the Sabbath shall be kept free from them.

The Fisheries treaty was rejected by a party vote in the Senate on Tuesday last. A two-thirds vote was necessary for ratification; the vote stood 27 yeas to 30 nays. On Thursday President Cleveland surprised Congress and the country with a special message reviewing the situation, recalling the ill-treatment of our fishermen, and recommending "immediate legislative action conferring upon the Executive the power to suspend by proclamation the operation of all laws and regulations permitting the transit of goods, wares and merchandise in bond" across our territory to or from Canada; also that upon Canadian vessels be put the same restrictions they place upon ours. This recommendation was immediately followed by a bill to carry it into effect. When everybody recovered from their surprise, an estimate was taken of the probable damage Canada would suffer should Congress grant the request. Opinions vary so greatly that the tariff question seems simple compared with it. Republicans sneer that it is a bold play for votes; Democrats approve it as deserved by the contemptuous Canadian; and the latter smiles and shows how American railways will suffer most from such retaliation. On general principles the message seems to be unstatesmanlike and ill-advised. Certainly some solution of this fishery question can be found more consistent with our Christian civilization.

It was noted in these columns last week that George May Powell, of Philadelphia, had appeared before the Senate committee on Labor and Education to present the cause of profit-sharing. From a report in the Temperance Gazette of Camden, N. J., we learn that Mr. Powell also represented to the committee that the two chief causes of trouble between labor and capital were: first, the gigantic expenditure of the masses in intoxicants, an expenditure which, if applied to legitimate industry, would give plenty of employment to labor and capital; second, a self-deceived style of Christian life and teaching among many of both clergy and laity, and some so called religious papers. This is seen in such lines as laxness in Sabbath observance and other conformities to the world which result in slack-twisted and oblique-lined consciences. This kind of conscience in turn is just what is the trouble with these elements of both labor and capital, which create most of this turmoil. He said the main reliance for relief was in a popular education from which ethics was not eliminated (by such means as throwing the Bible out of schools, for example). Both wealth and education are elements of weakness and of absolute danger, where not well mixed with high moral principles. Home and city missions pay the greatest of dividends to the business world in helping along right lines of conscience. So they are powerful allies of labor and capital.

CHRISTIAN FORGIVENESS.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

It is wrong to retaliate. In the nature of things it is productive of evil. It tends to increase and foster and multiply wrongs absolutely without end. It renders neither party better, but both worse. The offender is aroused to revenge, and the offended who retaliates is so much the worse, as he has done a mean action when he might have done a noble one.

Janson says: "A wise man will make haste to forgive, because he knows the true value of time, and will not suffer it to pass away in unnecessary pain. He that willingly suffers the corrosions of inveterate hatred, and gives up his days and nights to the gloom of malice and perturbations of stratagem, cannot be said to consult his own ease. Resentment is a union of sorrow with malignity, a combination of a passion which all endeavor to avoid with a passion which all concur to detest. The man who retires to meditate mischief, and to exasperate his own rage; whose thoughts are employed only on means of distress and contrivances of ruin; whose mind never pauses from the remembrance of his own sufferings, but to indulge some hope of enjoying the calamities of another, may justly be numbered among the most miserable of human beings, among those who are guilty without reward, who have neither the gladness of prosperity nor the calm of innocence."

How forcibly these words appeal to every human heart! The conscience of every man bears witness, that to overcome evil with good is an act of the most exalted virtue; while retaliation is ever an indication of meanness of spirit. "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore, if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." Because others violate this rule is no reason for our doing so. Their ill conduct furnishes us with an opportunity for the exercise of a special and peculiar grace. It is made our duty to overcome the wrong disposition of the evil doer by manifesting toward him particular kindness and good will. Tasso, being told that he had a fair opportunity to take advantage of a very bitter enemy, replied, "I wish not to plunder him; but there are things I wish to take from him—not his honor, his wealth, or his life, but his malice and ill-will." This is the sentiment of a great soul, a soul that towers above the fogs of human selfishness, and basks in the pure sunlight of God's truth. It is a little soul that cannot pass over an offense. Bacon says: "Generous and magnanimous minds are readiest to forgive; and it is a weakness and impotency of mind to be unable to forgive."

Philip, King of Macedon, discovered great moderation, even when he was spoken to in shocking and injurious terms. At the close of an audience which he gave to some Athenian ambassadors, who were come to complain of some act of hostility, he asked whether he could do them any service. "The greatest service thou couldst do us," said Demochares, "would be to hang thyself." Philip, though he perceived all the persons present were highly offended at these words, answered with the utmost calmness of temper, "Go tell your superiors that those who dare make use of such insolent language are more haughty and less peaceably inclined than those who can forgive them."

This is the Christian's crowning grace. It might ever be seen gleaming from the life of the meek and lowly Jesus. It is twice blessed. It blesses him that gives and him that takes. It is that love that beareth all things and endureth all things, which suffereth long and is kind, which rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth. We submit the following considerations:

I. God has promised to forgive us on condition that we forgive others. "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." Forgive us all our debts as we forgive all our debtors. Of him that hopes to be forgiven it is indispensably required that he forgive. It is absolute, binding always and everywhere. On this great duty eternity is suspended; and to him that refuses to practice it, the throne of mercy is inaccessible, and the Saviour of the world has died in vain. He bolts the gates of heaven against himself. He chains himself to the chariot wheels of Satan.

During the days of the feudal system the different houses were at constant warfare. One of the lords became enraged at a knight of another castle, and resolved to exterminate his house. His chaplain tried in vain to persuade him out of it. At length he said, "My lord, since I cannot persuade you to give up this plan of yours, will you at least consent to come with me to the chapel, that we may pray together before you go?" The duke consented, and the chaplain and he knelt together in prayer. Then the mercy-loving Christian said to the revengeful warrior, "Will you repeat after me, sentence by sentence, the prayer which our Lord Jesus Christ himself taught to his disciples?" "I will do it," replied the duke. He did it accordingly. The chaplain said a sentence, and the duke repeated it, till he came to the petition, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us." There the duke was silent. "My lord duke, you are silent," said the chaplain. "Will you be so good as to continue to repeat the words after me, if you dare say so? Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us." "I cannot," replied the duke. "Well, God cannot forgive you, for he has said so. He himself has given this prayer. Therefore, you must either give up your revenge, or give up saying this prayer; for to ask God to pardon you as you pardon others is to ask him to take vengeance on you for all your sins. Go now, my lord, and meet your victim. God will meet you at the great day of judgment." The iron will of the duke was broken. "No," he said; "I will finish my prayer. 'My God, my Father, pardon me. Forgive me, as I desire to forgive him who hath offended me. Lead me not into temptation, but deliver me from evil.'" "Amen!" said the chaplain. "Amen!" said the duke, who now understood the Lord's prayer better than he had ever done before, since he learned to apply it to himself.

"Forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye." "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." The parable of the king and his debtor is a fearful exemplification of this rule, "with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." The king forgave £60,000,000 of gold. The debtor refused to forgive £3. Then the king arrested him and delivered him to the tormentors till he should pay all that was due. So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses. Matt. 18: 23–35.

II. Christian forgiveness requires us to go to our offended brother and make every possible effort to be reconciled. This is the way God deals with us. We have offended him grievously, and times out of number. Yet he comes down to us, makes known his willingness to pass over our offences, and pleads with us to be reconciled. And this he requires of us with reference to those who have offended us. Here, then, are two cases. The first is where our brother has a charge against us. In this case it is plainly our duty to go to him and make it right. "If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." Here we are plainly taught that we are to go to those who are offended at us and be reconciled. But you say the case is different when another has offended me. Am I bound to go to the brother who has wronged me and be reconciled? It is our imperative duty to go. No matter how great the offense, forgive him in your heart; go to him and kindly make overtures of reconciliation. This is the way to win your brother.

Near the end of the seventeenth century a Turkish grandee in Hungary made a Christian nobleman his prisoner, and treated him with the utmost barbarity. The slave—for such he was—was yoked with an ox, and compelled to drag the plow. But the fortune of war changed, and the Turk fell into the hands of the Hungarians, who said to their enslaved fellow-countryman, "Now take your revenge upon your enemy." This was in accordance with the custom of the age; and the Turk supposing, as a matter of course, that he would be tortured to death, swallowed poison. At this juncture the Hungarian nobleman came in and said to him, "Go in peace, you have nothing to fear." The Moslem was so impressed with this heavenly spirit that he proclaimed with his dying breath, "I will not die a Moslem, but I die a Christian; for there is no religion but that of Christ which teaches forgiveness of injuries."

"Take heed to yourselves. If thy brother trespass against you, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him." "Take heed." When your brother trespasses against you, does you an injury, puts any slight or affront upon you, if he be accessory to any damage done you in your person or property, take heed to yourselves at such a time lest you be angry and speak unadvisedly and rashly vow revenge. "Rebuke him." Do not bear malice toward him or meditate revenge. Go to him and tell him his fault. Perhaps he intended no harm, and the matter is ended. If he meditated evil in it, you have discharged the Christian duty of reproving sin. "If he repent, forgive him." Repentance is an absolute condition of forgiveness. If a child deliberately lies, and you forgive the child before he has exhibited any sorrow for the act, you make the child worse. This principle is always true; but it is our duty to awaken in the offender the spirit of penitence by manifesting towards him particular kindness and sincere unalloyed good will. And these efforts are not to be suspended until he is reclaimed, if it take a whole lifetime. "Forgive him." Forget the injury.

On one occasion, sincerely aiming to do my duty, I offended a brother. I went to him, made the proper acknowledgments, and asked his pardon. "I forgive, but will not forget," he said. That means it stands against me still. What if Christ forgives him that way! He casts our sins behind his back. They are removed as far from us as east is distant from the west. So we are to forget the injury; never think of it again; by no means upbraid him with it. Cast it into the deep sea of eternal forgetfulness.

III. There is no limit to the number of times we are to forgive an offending brother. "Then Peter came to him and said, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him? till seven times? Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee until seven times, but until seventy times seven." Here we have a definite for an indefinite number. Our forgiveness is not to be measured by arithmetical rules. We are to forgive as long as we live.

MORMON FREEMASONRY.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

It is a well-established fact that Mormonism is Freemasonry gone to seed. On page 144 of "Life and Confession of John D. Lee," we read: "A Freemason's lodge and the privileges of Masonry were extended to the legion. A fine lodge was built in Nauvoo, and many were admitted as members. The brothers, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, held high positions in the brotherhood. I here became a member of the order and received three degrees. The institution flourished during our stay in Nauvoo, and was frequently visited by the Grand Worshipful Master from Springfield, and lectures were had, and a library established. I was librarian of the order."

Thus John D. Lee, the hero of the Mountain Meadow massacre, and his villainous fellow-assassins learned their first lessons in throat-cutting, breast-tearing and body-severing in the Masonic lodge. On page 153 he states the well-known fact that Joseph Smith died giving the "Grand Hailing Sign" of a Master Mason.

The blood atonement of Mormonism is practical Freemasonry. John D. Lee, just before his execution, says, "My life now hangs by a single thread! But is there no help for the widow's son?" Brigham Young was a high Freemason, and at one time he and fifteen hundred of his Mormon followers were in good standing in the Masonic lodges of Illinois.

It is well to keep these facts before the American people. They cannot be too often referred to. Much might be adduced in this line, but enough for the present.

WHAT SOCIETIES ARE NEEDFUL FOR SOCIAL AND REFORMATORY PURPOSES?

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

A good brother in New Jersey writes, that while he does not like secret societies, there are some features in Good Templarism that he approves, and he suggests that there be a new social and temperance society formed on a similar plan, leaving out the elements of secrecy. He says that while Christians do not need such a society, the people who are not Christians do need it, and that it is a duty to labor for their welfare.

Let us look at this matter in the light of divine teachings.

1. The first and highest duty of every person in Christian lands is to become a Christian. Until he has done this, all other acts, however innocent or meritorious in themselves considered, are simply acts of sin and rebellion against a just and holy God.

2. It follows that we have no right to give any countenance to such willful neglect of God and of the promises of the Gospel, but that our first and highest duty to our fellow man is to persuade him to cease to be a rebel and become a true disciple of Christ.

3. The Christian church is the divinely appointed and only plan for bringing men to Christ, and for their complete and entire reformation in all respects.

4. It follows that any organization or society that is not subordinate to, and has not for its objects the carrying out of the Gospel plan on Gospel principles, is unauthorized and unwise; for God is surely wiser than man. The divine plan is better than the human, and every organized society, except the state and such as may be instituted to promote civil authority, is unwarranted and wrong.

5. It follows, too, that even if men are reformed in mere external morality, but not converted to Christ, they only exchange one form of sin for another. They may be better members of society, but are not more pleasing to God.

6. The absolute duty of Christians is that of separation from the world. Christ says, "I have chosen you out of the world." "Be ye separate." All societies, except those for civil government, that thus unite believers and unbelievers, are an "unequal yoking with unbelievers," which is expressly forbidden. 2 Cor. 6: 14.

7. Do we owe no other duties to unbelievers than simply to win them to Christ? Yes. As members of our families they are to be supported, protected and educated. The family is of Divine appointment and unlike the church in that it includes alike those who are the children of God and those who are not. The state, too, is of Divine appointment. The Christian citizen, while he may not join with the man of the world in a moral reform society, may unite with him in securing a government that shall establish justice and secure the blessings of liberty.

8. The N. C. A., the W. C. T. U., the Sabbath-school and missionary societies are religious societies and a part of the church work. Public schools, political parties and insurance societies are in subordination to the state. If organized in harmony with Christian principles, Christian men may join them in their character of citizens. They are not "unequally yoked."

9. It follows that there is no room for secret societies, nor any other societies which propose to reform men on merely worldly and selfish principles.

"HOW LONG SHALL WE DRINK SEWAGE?"

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

So inquires the Philadelphia Inquirer and so quotes the National Baptist. Is the sewage which empties into the Schuylkill from 191 premises one-thousandth part as mischievous to our population of the City of "Brotherly Love" as is the sewage of the still to 60,000,000 of people? Reduce the number of death-dealing streams from this source to 191, and the people who receive damage from them to three-fourths of a million, and the cause for the prohibition of the liquor traffic would sink into insignificance, compared to its present magnitude. Then suppose beside this that these streams from the still-sewage hurt only the body, not the morals, the character, the peace of the home, the eternal destiny of all the people, the very nation, the cause of Prohibition would be reduced ten thousand-fold more.

Yet while the papers above quoted see grave reasons for purifying the great reservoirs of Philadelphia, they have not yet come to see Prohibition in its true light. What if these owners of the 191 premises along the Schuylkill should offer $1,000 for the privilege of sending their sewage into the river from which the water is taken to the city? This would be such a source of revenue to the city that the water might go down smoothly, in case some party mint should flavor it—the G. O. P. flavoring will remove poisons, peradventure. What would the people of the Quaker city say to such a proposition?

Buy the right to poison us! We'll see. We can conceive of nothing more diabolical. Are we to be poisoned for a price to our city government?

Let the principle of high license be applied everywhere, if it be sound and good. Apply it to all sins against the people in all communities. Why not? Suppose, then, some malignant spirit comes from parts unknown with this message to the Prince of Heaven: "Sublime and omnipotent Prince, I know that this celestial place was designed for holiness, righteousness and peace, the home of the brave and of the faithful forever; that thou wilt have one place to be free from wrong doing; that to accomplish this thou hast beset earth and heaven itself, and summoned the legions of the heavenly host to found this celestial home; that to bring about this sublime scheme thou didst dwell with apostate men and demons; wast crucified between thieves, rose from the dead, and ascended to glory, where now I find thee; but thou knowest my record, that I served thee from my infancy up to the conspiracy, when and where I 'left my own habitation, fell from my first estate' of loyalty to right, in short, I belong to the G. O. P. of the 'Ancient of days,' and am entitled to the consideration of the celestial realm. And now, most royal Prince, allow us—for I have legions at my elbow—to devote one corner of the most obscure place in this celestial realm to the sale of indulgences to—to—well, to certain things not in strict harmony with thy mind and nature, but good and necessary. We cannot be entirely responsible for the result, as some disorder may accrue—such as is common down there (pointing to earth); forbear, most sublime Prince. I should blush to name them in thy presence. Well, I mean business, and must come to the point. It is this: I want license. I will pay thee a sum which earth has no means of knowing, no figures to compute, for the privilege of some liberty to our citizens. I fully endorse the idea of high license, and can well afford to pay."

How the celestial foundations tremble! The very pillars of the palace vibrate, as if to crumble to dust. Such lightnings and thunders our earth could not sustain! Terror-stricken, I looked at our Prince. Such a frown—it was the frown of Omnipotence! Indignation shaking heaven. Where is the messenger? Only the odor of sulphur indicated his late presence. By the unanimous suffrage of the celestial city he went out and down "to his own place."

So ought license, which pours upon our earth the sewage of the drink traffic. Hell's sewage, to be devoted to its own place.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN THE TWO SICILIES.

If now it is asked what is meant by Maffia, it will be found that few, even among Sicilians, are agreed as to the exact meaning of the term. Perhaps the most satisfactory definition is that given in the Blue Book of 1877:

"The Maffia is not precisely a secret society, but rather the development and blossom of arbitrary violence directed to criminal ends of every sort. It is the instinctive, brutal, sordid solidarity that unites against the state, the laws, and the constituted authorities, all who are determined to live and thrive not by honest work, but by violence, by fraud and by intimidation."

But even this definition does not say all; add that it is accepted as the inevitable even by honest men, that it imposes its code on the weak, and resists the Government even more by the inertia of passive resistance than by overt acts of violence, and, Proteus-like, evades the arm of the magistrate as it does the definition of the student. It would take a volume to specify all the modes in which, without violating the letter of the law, the Maffia can make things comfortable for its subordinates. One instance taken at hazard must suffice:

"The Sindaco of Palermo, taking the presence of cholera as a pretext, has nominated a whole batch of new officials, and that though many of the clerks who already draw salaries have quite given up going to their offices. A good thing too, for the municipal buildings would be quite too small to accommodate them all."

If we look below the surface we shall find that the Maffia is to a great extent a survival from the Middle Ages, the outcome of the relations between feudal superior and retainer, relations on which all social and political life continued to be based in Sicily till the first quarter of the present century; in part an expression of that exaggerated individualism which, if common throughout the kingdom, is nowhere so strongly marked as in Sicily. It is the Calabrian who on the mainland most closely resembles the Sicilian, and it is a Calabrian proverb that says, "Quanno niscianu m'avantu m'avantu cu—When no one praises me I praise myself." "A French mob in revolution days," said Signor T. Mamiani, "shouts, 'Who will guide us?' but in Italy the cry most heard is, 'Follow me!' for each individual is thoroughly convinced of his own ability to lead." "If," said a typical Southerner to me, speaking in all seriousness of a reform he thought needful, "if the Ministry does not yield I will get myself elected deputy, summon the costituenti, and reform the Constitution." And he was convinced of his right and ability to do so. One result of this trait is that while there is in Sicily much loyalty to the king, there is no loyalty to the institutions. The ties of blood and partisanship are so strong as to leave no room for mere political alliances. The admired leader is not the statesman of sagacity or even of persuasive eloquence, but he who most imposes himself by astuteness and overbearing temper, or even by the violence of his personal following; for here, as elsewhere in Italy, it is the solitary or even the anti-social rather than the civic that are most esteemed, and it is perhaps not without significance that in popular music, melody and solos predominate over harmony and chorus.

It might seem a paradox to attribute the prevalence of secret societies to this primitive egotistic independence, which seems even to give the lie to Aristotle's definition of man as being by nature a "society animal," and makes it not altogether fanciful to trace the parentage of the modern Sicilian to Homer's Cyclopes who shocked Hellenic opinion, ruling each man his wife and children, caring not for his neighbors. But it must be noticed that societies, legal or illegal, for political, social, or commercial ends, are marked in Sicily by something of the clannish type. Even in the names "brothers," "sons," often assumed by members, one seems to recognize the fiction of a common father, though it is perfectly understood that the associations and the respect paid to their heads are accepted as a mere matter of convenience. Such associations, too, are very rare, except those in which the members look up to a common and necessary protector, in whom, however, no normal or intrinsic superiority is recognized. Just as the revolutionary Frenchman was pleased to harmonize his theory of the intrinsic equality of all with the actual authority of a few, by the fiction of voluntary surrender of rights under an imaginary contrat social, so the Sicilian's pride is contented to obey a self-elected chief, to whom he gives an allegiance which, as he flatters himself, is purely voluntary, and whose despotism is tempered by assassination, rather than the impersonal state which imposes itself on all. It must be remembered, too, that in the old Bourbon days law was looked upon by the bulk of the population as a mere engine, enabling the court and its favorites to prey, with at least a semblance of justice, on the poverty of the people; and even now the heavy taxation, the conscription, and the want of any intelligent sympathy with the population of officials, who look on a transfer to Sicily as little better than a penal banishment, keeps up much of the former distrust of Government. The upshot of all these causes is that in Sicily law is still looked on by the majority much as the English rule is in Ireland—as a common enemy, or at best a marplot in family disputes, whom every honorable man is bound to baffle to the utmost of his power.

From these premises in the moral syllogism is deduced the great principle of Omerta, on which Maffia is really based and which gives it its living power. What, then, is Omerta?

"In the course of years," says Signor Tommasi Cosedell, "the national character of Sicilians in all its manifestations has become interpenetrated with the principles of a special code, called that of Omerta, which lays it down as the first duty of a man to do justice for himself with his own hands for any injury he may have suffered, and brands with infamy, holding up to the contempt and vengeance of the public any one who appeals to the law courts or assists the police in their investigations. A man perfectly honorable in other relations of life is convinced that he is doing a good deed in harboring an assassin, or in refusing to give evidence against him; for the code of Omerta says: 'Evidence is good so long as it does not injure your neighbor.'"

Under this code a willing witness is shunned and scorned, as is an "informer" in Ireland. With his dying breath a murdered man will refuse to give any information to the police, and stoutly deny all knowledge of his assailant, preferring to chance the escape of his enemy, and leave a legacy of vengeance to his family or faction, rather than suffer his name to become a byword of reproach. Brought face to face with this solidarity of victim and criminal in resenting its interference, the executive is almost powerless. But one or two of the grim and expressive maxims current in the island enable one to realize, far better than pages of description, the feeling dominant in Sicily which makes possible the continued prevalent of Maffia and Omerta. "Scupettae mugghieri nun si mprestano, A man does not lend his gun or wife." "Si moru mi drivocu, si campu t'allampu, If I die they'll bury me, if I escape I'll strike you dead." "La furca e pri la poviru, la giustizia pri la fissu, The gallows for the poor man, the law courts for the milksop." The unknown author of these apophthegms has sketched out with a few master-strokes the position of an Ishmaelite consciously and defiantly at war with social order.

Next in importance to the anthropological as a factor in the prevalence of crime, come the physical features of the island. "Latifundia," said Pliny, "perdidere Italiam," and it is hardly less true that large estates are the seed-beds of crime in Sicily, and absentee landlords are at once the cause and the consequence of Maffia. Practically the whole of the interior plain of Sicily, and 65 per cent. of the entire island, is devoted to the culture of wheat on estates varying in size from 3,000 to 15,000 acres. For though many small properties were created by the sale of Church lands after 1860, these, except on the north and east coast, are rapidly disappearing. Small properties cannot stand up under the pressure of taxation. One fact taken from the official report is sufficient to prove this. From 1873 to 1874 there were put up for sale by auction for non-payment of land tax, 13,713 properties with a debt on them of 7,488,357 francs. Of these 693, with a debt of 660,559 francs, were sold, and 13,056, with a debt of 6,826,697, were adjudicated to the state, no one having made a bid for them, as the arrears of unpaid taxes amounted to more than the value of the fee-simple. These large wildernesses of estates are almost invariably rented to a gabelloto, or head-tenant, who sublets them in small parcels at rack-rental, each borghese, or under-tenant, taking up from ten to twenty acres on which he camps during the working season with his beasts, whose life and toil he shares, which he cultivates as he can, and pays for as he must, usually by a share, ranging from two-thirds to three-quarters of the crop. Tenant-farmers with capital, and farm-buildings on the holdings, are here equally unknown, and the borghese is almost always in debt to the gabelloto, who advances him food and seed-corn at extravagant interest, and to whom he is virtually a serf. If the season is good he barely pays his way; if it is bad he sinks hopelessly into debt. Baron Mendola, a Sicilian landlord and a shrewd observer, gives it as his deliberate opinion that the average Sicilian peasant cannot possibly make both ends meet. "Honest labor," he says, "seldom suffices for the maintenance of the family. Theft is obligatory." Except at seed-time and harvest these estates are deserted. The agricultural population is all collected in the villages, and the wide plain, with all its crops which no police can pretend to watch over, is at the mercy of evil-doers. It is the sense of insecurity thus engendered, the knowledge that his crops may at any moment be burned and his cattle stolen, that drives the gabelloto, even were he well disposed, into the arms of the Maffia, the only protector that can secure him from daily risk of ruin.

If the secrecy of a society is a good thing, then it must be as wrong to reveal the secrets of one as another. The Ku Klux and the White Caps should be as inviolate as the Freemasons or Knights of Labor. But Dr. Hoffman of the Geological Survey has been studying Indians out West. He joined the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, and, we know not by what hook or crook he obtained it, whether he joined the society and is now "perjuring" himself, or whether he stole the information as a miserable "coward and eavesdropper," but he comes back enriched by all the secrets of the Medicine Society of that tribe. He knows the oaths, the passwords, ceremonies, grips and all, and he is going to publish it to the world. We believe in consistency and fair play. If it is right to publish the Indians' secrets in the interest of science and the development of the history of man, it is right to print the white man's secrets for the same purpose, especially as his secret societies claim to be the depository of all science and truth.—American, Washington.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The Peace Convention—An important omission—The public school question vs. rum-selling—Uncle Tom's Cabin played with a Voudoo Festival annexed—The same saints' day for Voudooism as for Masonry—The Iron Hall in Missouri and Massachusetts.

A convention of the Universal Peace Union has just been closed at Mystic, Conn. Social purity was the topic of addresses by Mrs. Amanda Dis and Mrs. Belva Lockwood; one dwelling upon the revelation of immorality in army life in India, the other speaking upon the equally terrible immoralities of the Michigan lumber camps. Resolutions were adopted condemning capital punishment and demanding fair play for the Indian. As there are many Christian people who still believe in the stern old code of Genesis, there may be two opinions on the former subject, but in reference to the latter, even our American government is slowly finding out that it is cheaper to civilize the Indian than to send an army to punish him for deeds which are only such as a savage, goaded to desperation by wrongs for which he sees no other redress than the scalping knife, might be expected to commit. Mrs. Parnell, of Home-Rule fame, spoke eloquently of equal rights as a necessary basis of universal peace; and a colored minister, Rev. Paulus Moore, presented a resolution sending greeting to the peace convention of England, and asking it to use its influence in preventing wars of conquest in Africa. It is rather surprising, however, that one of the most prolific causes of war, intemperance, should have received no notice. According to Kinglake, the Crimea would never have been invaded if the British Cabinet had not drank too much wine with their dinner; and who shall say how much the shipment of rum to the Congo by both England and America has had to do in stirring up those internal wars which are the life of the African slave trade with all its diabolical horrors?

Evil is one mighty interlacing of various iniquities, and in this single question of war, we find involved almost every other great question of morals. How much Freemasonry has had to do with foreign wars has never been made the subject of historical inquiry; but the part which its hidden hand has played in intestine tumults and revolutions may be gathered from such works as La Hodde's "Cradle of Rebellions," and the well-known facts regarding its close connection with our late Civil War, as well as during that reign of terror among the colored people and white Unionists, when it masqueraded under the title of Ku Klux, marking its pathway with the light of burning Negro schools and cabins, and all manner of nameless atrocities. And now Brooklyn is being agitated over the same public school question which is troubling Boston, only in a new form. The New York correspondent of the Congregationalist writes that a graduating exercise by one of the primary scholars, which was only an innocent recitation in rhyme by a little girl, setting forth the misery brought upon the drunkard's wife by the rumseller, has stirred up the Liquor Association to send a written complaint to the Board of Education, and it remains to be seen whether they will be as subservient to the rumseller, as the Boston Board is to the Jesuits. If this continues, conscientious men and women will be slow to take up a profession in which they cannot be protected in the honest discharge of their duty; and the natural result of all this will be a dangerous lowering of the moral and intellectual standard in our public educators. The parochial schools are far inferior to the public schools, a fact which is recognized by intelligent Catholics. They do not give anything beyond a common Grammar School education; but a correspondent to the Christian Union states that the Jesuit party is now "making extraordinary efforts to bring them up to the public school standard." It is useless to say that 50,000,000 Protestants can never be ruled by 10,000,000 Romanists. I doubt if either that mere handful of unscrupulous slaveholders, who once controlled our whole nation, or the rum power, which is controlling it now, could begin to muster to their side the fraud, the corruption, the secret guile, that can be wielded by our 100,000 Jesuits. The time will come when the United States will find it a political necessity to banish them from her borders, as have Italy and France.

Uncle Tom's Cabin is being played at the Hollis Street Theater, with a unique feature added,—a very realistic representation of a Voudoo festival. The Southern States have generally passed laws against the practice, but along the Gulf Voudooism flourishes in vigorous life. The initiate, his face and lips smeared with blood, takes an oath to keep secret all the proceedings, invoking the death penalty on himself if he violates his obligation. It is a curious coincidence, to say the least, that this wild and disgusting medley of heathenism, cruelty, chanting, dancing and drunkenness is always held on St. John's eve! Can it be that "the holy Saints John" are the patron saints of Voudooism as well as Freemasonry?

A recent issue of the Standard, a weekly paper published in Boston and devoted to insurance interests, contains the following card, written by Mr. Alfred Carr, superintendent of the Missouri Insurance Department, to the St. Louis Post Dispatch in regard to that much vaunted order called the Iron Hall:

"In a telegram from Indianapolis, printed in the Post Dispatch of Sunday, July 29, indorsing the operations of the Iron Hall, occurs the following: 'In Missouri the fight against the order was carried into the courts, where the supreme officers achieved a victory, and it now has a number of branches in that State.' The foregoing would tend to mislead the public, and as Superintendent of the Insurance Department I desire to say that I have always regarded the Iron Hall as one of the most injurious of the many so called benevolent insurance societies. No proceedings have ever been instituted in the State against the Iron Hall. Mr. H. A. Cooper was arrested as an agent of this company, and prosecuted for a violation of the insurance laws of the State. His case was heard before the Court of Criminal Correction in the city of St. Louis, and, by processes peculiar to the judge of that court, he was discharged. However, if any one will bring to my notice the facts showing that this company is doing business through any agent in any place in Missouri, outside the city of St Louis, I will undertake to prosecute such agent to the full extent of the law, and thus demonstrate the fact that the company has no right to do business in Missouri, also!"

The Standard thus comments on the matter: "Would that the closing clause of Mr. Carr's sturdy communication applied to Massachusetts. In this case 'enlightened Masschusetts,' which has legalized this Munchausen nondescript, may well learn a lesson from the 'wild Western State' which refuses to do so."

NATIONAL REFORM AND PROHIBITION IN CINCINNATI.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Aug. 25, 1888.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The second Sabbath morning of August I preached in the Third Presbyterian church on the liquor traffic. This gave an open field for National Reform principles. The echoes of the sermon were heard all last week. Its delivery was announced at the Cincinnati Prohibition Club as a score for them.

In the evening I gave a National Reform discourse in the Wesley M. E. chapel, Rev. Thomas Pearne, D.D., pastor. This is the original church in Cincinnati. Dr. Pearne is just entering upon the fourth year of his pastorate. Since he went there the church debt has been lifted, the building repaired to the extent of $4,000, and the membership largely increased. Dr. Pearne is a champion for Sabbath reform. He regards these camp meetings as a source of danger, as they are the occasion of so much Sabbath desecration. He is a Phinehas in his zeal against the drink system. His paper before the Cincinnati minister a year ago last May was a most scathing philippic against the saloon.

Monday evening I attended the Prohibition Club meeting. It is not surprising that good men organize against the saloon. It is striking at the heart of society. It dominates Congress, State legislatures, municipal councils and political parties. It touches the business of a prosperous man of affairs, and it melts like a soap bubble. It enters his home, and it falls in ruins. It touches the floors, they are carpetless. It looks into the wardrobe, it is vacant. It looks into the cupboard, it is empty. It touches his wife, she fills a premature grave. It touches his children, they are street ragamuffins. It touches the man, he is carried to the potter's field.

"Rattle his bones over the stones,
It is only a pauper, whom nobody owns."

The saloon was the cause of every step down from the height of prosperity to the depths of degradation.

Last Sabbath morning I preached on church unity in the Third Presbyterian church. The enemy is massing his forces against the church, and she must unite her forces to meet him. All are under "the Captain of our salvation." What is wanting now is co-operation. What was the cause of the defeat of Bothwell Bridge? Division and dissension in the army. Why was nothing accomplished during the first year of the war of the Rebellion? Failure on the part of the leaders to co-operate. Halleck would not co-operate with Buell in Missouri. McClellan in the East would not co-operate with Sherman in the center. And so the great soul of Lincoln was troubled beyond measure, because "nothing could be done." Why has the church so long failed to take the world for Christ? Failure to co-operate. The salvation of the world depends upon God's people co-operating in its accomplishment. The Saviour's prayer was, "That they may be one, as Thou, Father, art in me and I in Thee; that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me."

At 4 P. M. I preached to young men in the Y. M. C. A. hall. Marco N. Popoff, a Bohemian, a junior in Hamilton College, Clinton, N. Y., was present. He said: "I heard you lecture on National Reform in our college last winter. We were all delighted, and would be glad to see you back again. I saw in last evening's paper that you were to preach here, and I came over to hear you." He gave a lecture in the Central Presbyterian church on "Bohemia, Its Customs and the Mission Work." It was repeated in the Walnut Hills Presbyterian church.

In the religious department of the Centennial Exposition these facts are on exhibition: The Y. M. C. A. was founded by George Williams, London, England, 1844. There are 4,000 organizations in the world, 1,240 in America, 273 in colleges and universities, 77 railroad associations, 10 German, 27 colored and 15 Indian. They have in buildings and real estate, $7,262,000; endowment fund, $1,209,865; pledged, $1,356,000; general secretaries and paid officers, 750; weekly attendance at devotional exercises, 2,500. In Ohio there are 51 associations, 6,000 members; annual expenditure, $53,000; endowment fund, $15,000; building fund pledged, $158,000; value of property, $256,000. The Cincinnati association proposes to erect a new building on the northwest corner of Eighth and Elm streets, at a cost of $100,000.

In the evening I preached in the Pendleton M. E. church, Rev. J. W. Bushory, pastor. This brother was pastor of Trinity a few years ago. Later he preached in Springfield, Ohio. Of this he says: "I preached to the largest audiences of any man in the State of Ohio. It was not uncommon for 300 to go away unable to get in." We had a good audience, and they responded heartily to National Reform.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24, 1888.

Mrs. Cleveland began her work as treasurer of the fund for building an American church in Berlin several weeks ago, upon accepting the position, and already she has received quite a sum of money. George W. Childs and Mr. Wanamaker of Philadelphia were among the first subscribers. Through the influence of his wife the President is said to be fast losing the peculiarities of bachelorhood, while his social characteristics are rapidly developing. He reads the newspapers now, and even holds his own very creditably in a conversation of small talk.

Since I last wrote you Congress has been slowly doing nothing. There has been some filibustering in the House over legislation on general pension bills, and much talk on subjects of local interest. The Senate has shown solicitude for the safety of the streets of the District of Columbia by several debates on overhead and underground electric wires; there have been some of the usual chapters on the Fisheries treaty and on appropriation bills; some extensive collections of roll calls and dilly-dallying motions, but altogether the week's record is too insignificant to itemize.

The lower branch of Congress takes up more time and spends more money in doing nothing than any other legislative body in the world. It is not because there are too many members. The British House of Commons has more than twice as many; the French Chamber of Deputies has over two hundred more; the German Reichstag seventy more; the Austrian House is a trifle larger, and the Italian Chamber of Deputies has one hundred and eighty more members. But no one of these parliamentary bodies can be justly charged with such an absolute waste of time as the House of Representatives. When complaint is made to members of Congress of the inertia of the House, they reply that the fault lies entirely with the system of rules which has been handed down from one House to another, with such amendments as the caprice of the majority engrafted upon it. This is really the prime cause of the trouble. It is a self-shackled body, yet no one set of politicians or parliamentarians can justly be held responsible for so marvelous a combination of regulations, which are liable at any moment to throw the House into a condition of paralysis and keep it there.

A few days since, there was upon the desk of Representative Matson, of Indiana, a handsome silver set, pitcher and goblets, presented by employes of the Government Printing Office, in recognition of their appreciation of his services in securing the passage of the bill, granting them thirty days annual leave, with pay. Mr. Matson returned the present to the donors, saying in a letter, that the acceptance of a valuable present for doing a plain duty, would be, in his opinion, a very bad precedent. He did not object to taking floral tributes, as he had on several occasions, but he thought he ought to draw the line at silver. It is useless to state that his course was commended. It would not require much gift making and taking to involve the House in a serious scandal, as has been done in times past.

Senator Blair has given up all hopes of having his educational bill reported to the House during the present session of Congress. He does not criticize the House Committee harshly for having pigeon-holed the bill, but he says he thinks that it has acted very unwisely. A majority of the members of the House Committee, as is well-known, are opposed to the bill on the ground that it is unconstitutional, and that its passage would mean the extension of Federal jurisdiction over millions which belong properly to the States. Several of the Southern members, among them Representative Phelan, of Tennessee, and Simmons, of North Carolina, have introduced bills with the view of removing the objectionable features of the Blair bill, the former proposing to submit the bill to the States as an amendment to the Constitution, and the latter to loan money on security to the various State governments. None of these amendments have been acted upon, however, up to the present; and it is quite certain that no legislation in regard to the measure will occur during the present session. Senator Blair will present the bill in the Fifty-first Congress, however, and will continue to urge it with the same persistency as long as he remains in the Senate. *

—Since he has been in Chicago, Bro. Gunner has learned that one of his church members in New Iberia has renounced his connection with the Knights of Labor, and agrees to stand by his pastor for Christ alone. A few other members are connected with the order, but Bro. Gunner is confident that the truth will also make them free.

THE BIG TENT.

AND BIGGER CROWDS TO HEAR THE TRUTH ON FALSE RELIGIONS.

Dear Editor:—We came to Clinton, Iowa, and found a lot suitably located for our tent work, and as it was owned by the Odd-fellow lodge we paid the chairman of their executive committee three dollars for the use of the ground, and pitched our tents. Our audiences soon grew to be so large that had it not been for frequent rains we could not have accommodated the crowds.

When the interest was sufficiently aroused I announced an art exhibition in illustration of a lecture on Grecian and Roman Mythology. This announcement brought out a fine audience. At the close of this lecture I announced that on the next evening the symbolism used in India, Persia, Egypt, and by the Aztec Indians and other nations, would be illustrated; and that as many of the prototypes of Masonic and Odd-fellow symbolism would be shown, we extended a respectful invitation to members of those orders to attend. The result was a very large audience, including the Odd-fellow lodge, which adjourned and came over to hear the lecture. Our big tent could not have held the crowd had it not been for the storm that came up and kept many away.

We did the best we could to let the clear light shine! showing that all idolatrous systems were secret and oath-bound; that in all sun-worshiping countries the candidate, in joining these secret institutions, imitated the death and resurrection of a mythical sun god; that the initiation into the Odd-fellow lodge, bringing the candidate face to face with the skeleton, was similar to that in the sun-temple of the Aztec Indians, where the candidate was caused to step over the body of a human sacrifice, quivering in the agonies of death; with this difference: The Aztecs used the skeleton as a symbol while the flesh was still on it, while the Odd-fellows use it after the flesh has been removed.

As a heavy rain storm cut the exercises short, I announced another lecture next evening, which was largely attended by Masons and Odd-fellows, who came, as several told me, "to hear it through." Many purchased the "Stories of the Gods." All went away in a very thoughtful mood, and we hope God will bless the truth to their good; and while we are carrying the war into the field of the enemy we hope friends will remember us in their prayers.

NEW MOVEMENTS IN OHIO.

47 Lincoln St., Columbus, O., Aug. 24, 1888.

Editor Cynosure:—I write to let the friends know I am still alive and at work. Home duties have largely demanded my attention for a time. When I say we have been moving and preparing for housekeeping, only those who have passed this way before will know the work necessary. It seemed that I could be spared from the field better at this time than later in the season.

The campaign is opening and there is a demand for earnest workers everywhere. I trust there will be a strong, earnest, united, coming up to the help of the Lord, on the part of his followers, and that we shall see greater results than ever before attending the labor of this fall and winter. I know this will be the case if all are consecrated to the work as they should be. Ohio is in a better condition for united work than it has been for years. There are more copies of the Cynosure taken, and a more general interest than ever before since my knowledge of the State.

CITY WORK.

The Lutheran church is quite strong here, this being the headquarters of the Ohio Synod. The pastors of these churches have stood right with me from the beginning of my work in this State. When I called a few days ago, all gave their renewals to our paper and expressed approbation of the work done here. Revs. Meas and Rohe have recently preached to their people on the subject. Rev. Rohe has since received anonymous letters threatening him.

THE CENTENNIAL AT COLUMBUS.

From all reports we are about to be flooded with a mass of people coming, not only from this State, but from all parts of the United States. Seventy-five thousand soldiers are reported to have sent in orders for quarters during the soldiers' reunion. Some have estimated that three will not be less than 250,000 people in attendance at the centennial. The programme will speak for itself. It seems about as appropriately arranged as a dog-fight and a prayer meeting. If the dog-fight is popular the prayer meeting is not, and vice versa:

SPECIAL DAYS.

The Coloseum on the Centennial grounds will be occupied as follows:

Sept. 4.—Opening Ceremonies.
" 5.—Welcome to the East, South and West, and responses by Governors.
" 6.—Pioneers of Ohio.
" 7.—Catholic Knights.
" 10.—G. A. R.
" 12.—Old Army Reunions.
" 13.—Grand Army Campfire.
" 14.—Grand Army Sports.
" 17.—Patriotic Order Sons of America.
" 18.—Congregational Church.
" 19.—State Bar Association.
" 20.—Granges and Farmers' Clubs.
" 21.—Knights of Pythias.
" 22.—Emancipation Jubilee.
" 24.—Labor Organizations.
" 25.—Methodist Episcopal Church.
" 26.—Ohio Sunday-School Union.
" 27.—Public Schools.
" 28.—Teachers of Public Schools and State Institutions.
" 29.—Commercial Travelers' Association.
Oct. 2.—Presbyterian Church.
" 3.—Retail Grocers' Association.
" 4.—Band Tournament.
" 5.—A. O. U. Workmen.
" 8.—League of American Wheelmen.
" 10.—Improved Order of Red Men.
" 12.—Woman's Christian Temperance Union
" 16.—Brotherhoods of Engineers and Firemen.
" 19.—Ohio League Republican Clubs.

The God that causes even the wrath of man to praise him can overrule all to his glory. I shall endeavor to represent our work as far as may seem advisable.

THE COLPORTEUR WORK.

FINAL REPORTS

The following is a statement of my work: Time from June 21 to Aug. 18. Visited forty towns, four in Wisconsin, three in Iowa, and thirty-three in Illinois. Canvassed most of the ministers, school-teachers, and such citizens as should be interested in the work. In the latter part of the time we could not see a number of the pastors as they had vacations. With Mr. Park I distributed about 60,000 pages of tracts sent us from the office, giving them away on the cars and streets, also placing them in houses, wagons, etc. I sold a number of I. R. B. Arnold's "Stories of the Gods." In the two months I secured ninety-one orders for the Christian Cynosure and received about ten dollars in donations. Most of the subscriptions were for one year. Some twelve have promised to take the paper commencing with January, 1889. My expenses for the first month were $20.75, for the second $18.50. We found the German and Swedish churches very friendly to our work. A number of the pastors will send for tracts in their own languages. We think a goodly number who did not know of the National Christian Association before will be valuable supporters of it hereafter.

Some would gladly have aided if it were not the election year. In the towns we visited "reform" is on the march, and the music of Prohibition fills the air.

J. W. Fifield.

....We scattered tracts in every town through which we passed, and left samples of N. C. A. literature in most every family. I believe the tracts will do untold good. Everybody reads them. We distributed them in the cars, and put them in buggies and wagons, in public libraries and reading rooms, and took particular pains to hand some of the most interesting ones to those who had charms dangling from their watch chains denoting them to be high Masons.

To me, the prospect for the future in Illinois looks very encouraging. Many only need stirring up to the work to make them take hold of it with heart, voice and pocket-book.

One of the great evils of the present day is the fact that so many minor secret organizations, such as the "Modern Woodman," the "Ancient Foresters," etc., are springing up with surprising rapidity in every city and town. So many of the Christian people and church members join them, even the members of those churches that have raised their voices so decidedly against secretism. The members of these lodges are made up mostly of workingmen who are induced to enter on account of cheap insurance. Thus it is that many who are conscientiously opposed to the greater and more terrible oath-bound secret orders, will not speak against them, because they themselves belong to a secret order.

I am glad to say that the people in many places were so interested in Prohibition that it hindered us from getting a few subscribers for the Cynosure. Many of the "Antis" would have taken the paper had they not done all they could, financially, for Prohibition, which is, indeed, only another branch of Christ's work.

The saloon and lodge are very intimately connected, they both "love darkness rather than light, for their deeds are evil," and they both have curtained windows to hide the wickedness practiced inside.

L. H. Park.

THE WASHINGTON INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 16, 1888.

Dear Cynosure:—Since last I reported through your columns, I have had many things to encourage me in the work here, and of these I wish to speak first.

I am so glad the children are taking such an interest in the little boys and girls which we have been enabled to gather in here to teach and help to a better way of living and thinking. One package of papers came recently from somewhere in Pennsylvania; another package came from the children in Attica, Ind.; still another from Wakeman, Ohio; and while in Alexandria, Va., the other day calling on a friend, two little girls of the household came into the room each with a package of papers they had saved for our school. Again, I say, God bless the children for their loving sympathy and their works.

A letter reached me a few days ago by way of Chicago from Mrs. J. A. Bingham of Ohio with five dollars for our school work, and Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Pratt remembered me by a donation of three dollars, while "a friend" called at the office this week leaving five dollars for the children's work. Thus the Lord through his servants is giving encouragement and I thank him for it; also these kind friends who have so generously given financial aid.

One little girl, on inquiry, I found had no dress or hat suitable for Sunday, so with some of the money sent in, material was bought, and by the help of a Christian lady a dress was made, a hat and collar bought, and on Sunday she was in Sabbath school looking as bright and animated as well could be. One of the boys who was present on Monday, when I asked him why I didn't see him on the Sabbath before, replied, "My pants were not fit to wear to Sabbath-school," and if all he had were those he had on I could readily believe him, poor boy! and yet these are only samples of the many. I tell you, dear readers, that in order to become interested in this work you would only need to be among these children a few hours. My heart goes out toward them, and while I am reaching a few, I realize that there are hundreds, yea, thousands, in this city alone, no better off than these, and whose physical as well as spiritual welfare is sadly neglected.

Then, my dear sisters, as you remember how much patience it takes to teach one or two of the little ones in your own homes to take the first stitch, run the first seam or hem the first hem, then let your imagination roam to the N. C. A. building and glance into the room back of the office, and see there anywhere from ten to twenty children, mostly girls (for the boys soon tire of sewing and drop out), and only one pair of hands to set the needle right, to start each seam; only one pair of eyes to see that all goes well; here a glance to quiet one, there a glance to reprove another; only one pair of ears to catch the many words which come, and only one tongue to correct, instruct, admonish, teach Scripture texts, lead in the singing, and the many other things which come up. Well, the Lord has thus far given me strength, and he has promised to be with me "alway, even unto the end of the world," and I feel from day to day his sustaining power, am convinced more and more that just such work as is being done here needs to be done in all parts of the city.

May the Lord reward all his servants who are taking an interest in this work, and, while you send in your gifts, do not forget to remember me at the throne of grace. Yours in the work,

ANNA E. STODDARD.

THE LOUISIANA FIELD.

DORSEYVILLE, La., Aug. 16, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I left Cheneyville last Thursday, and stopped off at Grossetete Station and preached at the Mt. Olive Baptist church, and came on to Plaquemine Friday evening. A young man accosted me Saturday and wanted to know my reason for writing such an article about the Odd-fellows as I did from Dorseyville in June last. He said they had done all they could for their widows. It is strange to see what a grip these lodges have on a man when once he is in their secret clutches. Poor souls, they are to be prayed for without ceasing. The Odd-fellows had their annual ball in Plaquemine on the 4th of August, which I am informed lasted until Sunday morning; with some Christians in the hall, partakers of those men's sins.

I preached at Pilgrim Rest Baptist church, Plaquemine, Sabbath at 11 A. M., and lectured on Moral Education at 7:30 P. M. at the Macedonia Baptist church. Rev. Hubbs, the pastor, endorsed all I said in the strongest terms, and invited me to return and lecture again. Bro. Wm. H. Ellis, of Pilgrim Rest church, of whom I wrote to the Cynosure July 12, called on me Sunday and we had a pleasant interview on secretism. Bro. Ellis says the church is the proper place for the Christians to resort, but they have failed so long to watch over their poor members that many resort to these orders. I am glad, however, that he acknowledged the uselessness of secrecy.

If my colored brethren will abate their passions long enough to reason together and examine Masonic history for themselves, and see where Mackey and Webb, and other Masonic authors reject our Lord Jesus Christ, they will soon see the evils of lodgery, every one of them. Rev. John Brown of Bayou Goula, pastor of St. Matthew Baptist church, is rebuilding his church. Bro. Brown has left the lodge, and as money is scarce and his people poor, the lodge is trying through some of its members to induce him to come back with the promise of assistance. I say to friends, one or two hundred dollars contributed to Bro. John Brown of Bayou Goula, La., just now would greatly help in building a reform church, as Rev. Brown is a seceded lodgite. You may have some knowledge of his opposition. May God help along this good work.

I am much encouraged in our Southern work, although opposition is strong; but they that are with us are the mightier. Let us rally around the reform flag. The secretists have made many of the poor country people believe that there were only a few perjured fools opposing lodgery, but the Christian Cynosure is changing this sentiment, and they that get it see a great army opposing lodgery.

Bro. Dorsey of St. John's church has given his church a thorough repairing. This is an anti-secret church, out and out, and one of the largest, handsomest and best governed in the State. The church and property are valued at $10,000. So you can see from this how God is blessing the labors of Elder Dorsey in the face of the opposition from the lodge elements. I expect to preach at Bayou Goula tonight.

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SCOTLAND AND MASSACHUSETTS.

The difference between public sentiment in Scotland and the United States may be illustrated by the different treatment of preachers "on the slopes of Castlehill," Dunvon on the Clyde, and those who preached on the people's "Common" in Boston. Both are evidently places for public resort.

The Dunvon paper before us don't seem to like the said preachers any better than the Boston city fathers, but although the rather venomous Scotch editor sneers at "these howling gospelers" and their "crude and croaking religious utterances," the worst punishment that he dares to invoke is that Inspector Fraser or his men should kindly request them to move on, and allow other passers-by to do the same, or to enjoy the music in peace!

But in Boston, "our cradle of liberty," some of our best preachers have been fined for merely reading the Scriptures! and one "gospeler," Wm. F. Davis, now lies in jail, and has done so for months, for the crime of preaching on the people's common! and the people seem to "care for none of these things," although their noble city is thus ruled and disgraced by saloonery, lodgery and popery in its municipal government, ruinous to the freedom for which our fathers bled.

Scotland, however, is behind us on the prohibition question. The same paper tells us that ten o'clock during summer is too soon to shut up the grog shops.

Let Boston be instructed by Dunvon in her duty to preachers on her Common, and let Scotland learn from America a lesson on prohibition. T. H.

FOR THE ABOLITION OF ALL INIQUITY.

DEKALB, Iowa.

While at the U. B. constitutional convention in Missouri last June, Bro. Henry Siemiller showed me where there was once a station on the underground railroad. He lived a half mile or more north of it when a traveling preacher in that State. It was interesting to hear him tell of an old colored lady who was the leader of a flock from bondage. As they neared the station a man in surprise called on the name of the Lord (we should judge) in an irreverent manner. The old auntie heard it, and exclaimed, "Yes, massa, dat's de name we trabel in." She knew they were at the station and pointed out where the Abolition preacher lived, though she had never been there before. Their love for freedom caused the Lord, by an agent, to map out the road on their minds that they need not make mistakes.

Bro. Siemiller helped many to escape, and "does not know" when he was not an Abolitionist. We think his mother must have brought him "up in the way he should go," for he is the same on the secrecy question and works to set men free from lodge bondage. The same spirit that caused a man to be an Abolitionist, if led by it, will cause him to have the grace to be an anti-secrecy man and Prohibitionist. We understand the Freemasons have said of Bro. Siemiller: "He is like an old sheep that butted himself all away but the tail, and that even still butts." "Who is able to make war with the beast?" But lodge men respect him for being what he professes to be, and have more confidence in his prayers than those of the lodge. The editor of his home paper, after reading Burdette on cranks, applied it to him, eulogizing Bro. Siemiller for being a man that will stand firm to convictions of right, and not change as have "liberals." Such men will stand before God after Masonry has fallen. C. SMITH.

PITH AND POINT.

A BLESSING BESOUGHT.

I thank the Lord for raising up men, in his spirit, wisdom, love and power, to reflect the light of life amongst the people through the Cynosure, which I prize very highly, indeed, and for lecturers, faithful, earnest and, I trust, wise to win souls to the truth as it is in the Lord. The blessing of the Lord rest upon you abundantly.—D. HOPKINS, Otselic, N. Y.

TRACT DISTRIBUTION.

I was at the Hutchinson Prohibition convention, and was better pleased than I expected to be, as there was less show of secret society badges than I feared. I distributed tracts, such as "Dead Horses," Moody, Finney and others. They were received kindly, but I learned some time later that there were some who were offended. —JAMES P. THOMAS.

WHAT THE SOUTH NEEDS.

I have derived valuable information from the Christian Cynosure. It is doing more good in breaking down secret orders and advancing the cause of Christ than any other paper read in the South. If your benevolence continues to the colored preachers of the South, I would ask you to send Rev. ——— a copy every week. He is a prominent minister of the Gospel here, and such paper will give him strength and better prepare him to discharge the functions of his high calling.—GEORGE PRIEST, Rich, Miss.

AN AMERICAN PROHIBITIONIST.

The Presbyterian minister here is not a member of any secret society, but takes no stand, as I see, against them. The Methodist minister says he sees nothing wrong in the major secret societies. The Baptist (also the Methodist) minister is a member of the G. A. R. I am not really or fully satisfied with Fisk's position toward secret societies as published in the Cynosure, but may vote for him that I may help the Prohibition list. Certainly I shall not vote any other ticket now in the field. If the Prohibition party has the same God as the American party, I think there are many members of the former who are liable to favor unchristian organizations to the neglect and injury of Prohibition.

A miller at Hillsdale is, I think, successfully holding out against the measures of the "union" for his discharging of their members.—R. D. NICHOLS, Jonesville, Mich.

LITERATURE.

A FORTNIGHT OF FOLLY. By Maurice Thompson. Pp. 140. Price, 50 cents, postage, 8 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

This is a satire. It is also a novel; but of the class of Don Quixote and Gulliver, which men will read so long as they appreciate God-given genius which can effectively use the weapons of ridicule to overthrow great abuses. Such a work will be some time directed against the lodge, and it will find a legitimate field, and may have the success of the great work of Cervantes. But Mr. Thompson is neither Swift nor Cervantes, and he seems not to be altogether at home in this style of literature, as his plot is rather heavy and his characters do not always move easily. But the story is quite subordinate. The caricature of reporters, publishers, historians, poets, novelists, whom he shuts away from the world for a time together, like an untamed Barnum's happy family, is excellent, and will be hugely enjoyed by the reading public as well as the people whose eccentricities are made the sport of an hour. In his descriptions of nature Mr. Thompson is more himself, and the volume contains some fine passages which will be reread with increasing pleasure.

ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA of Knowledge and Language has reached the seventh volume, which includes titles from "John Calvin," the theologian, to "Cervennes," the principal mountain chain in the south of France. Between these there are over 600 pages, including considerably over 100 illustrations, devoted to topics in every department of human knowledge. It is an ordinary Cyclopedia of Universal Knowledge, and an Unabridged Dictionary of Language in one, the editorial work being in skillful hands, the mechanical work, paper, printing and binding, all that one can reasonably wish, the form convenient beyond all precedent in works of reference, and the cost so trivial as to astonish ordinary purchasers of such works.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH. By C. A. S. Temple, Reading, Mass. Pp. 52.

A number of articles on this general topic have appeared in the Cynosure during the past few years from Mr. Temple's pen. They are collated and reprinted here in convenient form, and we join in the recommendation of Miss Flagg below:

I have been interested in looking at "Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church," by C. A. S. Temple, of Reading, a name familiar to all Cynosure readers. No one can peruse this little pamphlet intelligently and thoughtfully, and not see that our churches are on that down grade which begins so almost imperceptibly, but ends in a gulf of empty formalism and vain observances, which, if not Rome itself, is as good a training school for it as even a Jesuit could desire. Our pastors who ought to be the first to sound the note of warning are "dumb dogs," who follow rather than lead their people. Perhaps few church members know the heathen origin of Easter, Lent, etc., just as few Masons know that Masonry is only Baal worship modernized; but this does not alter the natural law that what has its source in Paganism will inevitably tend toward Paganism—a civilized kind, perhaps, but still, Paganism. I am glad our city pulpits are awake to the imminent danger which threatens our public schools, but they are strangely deaf and blind to the danger no less imminent, if less palpable, that threatens our Protestant churches. Rome makes many converts in England, few in Scotland. In the latter country Presbyterianism, with its ritual simple to bareness, stands like a breakwater against her encroachments; while in the former Episcopalianism, with its vestments and saints' days, are a continual temptation to many a devout but weak soul to go a little farther, until it ends by drinking the Romish harlot's cup of enchantment to the dregs.

Literature, Alden's weekly illustrated magazine, New York, has given its readers of late a charming acquaintance with such popular authors as Augusta J. Evans, Celia Thaxter, Lillie B. Chase Wyman, and even old Homer wrote not so long ago as to be forgotten.

The Anti-Tobacco Crusader is published monthly by H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill, Boston, at 25 cents per year. The courageous reformer, George Trask, whose fame as an anti-tobacconist was world-wide, dying, left his work to Bro. Hastings. Tracts and publications should everywhere be circulated widely against this national evil.

The September number of the Missionary Review is earliest before its readers, and there are few magazines that the world could so ill afford to spare. Dr. Pierson, who is remaining in Great Britain to labor for the cause nearest his heart, writes a second editorial letter on the late great Centenary Conference of Missions in London. The great lesson impressed by that meeting was, "The whole world must now be taken possession of and occupied for Christ." One of the papers at that conference, on "The Training of Women," was by Henry Grattan Guinness. It reappears in full. "The Work among the Fiji Islands," another important paper, follows; as does Dr. Pierson's paper on "Home Work for Foreign Missions." Dr. Cust's remarkable account of the Moravian Missions is continued in this number. At the London Conference a popular meeting of extraordinary character was held for the purpose of giving public expression to the indignant feeling of the conference against three great evils controlled by the British government: the opium trade, the drink traffic, and licensed prostitution in India. The correspondence and reports from missions and missionary societies is also full and valuable.

LODGE NOTES.

Chicago has 45,000 children in her Romish parochial schools, and has 207 Romish churches—the largest number of any city in the country—nineteen more than New York.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers met at Detroit Friday to celebrate the twenty fifth anniversary of their organization. Over 2,000 members were present, including Grand Chief Arthur and W. R. Robinson, of Vincennes, Ind., the first chief of the order and originator of the brotherhood idea.

The seventh annual encampment of the Sons of Veterans has just been held in Wheeling, W. Va. The report of Adjt.-Gen. Post showed 66,612 members now in good standing, an increase of 12,000 during the last year. The Ladies' Aid Society also held a national convention, and about fifty delegates were in attendance.

The New York Witness says of Mr. Crooks of New Jersey, who has gone back to the G. O. P., that it had never heard of him before, although he is a prominent Good Templar; but when he says he is satisfied with the raise of license in his State from $50 to $250, it wonders how he ever called himself a Prohibitionist.

The Jesuits seem to have fallen into difficulties in Canada. Bishop Lafleche, Three Rivers, Quebec, has signed, it is reported, an order suspending the Jesuits under his jurisdiction from religious ministrations. This step was taken after an investigation, which went to show that many Catholics were being influenced on their death-beds to change their wills in favor of the Jesuits, whose families were becoming disaffected toward the church from this cause, and hence the bishop's interference.

The strike of the brick-layers in the twenty-one yards located on the north side of Chicago is over. Several weeks ago 1,400 union men, owing to dissatisfaction with the wages paid and the employment by some of the yards of non-union workmen, went out on a strike. The union had about $16,000 in the treasury at that time, all but $7,000 of which has been expended in support of the strikers. Union men were required to pay twenty-five cents a day of their wages into the treasury. They tired of this and refused longer to support their brothers in idleness. As a result all but 500 of the strikers have returned to work at whatever wages they could get, and the others are willing to accept the same terms, but at present there are no places for them.

The report comes from Crawford county, Indiana, that the "White Caps" have held a meeting near Marietta, and decided to disband. The trip of Attorney-General Michener to that section last week was the cause of this, as they fear arrest and prosecution. Crawford county is the home of the "White Caps," and has been the headquarters for their operations.

The interference of the State authorities in Crawford county has caused the "White Caps" to remain very quiet. Attorney-General Michener's investigation disclosed a fearful state of lawlessness and cruelty on the part of the regulators. Gov. Gray has been asked to use the power of the State in crushing out this organization, and will probably soon take active measures.

A dispatch from English, Ind., says: The "White Caps" now propose to purify the ballot box, and are turning their attention in that direction. They have already issued their pronunciamento for the coming fall election, and decided just what they propose to do. At a very unseasonable hour, not long since, they called in a body on the editor of the English News, a weekly paper they regard as their organ. By threats the editor is kept in line, and publishes what they ask of him. They obliged him to publish a long notice in which they declare that there shall be no bribery or corruption at elections, and threaten a hundred lashes to any one found going counter to their wishes.

"Woman! be fair, we must adore thee;
Smile, and a world is weak before thee!"

But how can a woman smile when she is suffering untold misery from complaints from which we men are exempt? The answer is easy. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is an infallible remedy in all cases of "female weakness," morning sickness, disorders of the stomach, nervous prostration, and similar maladies. As a powerful invigorating tonic it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. As a soothing and strengthening nervine it subdues nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms, and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency. Sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, to give satisfaction.

Scrofula, in the blood, corrupts and contaminates every tissue and fiber in the whole body; but whether appearing in the form of swellings, erysipelas, or running sores, the malignant poisons of this disease are completely eradicated by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"The gods give no great good without labor," is an old proverb, and a true one; the hardest labor is not always that which is best paid, however. To those in search of light, pleasant and profitable employment, we say write to B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 30, 1888.

CAMPAIGN OFFER.

The Cynosure is offered during the Campaign for only ten cents. For the particulars please read the publisher's notice on page 13. The particular value of this paper during the next ten weeks to voters will be the response of candidates on the question of the lodge. Already the Presidential nominees of the Prohibition, Republican, and Equal Rights parties have responded to the desire of their supporters, also two candidates for Vice President and numerous State nominees. These replies are of greatest importance to American voters. We propose to make every number of the paper worth, to even an indifferent person, the price for the campaign, and to interested parties ten times that sum.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Saxton's River, Aug. 21, 1888.

Dear Cynosure Readers:—We are back from Guilford Center and the beautiful town of Brattleboro. I spoke all day (Sabbath) in the town hall, and Bro. Leach spoke twice in the Congregational church in West Brattleboro, and opened my meeting with an impromptu speech at night. They informed us that there are thirty secret societies in Brattleboro for 3,000 people! Good Deacon Jacob Estey (Baptist), has the principal industry of Brattleboro. He is the Obadiah of this idolatrous city and State. Without early advantages he is the ablest business man in the place. His son-in-law is Lieutenant-Governor, with a prospect of further rise in politics, and his son has a militia title. When last May, the fiftieth anniversary of his marriage came, two thousand people, old and young, rich and poor, gathered to testify their respects to his house. Would you think this good man, whose benevolence has rained on a good part of the United States, is a Freemason? I was warned that it would do no good to see him, but I went, all the same. I said:

"Deacon Estey, have you, or will you take time to read tracts against the lodge?"

"I have not been nigh them for forty years," he replied, somewhat gruffly.

"All right," said I. "Here is a speech I delivered in Washington, D. C., which Joseph Cook pronounced the ablest he had ever seen on the subject; will you read it?"

"Yes," in a somewhat altered tone.

"And," I continued, "will you give this tract containing the opinions of Northern statesmen on the lodge, with my respects, to your son, Col. Estey?"

"Yes," he answered; and so, after a brief business talk, I left Deacon Jacob Estey, to meet him in heaven, where there are no secret societies, for Christ "in secret said nothing."

This Deacon Estey has fed the Lord's prophets by fifties (See 1 Kings 18: 13), and yet, years ago, submitted to the degradation of the hood-wink and halter. When his son was drawn by Satan's emissaries who make Masonry their trade, he tried his level best to keep that son from joining the lodge! Oh, if he had had any but a "dumb-dog" for a pastor, he would ere this have given his great influence to save Brattleboro from organized deism, and modern idolatry.

We are through the clouds and now come into sun-light.

Mr. C. P. Potter of Guilford Center and Mr. Wood of Brattleboro are farmers, upright, clear-minded men who have stood here like Whitefield,

> "And bore the pelting scorn of half an age."

Mr. Potter lives on hills which seem to look down on the awful Monadnock. I have seen fair pictures amid these

> "Hills of unfading green, whose summits proud > Whisper the things of earth unto the sky,"

but never on this round globe have I seen such views as are had from the front door of his dwelling. Both he and Mr. Woods have holy women inside, who keep their houses in exquisite taste; and our stay there has been like that of Bunyan's Pilgrims in "The Delectable Mountains."

Mr. Potter and his son Charles got up these Brattleboro meetings, Mr. Woods standing firmly by them. They hired and lighted the wide and long town hall, and paid and collected twenty dollars toward our expenses, Mrs. General Phelps being a contributor. Mr. Potter was a Methodist, and Mr. Woods a Baptist, but both have shrunk from communing with those who worship devils in the lodges. Both, with their persons and means, stand firm by "the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth," (1 Tim. 3: 15), and God stands by them.

Our meetings there were all that could be expected in a town ruled by thirty dens of anti-Christ. The Congregational church, as did the respectable people in Jerusalem when Christ was on trial "in the hour and power of darkness"—stayed away. The lodges had ample time and notice to plan and execute their coward's policy of "Stay away and keep away," and though they succeeded in dwarfing our audiences, there was neither brag nor bravado; and the people of the town looked thoughtful and respectful. When the ministry are shamed out of their non-committalism in morals, Brattleboro will be openly for Christ against his contemners. Rev. Mr. Leach, his father, and grandfather are known throughout this county; and he is urged to visit West Brattleboro again.

In the morning I said in opening: "When I left this, my native State, Vermont, Rhode Island and Massachusetts, each had laws prohibiting and punishing the imposition of Masonic oaths, and that after full, free, open discussion. The lodge has come back on the refluent wrongs of our slavery war, which was hatched in Southern lodge-rooms. Our Vermont soldiers were drawn into these man-traps of Satan by offer of getting favors from Masonic rebels. But they have neither answered an argument, nor disputed one fact on which New England legislatures made Masonry a crime. Vermont was right then, and by God's help she will be right again."

This plain truth, of course, was stunning to those who have gained civil office by the sneaking secret help of the lodges. But there are thousands of good men who have been wheedled into the lodges here, who will come out as soon as their coverings are torn off, and their utter hostility to every American principle is shown. God is speeding the day.

LOUISIANA BARBARISM.

There is much to humble the pride of our nation, and perhaps no section can greatly boast over another. The crimes of the White Caps in Indiana, the Bald Knobbers of Missouri, and bloody border feuds of Kentucky were surely bad enough. But it is quite evident in each of these cases they were condemned by public sentiment, and that both the State and municipal authorities are earnest in their efforts at suppression. We could wish this were true of the late outbreak in Southern Louisiana, where ten Negroes and one white man have been killed and many wounded.

From the various reports we gather that this appeal to mob violence was occasioned by the fear of miscegenation. One white woman was found living with a colored man. An effort was made to lynch him, and he with other Negroes armed themselves for protection. One or two hundred white men armed themselves and demanded that the Negroes lay down their arms and submit. The result was a conflict with the results as stated.

The remarkable and shameful fact about the whole matter is, that miscegenation has been going on in Louisiana for more than a century without resistance, and almost without rebuke. White men of wealth and high social standing have and do make it a practice to live with colored women, either with or without marriage, and their children constitute a large per centage of the people of that entire region. In the colored schools of New Orleans it is common to find those in whom not a trace of Negro blood is visible, and who are classed as Negroes simply because their remote maternal ancestors were of African descent. This abominable practice, if not approved is at least winked at, and no legal or illegal violence is ever executed or threatened unless a Negro, or one of African descent, proposes to marry a white woman. It is not concubinage nor miscegenation that is dreaded. It is a recognition of the Equal Rights of the Negro. The battle will have to be fought out on this issue, not, we trust, with implements of death, but before the bar of an enlightened public opinion. Louisiana must stand condemned as disloyal to the moral sense of mankind as well as the Constitution and laws of the United States, until her people reform their morals and manners, and her authorities execute the laws with an impartial hand.

—Prof. H. A. Fischer, of the N. C. A. Board, proved himself a champion of national prohibition of no mean capacity last Friday evening in debate with Mr. N. E. Gary, of the law firm of Gary Bros., of this city. Mr. Gary spoke for the Republicans, in the discussion of two hours and a half in the College Chapel, Wheaton, before a large audience. His argument was in the main courteous and ably written, but when conclusions were summed up the better side was most ably maintained. Wheaton people vote this an attractive campaign.

THE FREE PRESS AND THE AMERICAN.

It is with unalloyed pleasure that the Cynosure greets the Birmingham Free Press under its new management. The removal of Rev. Geo. Warrington left the paper in a strait, for an editor of convictions against the lodge, and ability to maintain them, is not found every day. But a good Providence provided a man in Mr. William L. Enlow, a Wheaton graduate of 1888, who becomes editor and business manager, and makes his bow with manly good sense in the number for August 22. Bro. Enlow is a young man of sterling qualities, thorough devotion, agreeable manners, and imperturable good nature, but with no back down in his constitution when principles are at stake. May God bless him and make him a blessing to Iowa. But this satisfactory arrangement in Iowa seems overbalanced by the withdrawal of Rev. E. D. Bailey, of the American, in Washington, which he announces in the last issue. Multiplied and arduous labors in Government employ, mission and temperance work, supplying city pulpits and editorial duties, constrain him to drop a part of them, and the American Publishing Company is notified of his resignation. It must be regretted that the first meeting for years is called to consider so perplexing a question. Since Bro. Johnston, the assistant editor, also withdraws, the loss becomes a disaster to the American, as no previous notice has been given to the directors of the Company, and the paper must stop for the time being. We hope Senator Pomeroy, who is, we believe, chairman of the directors, will be able to act promptly and wisely; and Secretary and Mrs. Stoddard who are related as stockholders or otherwise will give their best advice and assistance.

HOW STAND YOUR CANDIDATES?

NOTES OF THE ANTI SECRECY LEAGUE.

The Democratic candidate for Governor of Illinois, Gen. John M. Palmer, writes a letter that will be widely read, and deserves a more extended comment than is contemplated in the printing of these letters. He says:

> I recognize the right of every citizen to inquire into the relations and opinions of candidates for public office, upon all subjects that can be deemed by any person of public interest. I conceive your League to have such claims upon me, and I feel it to be my duty to respond frankly to the questions propounded to me. I am a member of a lodge of Freemasons, and have been for thirty years. I have retained my membership in that organization under a belief, which I think is justified by experience, that my obligations do not interfere with any of my duties as a civil officer, nor that they bind me, or even incline me, to be partial to any person or class of persons whatever.
> I have filled many offices, civil and military, since my connection with Masonry commenced, and have been brought in official contact with all classes of my fellow citizens of this and other States, and I have never been conscious at any time that I was, in the slighest degree, influenced in my official relations or conduct by any considerations growing out of my relation to the society to which I have referred. I have regarded Freemasonry in the light of a purely benevolent organization, necessary in earlier periods, before the charities of the Christian world were so completely organized and made effective, for the relief of the unfortunate as they now are. My present belief is, that with the progress of organized Christian civilization, all such associations will become unnecessary, and probably cease to exist.
> I think my respect for the claims of truth and justice and humanity are paramount to all other obligations.
> Very respectfully, John M. Palmer.

If the argument on the lodge were only a matter of opinion ex-Gov. Palmer's letter might be offset by those below; and if any yet inclined to his view, the opinions of a number of eminent Americans given on page 15 of this issue would certainly be overwhelming. But why do the greatest Americans object to the lodge? Their reasons should be manifest to every man of Gen. Palmer's experience in public life, even had he not been within the tyled door. Aside from any consideration of religion, it must be true that the association of men of whatever class, under pledges of secrecy, is in itself an act contrary to the spirit of American institutions; that such oaths as are administered in a Masonic lodge are as much more demoralizing than ordinary street swearing, as the formality and mock solemnity of their administration is greater; that they of necessity place every one who is bound by them under such obligations to vicious men as he would never think of assuming voluntarily; and that many public men submit to the degrading initiation for the sole purpose of political success. It is a great satisfaction to note that even with his favorable view of the order General Palmer believes the system of lodgery to be in a state of decay, and soon to be superseded. If the profession of benevolence were its only end, we would share his view with pleasure.

Let us turn to the letter of Hon. Hiram Camp, of the New Haven Clock Company, president of the Board of Mr. Moody's Mt. Hermon School for Boys at Northfield, Mass., and Prohibition candidate for Governor of Connecticut:

In answer to your question I have to say that I have n othing to do with secret societies. I do not believe in them. The Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ and the church of our God is sufficient for all the wants of men, —a free salvation; life here and life hereafter; and a plenty of work for us all to try and persuade men to accept it now, at once. I send some pamphlets that I prepared for Mr. Moody's Mt. Hermon Boys' School at Northfield, of which I am president. HIRAM CAMP.

Let Connecticut reformers thank God for such a leader, and redouble their efforts for his election.

Last week the manly, American and Christian letter of the West Virginia Prohibition candidate for Governor, Mr. Carskadon, was printed. Worthy of a place by him on the same ticket we judge the nominee for Attorney General, Mr. Myers, of Mason, West Va., to be, as he writes:

I never belonged to any secret organization in my life. I have always been of the belief that the tendency of secret societies was to cultivate a narrow charity among those who belonged to them. I am also satisfied that bad and designing men often connect themselves with secret societies with a view to carry out some selfish scheme. I have long been convinced that through the agency of secret societies bad and incompetent men have not only been nominated, but also elected to responsible offices. I regard them as affording very great facilities in defeating the ends of justice, both in the selection of the best and most competent men to fill the various offices, and in the proper execution of our laws. I know of two cases of felony where strong efforts are being made, by those known to be members of the same secret order with the parties charged (and are properly so charged) with the felonies, to clear them from the penalties of the law.

From my own observation and experience in the practice of law for over thirty years, I am convinced that the due administration of justice has often been defeated through the influence of men who have used their secret societies for that purpose. I don't believe in encouraging any secret orders, or combination of men which is capable of abuse in the hands of unprincipled men. For bad men will always work their way into such combinations and soon control them. It will not be disputed by any candid, intelligent person that many criminals have been shielded, and their crimes concealed through the agency of secret societies, because of the fact that the criminals belonged to the secret combination.

These are a few of my objections, among many others, to secret societies. I am opposed to saloons, the devil, and secret societies. JOHN U. MYERS.

If the Prohibitionists had not, in a few instances, nominated men of different principles from these, their universal success would make heaven rejoice. May God grant that these exceptions may in the future be examples to deter and not to follow.

—Elder J. L. Barlow was in Chicago last week for a day or two to put in circulation the first edition of his new book, "Endless Being." The publication has been somewhat delayed on account of the severe illness of Mr. Revell, the Farwell Hall publisher. The mechanical part of the work is well done, the price (75c) is reasonable, and the subject discussed is of great importance to the church. We promise some review of the argument by which Elder Barlow overthrows the theory of the annihilation of the wicked dead at an early day. The Baptist ministers of this city regard it conclusive. The book can be had at this office; or of F. H. Revell, 150 Madison St.; or of Elder J. L. Barlow, Bloomington, Wisconsin.

—Dr. J. E. Roy, to whom as trustee Mr. Carpenter left $2,000 to use against the lodge among the colored people, has prepared for circulation among them a sketch of their benefactor's life and labors, and will supplement it with a tract containing his written testimony against the orders. Dr. Roy has also engaged Bro. I. R B. Arnold to go South with his illustrated lectures. A boat has been purchased and the "Arnold expedition" is now anchored off Moline, to give the people of that place, Rock Island and Davenport the full benefit of the sun-worship lectures. May it be to the lodges of the three cities and all along the route, all that the "Invincible Armada" threatened to England. The expense of this expedition is borne in part by the Carpenter bequest. It will occupy six or seven months.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. A. J. Chittenden, of the N. C. A. Board, has been nominated for the State Senate by the representatives of one of the labor parties in Kane and DuPage counties, Ill., and he is recommended also to the Prohibition convention soon to meet at Elgin.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman returned from Oberlin and was in Chicago last week. An attack of sickness, sudden and severe, took him from his work a day or two. It was renewed at Wheaton, where he spent the Sabbath, and yet remains as we go to press in the good care of friends.

—Rev. Byron Gunner, of the New Iberia Institute, left Chicago for Cleveland last week, from whence he will return South. He was cheered lately by letters from his church, which indicate a deep revival spirit among the people. The Presbyterian church of Wenona, Ill., has placed Howe Institute upon its list for an annual contribution, and an excellent and devoted young lady, one of the most beloved of the congregation, has voluntarily offered herself as a teacher in the institute.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard returned last week Monday from Cambridge, Ill., where the last of his eight summer meetings was held the evening before. Of a portion of these meetings he has written for our readers. Each was continued six days, three meetings each day, and often a fourth on the street, making in all over 150. His health was never better, and his weariness is but little compared to the amount of work done in the heat of summer. He is now preparing for the opening of the fall term of the College next Tuesday.

—Bro. M. A. Gault writes that in company with Bro. Wm. Morrow and B. F. Worrell, he spoke on Prohibition at Glenwood and Bloom last week. He also lectured at Crete. The meetings were all of unusual interest. At Glenwood they had to speak from the platform of a store, the audience standing in the moonlight under the eye of God and the pitying angels, because the school building, the only available audience room in the place, was locked against them by Republican directors. Bro. Gault says the Republican intolerance of this campaign is worse than any since the anti-slavery days.

—We learn with great regret that Rev. C. W. Hiatt of Columbus, Ohio, Treasurer of the State Christian Association, has been severely injured near San Diego, California, where Mrs. Hiatt has been spending a few months with her parents. While returning from a camping excursion a powder-flask was somehow exploded, throwing his companion, Mr. Johnson, out of the wagon and stampeding the team. Bro. Hiatt's limbs were filled with shot, and his hands badly burned and severely lacerated in stopping the runaway team. Mr. Johnson was also severely burned. We hope more complete intelligence will show that the injuries of both will prove less serious than at first feared.

THE KNOW-NOTHING FRAUD IN WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22, 1888.

A party calling itself "American," met here last week, and after considerable discussion nominated James Langdon Curtis of New York for President, and James R. Greer of Tennessee for Vice President.

There were 126 delegates enrolled, sixty-seven being from New York, sixteen from California, and the remainder scattering. New York and New Jersey "pulled together," and thereby had a majority vote and were bound to have things all their own way in the convention. This gave umbrage to the others, particularly to the California delegates, who insisted that they had come three thousand miles to attend a national convention, and not a convention of New York State or city. The feeling ran high, and often the language used was more forcible than elegant. California wanted Hewitt of New York for President, but New York and New Jersey felt that they were in the saddle and refused to yield a point. Recess after recess was taken for conference, but all to no avail, and the farce ended in a split, and what seemed to be a bitter feeling all around.

The appearance of this convention was anything but attractive to a sober-minded citizen, not to say a Christian. The foreign element very largely predominated, and the free and easy smoke and swagger of the bar-room found little restraint under the rules of this deliberative body. In a "crisis" somebody cried, "I move we adjourn until 7:30 o'clock this evening." The motion carried and the crowd rushed down the stairs. I followed on in time to count eleven persons, wearing delegate badges, going into the nearest saloon. I thought, no wonder you cannot agree; but remembered that reports from the conventions of the two great parties was of a condition little, if any, better.

The name "American" is a libel on the fact, and the conduct of the delegates more befitting an infidel club of foreigners than a deliberative body to nominate a man for the highest position in our Republic. J. P. STODDARD.

THE NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT HEADQUARTERS.

The sums received since last report for reform work in New Orleans are as follows:

Cash:
Rev. Geo. Clark	$ 5.00
Mrs. Dr. Bingham	5.00
Luther Clapp	5.00
Jos Adams	1.00
J N. Gardner	1.00
Previously reported	52.50
Total cash	$69.50
Pledges:
L. C. White	$ 1.00
T. Hudson	10.00
Previous pledges	355.00
Total	$435.50

It is a matter of much importance that the amount, $1,000, should be secured by October 1st. The earnest attention of the friends of the reform is called to this question. A great and effectual door is open in that city and the Southwest. Let us occupy the ground while we may. Money or pledges may be sent to W. I. Phillips, Treasurer of the N. C. A., at the Cynosure office. H. H. HINMAN.

Among the books excluded from the American common schools is the English Bible, and it may be interesting for Americans to read the opinion of Signor Sonzogno, of Milan, who announces that he is about to issue a popular edition of the Bible in half-penny numbers. Signor Sonzogno has not undertaken this work in the interests of religion, nor simply out of hostility to the church, but as a commercial speculation. In announcing his enterprise, he says: "There is one book which gathers up the poetry and the science of humanity, and that book is the Bible, and with this book no other book in any literature can be compared. It is a book that Newton read continually, that Cromwell carried at his saddle, and that Voltaire kept always on his study table. It is a book that believers and unbelievers should alike study, and that ought to be found in every house. The text will be that of Martini, translated from the Vulgate, and care will be taken to insure accuracy." And this is the book which, in an incomparable translation, was brought to America by its early settlers, which was read and studied by the founders of the Republic for wisdom in regard to the conduct of all affairs, public and private; which inspired the patriotism of our fathers, and enriched the eloquence of our statesmen, orators and teachers, and which is banished from our public schools.—America (Chicago).

Masons are very fond of referring to Washington as having been a great Mason, and on August 6th a large number made a pilgrimage to his tomb at Mout Vernon to celebrate the one hundred and thirty-fifth anniversary of his receiving the degree of Mastor Mason. We are opposed to Masonry because we believe it to be contrary to the spirit of Christianity, pernicious in its influence on the public conscience, despotic, and often unrighteously affecting the course of justice. And it is strange that Masons, if they desire to be honest, continue to parade the name of Washington to bolster up their order when they must know that he practically abandoned Masonry while he was still in the prime of life. We say that Masons know this; the thing is so well known on all hands in fact that the Masons would fain make a virtue of necessity, and so, while owning it, pass it over lightly as possible. On the very occasion of which we write, the anniversary at Mount Vernon, the orator used these words:

"During the latter years of his life, his attendance on the lodge was not frequent, and in 1798 he wrote to Rev. G. W. Snyder, of Frederick, Md., and desired to correct 'an error which you have run into of my presiding over the English lodges in this country. The fact is I preside over none, nor have I been in one more than once or twice within the last thirty years.'"

In Washington's day, the evils of the lodge system were not so notorious as now, and yet, even then, with his clear mind, Washington realized that the lodge, while not demanding his open opposition, was at least not worthy of his time or support.—Christian Nation.

THE HOME.

OVER THE HILLS IS HOME.

I sit by my quiet window,
As the Sabbath day sun goes down,
And my eyes look past the city
To a line of hilltops brown,

Far in the distance, rimming
The border of earth and skies;
And I love to whisper to fancy:
"Beyond them the old home lies;

"There, just a trifle hidden,
The meadows and sun-slopes sleep;
In and out, through the locusts
And fruit-trees, the warm winds creep;

"Buds are swelling, and robins
Hunt for the last year's nest;
Bees fly home from the wood-banks,
And crocuses spring, new-dressed;

"A fire on the hearth glows, dreamy,
And father and mother wait—
They listen for my returning;
They wonder that I am late."

Tenderest dream I cherish,
Whithersoe'er I roam,
Just out of sight are my dear ones—
Over the hills is home! —Selected.

"WHAT WAS LOST WAS FOUND."

A TRUE STORY.

On the very verge of a bank overlooking a little stream in Ohio is perched a diminutive frame house. Seen in front, it is an ordinary cottage; looked at from the rear, its height is more than doubled by the appearance of a lower story which, apparently, is hewn from the solid rock of the hill. Nature gave the foundation of the dwelling, and a rather primitive art has supplied the rest. Even the acre of ground attached has been wrested by hard toil from the wilderness. The stones that covered it of old now form terraces and walls; while ragweed and purslane have given way long since to vegetables or flowers, fruit trees and vines. Order and simplicity, in fine, characterize the little place.

Here dwells an old couple whose lives have known as great vicissitude as the spot of ground that supports their home. In common, they have a "history," while Uncle Denning possesses the additional distinction of an "ancestry"—fact always noteworthy, whether that ancestry be villainous or grand. And many of us are proud of our pedigree, with less reason to justify our pride than Uncle Denning could claim. His father had been a native African chief, kidnapped to this country, and sold as a slave. Certain kingly characteristics remained with him, however, in his fallen estate, and procured him better treatment than other slaves experienced. He was intractable, fierce, and possessed of immense strength. His first master struck him once; but none ever repeated the blow, with such savage and instant violence was it resented. His features were Indian rather than Negro, a characteristic transmitted to his son. After a long captivity this caged panther breathed his last in the service he detested. An ancestor certainly to be proud of!

As for Aunt Ellen, who must have been quite pretty in her earlier days, she had no ancestry to speak of, and was born, as she likes to relate, "in ole F'ginny, an' lived dar, mos'ly, till ole Marster ran away. He truly did, chile—'twasn't we run off! The Union men came nigh an' nigher, an' at last ole Marster was took wid a scare, an' went away quick to the other side of the river, to the rebels. Think of dat. No, no, chile; it wasn't we run off!"

Uncle Denning and Aunt Ellen, who were servants on adjoining plantations, very naturally fell in love, soon married, and in the course of a long and fairly happy life became the parents of eighteen children. Some of these children died young; others were lost more cruelly, six being sold at one time, without an hour's warning. This happened about five years before our civil war broke out. The father was away; the poor mother ran frantically up and down the long piazza, imploring help from first one, then another, and finally, in a burst of wild supplication, appealing to the master himself. She trembles now as she speaks of the long-past tragedy, recalling how, at her appeal, "ole Marster seemed to clean let go of hisself—he was dat mad. He shook his fist at me, an' he say, 'Hang you, no! You can't go a piece wid 'em, an' you can't keep one of de six. You jist shut up dis minute. Ef I hear 'nother word, or see you bawlin', I'll give you a hundred lashes. Hang you! I will.' Den Missus—she was allays kind—she put her arms about me an' she say, 'Hush, Ellen! hush, my pore soul! Come away wid me.' She took me off to her room, out of sight, an' dar I cried my cry in her arms."

Of Uncle Denning's escape with his family to the Union lines—an escape facilitated by this same kind mistress and her son—of the recovery, one by one, of several children that had been sold, nothing can be told here. We will pass instead to the crowning incident of these checkered lives—the climax in their long drama of lost and found.

Of the six "lost" children, Richard was eleven at the time of his sale. From the day he was led down the road into another slavery, until two years ago, his parents heard of him but once. This was early in the war, when, after a battle, his name appeared as one of the missing. Uncle Denning made such inquiry as he could, but to no purpose, and Richard, in his mind, was as one of the dead.

In reality, however, he was following his master's fortunes until he could effect his escape to the Union camp. He then became body servant to an officer, and accompanied him after the war to his Eastern home; and being a bright lad was much made of. In time he went to England with him, then to France, then to Italy, where some effort was made to educate him for the Roman Catholic priesthood, that he might become a missionary among his own people. Inborn Methodism was too strong, however, to be conquered by any accident of training, and he returned to America to preach the Gospel after good old Methodist fashion. He married; but his wife and children died. Being now alone in the world, as he supposed—all inquiries for his parents having failed of result—he changed his name. An aged colored woman, also alone in the world, had a tiny property, but no one to care for her old age. She therefore adopted the young minister, and soon dying, left him her small savings. The Rev. Richard Denning was now the Rev. Richard Pond—a change of identity which had an amusing result.

In the fall of 1884 Uncle Denning was one day called by business to a large town some ten miles from home. As he sat waiting in the railroad station he noticed a colored man, near by, who was closely examining him. By mutual impulse they approached each other, got into conversation, and finally exchanged names. The stranger knew at once that Uncle Denning must be his father; but the name of Richard Pond bore no particular meaning to Uncle Denning; and the child of eleven, even if he had not been supposed dead, was lost in the full-grown man. So they chatted until the stranger's train was in and he must leave for his appointment. But before parting Uncle Denning invited his newly-made acquaintance to visit him, and the invitation was accepted, the stranger saying that he thought he could tell him something about the children yet unfound.

About a week after this curious meeting, the son, who seemed to control his emotions admirably, appeared, according to promise. It was almost evening when he reached the house, and Aunt Ellen had just got back from a day's work with a family near by. Up to this point, when visitors inquire, Uncle Denning tells the story, Aunt Ellen, meanwhile, sitting mute beside him; but no sooner does he say, "'Bout evening, one night, I see that stranger at the gate"—no sooner does he say this than Aunt Ellen lays a warning finger on his knee, and says: "Stop right dar now, Denning. Dat's nuff. Now's my turn."

And now you imagine for a little while that you are in the low and dusky kitchen, with the firelight now and then throwing a red gleam on the rough stone walls. Uncle Denning, drawn back into the shadow, sits mute now in his turn; and Aunt Ellen is speaking in her curiously hushed yet eager voice.

"When I went up to de front do' to see what dat noise was, dar was Denning and a stranger man sitting in de po'ch. I was tired out with my work, and my patience mos' gone, too. Dar now, I say to myself, dar's anoder person come round fer his lodgin' a imposin' on us 'cause we's too good-natur'd. I was pretty short with 'im; but law! he didn't seem to mind dat nohow—he had so much 'surance an' he acted right's if he b'longed here. Pretty soon he say, 'Let's go into de house whar' we can talk to our ease, mo'; an' I'm tol'able hungry, p'r'aps you'll give me sumffin' to eat.'

"My land! I say to myself, yo' tink a heap of yo'self, yo' do! Well, I say, I've been done gone away all day, an' Denning he's been keeping bach's hall, an' I dunno if dar's anything in de cup-board or not. 'Den I wish you'd see,' he say. My land! I thinks to myself again, and was morn'n in two minds 'bout doing it. Howsoeber, I tuk my ole bones down the stair, at las', an' got up a tol'able supper.

"'Yo'r supper's ready,' I shouts up de stair. Den de men-folks come down, an' dis stranger, he jes' put into de victuals. Gobble, gobble, he went; an' ask'd fer dis thing an' toder thing as ef de whole was his'n. I was pretty well riled, I tell you, to see him so ramagious, an' at las' I says: You'd better get done eatin', sometime, an' tell us about chillun matters, ef you know anything 'bout 'em; but I don't b'lieve yo' do.' 'Well, I do,' say he. 'I can tell yo' every thing 'bout yo' chillun.'

"'Go 'long, now,' I say. 'Dar's a many said dey knew 'bout de chillun, an' [illegible]ttah all dey didn't. I don't b'lieve you know any [illegible]o' than de res'.'

"'Oh, yes, I do,' he say. An' den he began, an' tole us dere ages an' dere names; whar' dey was borned, what dey looked 'ike, an' all 'bout 'em. Den he tole us 'bout de Chesters, an' ole Master, an' de Lloyds—till it 'peared like he knew mos' everfing we'd ever done or t'ought of, way back. Yo' better b'lieve I was scairt. I looked 'cross de table to Denning, an' say: "Who is it? Who is dis yere man?' But he jes' shuk his head. 'I dunno, no mo' 'n de dead,' he say.

"'Come, now,' says de stranger man, 'come up sta'rs, an' I tell you mo' 'bout de chillun matters.' So we sat down in the room, an' he tole things, an' tole 'em, till I say: 'I do b'lieve yo's de debbil.' At dis, he laughed right out. 'Well, well, well, well!' he say.

"I was mad 'nuff at dis, an' to stop his 'surance I say: 'Oh, come, now, yo've dug dat well deep 'nuff to fall in, an' bury up yo'self.' Den he kind of shuk hisself togeder, and tole mo' things; and at las' he spoke of Richard. 'Yo' can't tell 'bout dat boy,' I say, ' 'cause he's dead.' 'Oh, no,' say he, 'he isn't dead.'

"'Tell yo' he is,' I say. 'Guess I know.'

"'Oh, no, he isn't,' he say. 'An' he'll eat many a chicken fer yo' yet.'

"'How yo' know I hab chicken?' I say, 'mighty 'spicious like, all 't once. 'Tell yo' Richard Denning's dead!'

"He laughed kind a low a while, an' den he got up an' stood right 'fo' us. 'Father,' he say, 'I am yo' son, Richard Denning!' Den he turn to me, an' he say: 'Mother, I am yo' son, Richard, what's all alive.'

"I looked at him. My heart (holding out both hands a foot in front of her) swelled out dat big. I felt as if I mus' choke. I went up to him, an looked him in de face. 'Are yo' my son Richar'?' I say. 'Yes, mother,' say he, 'I am.' An' I asked him again, an' he still say 'Yes.' An' den—I lifted him 'way up in my arms [N. B.—The son weighs 160 pounds, and Uncle Denning says that she not only lifted, but carried him around the room], an' I say: 'I do b'lieve I'll brake ev'ry bone in yo' body, 'cause yo' keep me on the tenterhook so long!'

"Den I hugged him, an' kissed him, till he say: 'O, moder, don't kill me!' Den I ran down de stair, an' cried. An' den I rared, an' jumped, an' I hollered. Tell yo', chile, de heart in me was so big dat ef I hadn't hollered I'd a burst. 'O, Lord!' I say, 'dat I live to see dis day! O, my blessed Redeemer! O, my Jesus!' " And with the tears streaming down her face, not without tears from those who listen, Aunt Ellen ends her tale.

This is but the outline of her story, and does it scant justice. No idea can be given in words, of the dramatic force, the fire of her narration. She looks at times like the dusky prophetess of her race; and her tones, now the lowest audible, now rising to a piercing cry, hold the listener motionless, spell-bound. Put a scene, an actor, like this on the stage—both would be famous. It is only a drama in private life, yet we all can rejoice in that the lost was found and that long sorrow was turned to joy. —Independent.

THE PRAYING ENGINEER.

One winter, several years ago, there was a good deal of religious interest in a certain Western town, and among those who joined the church was Allie Forsyth, a little fellow twelve years of age. His mother was a widow, and had removed four years before from their home in Vermont, to this town in Wisconsin.

On the Sabbath evening of the day when he joined the church, Allie was sitting in the twilight with his mother, when she said to him: "Allie, tell me what led you to be a Christian. Was it your home teaching, your lessons in Sabbath-school, the preaching of your pastor, or has it all come in some other way?"

Looking up into his mother's face he replied: "Mamma, it was neither of these. But do you remember when we were coming from St. Albans to live here that I wanted to ride on the engine with the engineer? You were afraid to let me until the conductor, whom you knew well, told you that the engineer was a remarkable man, and that I was just as safe with him as in the parlor car with you." Then continued Allie: "When we were ready to start from the station where I first got on the engine, the engineer knelt down just a little bit, and then got up and started his locomotive. I asked him many questions about its different parts, and the places and things we passed, and he was very patient in answering. Soon we stopped at another station, and he knelt down again before we started. He did this before leaving every station, and I asked him after awhile what he was doing. He looked at me very earnestly and said: 'My little lad, do you ever pray?'

"I replied 'Oh, yes, sir! I pray every morning and evening.'

"'Well, my dear boy,' said he, 'when I kneel down I pray. There are, perhaps, two hundred lives now on this train intrusted to my care. A little mistake on my part might send all, or many of these souls, to eternity. So at every station I ask my Heavenly Father to help me. He has helped me, and in all the years I have been on this engine not a single human being of the thousands that have ridden on my train have been harmed. I never have had an accident.'"

For four years the life and words of that praying engineer had been constantly present with this boy and became at length the means of leading him into a Christian life.—Selected.

BEING A BOY.

One of the best things in the world is to be a boy; it requires no experience, though it needs some practice to be a good one. The disadvantage of the position is that it does not last long enough. It is soon over. Just as you get used to being a boy, you have to be something else, with a good deal of work to do and not half so much fun. And yet every boy is anxious to be a man, and is very uneasy with the restriction put upon him as a boy.

There are so many bright spots in the life of a boy, that I sometimes think I should like to live my life over again. There is a great comfort to a boy in the amount of work he can get rid of doing. It is sometimes astonishing how slow he can go on an errand. Perhaps he could not explain why, when he is sent to a neighbor's after yeast, he stops to stone the frogs. It is a curious fact about boys, that two will be a great deal slower than one. Boys have a great power of helping each other to do wrong.

But say what you will about the general usefulness of boys, a farm without a boy would very soon come to grief. He is always in demand. In the first place, he is to do all the errands, go to the store, the postoffice, and carry all sorts of messages. He would like to have as many legs as a wheel has spokes, and rotate in the same way. Leap-frog is one of his methods of getting over the ground quickly. He has a natural genius for combining pleasure with business.—Charles Dudley Warner.

LET THE GIRLS ROMP.

Most mothers have a dread of romps; so they lecture the girls daily on the proprieties, and exhort them to be little ladies. They like to see them very quiet and gentle and as prim as possible. The lot of such children is rather pitable, for they are deprived of the fun and frolic which they are entitled to. Children—boys and girls—must have exercise to keep them healthy. Deprive them of it, and they fade away like flowers without sunshine. Running, racing, skipping, climbing—these are the things that strengthen the muscles, expand the chest and build up the nerves. The mild dose of exercise taken in the nursery with calisthenics or gymnastics will not invigorate the system like a good romp in the open air. Mothers, therefore, who council their little girls to play very quietly make a mistake. Better the laughing, rosy-cheeked, romping girl, than the pale, lily-faced one, who is called every inch a lady. The latter rarely breaks things, or tears her dresses, or tires her mother's patience, as the former does; but, after all, what does the tearing and breaking amount to? It is not wise policy to put an old head on young shoulders. Childhood is the time for childish pranks and plays. The girls will grow into womanhood soon enough. Let them be children as long as they can. Give them plenty of fresh air and sunlight, and let them run and romp as much as they please. By all means give us hearty, healthy, romping girls, rather than pale-faced little ladies, condemned from their very cradles to nervousness, headache, and similar ailments.—Selected.

TEMPERANCE.

THE POSITION OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH IN BOSTON ON THE LIQUOR QUESTION.

In all the large cities of the United States the liquor traffic is found to be most profitable and most degrading in Catholic communities. In Boston the political saloons abound in the midst of the populations that worship at the Cathedral, the Immaculate Conception, and St. James' churches. It was, in fact, in the midst of the district from which these churches draw their congregations that Mr. M. M. Cunniff, the head and front of Rumocratic politics in the city of Boston, had his liquor business. Mr. Cunniff made his money in the liquor traffic. Mr. Cunniff is practically the ruler of the city of Boston to-day. Through Mr. Cunniff and his henchmen the Catholic church seeks to control the public schools, and public affairs generally. Is anybody foolish enough to suppose that the church will declare Mr. Cunniff a "dangerous" man, or that she will excommunicate him for being so admirable a servant of the papacy? And is any rational person likely to have any great regard for what is called "Catholic Total Abstinence" when the church declares the saloon-keeper to be the vilest enemy of society, and, at the same time, administers the sacrament to him every week?—Boston Home Journal.

ANOTHER DECISION AGAINST THE SALOON.

Another decision has been given by the Supreme Court of the United States which considerably affects the liquor interest. It was a question of the right to disregard the laws of a State in regard to the sale of liquor on the public waters under the jurisdiction of the United States, the waters being within or on the borders of a State whose laws regulate the sale of liquor. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States concurring with a decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania is that while a State could not prevent steamboats from navigating the public waters of the United States within its limits, it could prohibit the retailing of spirituous liquors on such boats while within that State, except as authorized by its laws; that Congress, under the power to regulate commerce between the States, could not override or annul local laws designed to protect the health and morals of the people of a State. The decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States thus far have been in favor of sustaining the laws of the States prohibiting or restricting the sale of spirituous liquors. Previous to the downfall of slavery the Supreme Court of the United States was used as a machinery to uphold and—as far as possible—legalize the institution. The decisions of that court on the liquor question thus far, indicate a disposition to sustain the view taken by those States that prohibit, or restrict the traffic, that it is entirely proper and legal to restrain or annul it on the ground that it is contrary to public health and morals. It is further made clear that, as a question affecting public health and morals, it is a national question, and the obligation to prohibit the traffic in the United States is the same as that which would prohibit it in a State. Is not the providence of God clearly indicating that it is the duty of temperance people everywhere to make it a national question? What excuse can we have for not pushing it to the front as the great moral question of the hour that demands recognition in our suffrages? We do not see how the public conscience, so far as Christian people are concerned, can evade such a recognition.—Christian Instructor.

PROHIBITION IN CANADA.—In a recent number of the Northwestern Presbyterian the Rev. James B. Freeman makes the following statements in regard to the progress of prohibition in the Dominion: "In Ontario, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Manitoba there are seventy-eight counties, and fifty-three of these have passed the Scott Act, a prohibitory measure. So far there have been ninety-three contests, and the act has been successful in seventy-two. All of Prince Edward Island, two-fifths of Manitoba, two-thirds of New Brunswick, five-eighths of Ontario, five-sevenths of Nova Scotia, and two-fifths of the whole Dominion is under prohibition to-day. When the act was first passed in Parliament, the Supreme Court of New Brunswick declared it ultra vires. In 1880 the Supreme Court of Canada reversed this decision, and in 1882 the Privy Council of England sustained this decision, and settled forever the constitutionality of the measure. Then an amendment was proposed in Parliament requiring a majority of all names on the voters' list in favor of the act, before it could become a law. This absurd motion was defeated, and in 1881 a wine and beer amendment, exempting the same from the provisions of the act, likewise failed. However, as this amendment failed but by eight majority, it was repeated the next session, and defeated by eighty-nine majority, which settled forever, no doubt, such attempts to defeat the will of the people. The next session a vote to repeal the act failed by a majority of one hundred and seven. In 1884 a resolution for national prohibition failed by a majority of forty-two, a gain of ten votes in three years. A change of twenty-two votes will now pass the measure, so that if we judge of the future by the past, as the great American orator has done, national prohibition will ere seven years have rolled around be a part of the constitution of the Dominion of Canada."

WORKINGMEN AND BEER.

The remark was made in our presence a short time since that a large proportion of the laboring men in this city spend from 20 to 40 cents each day for beer. At the rate of 25 cents a day the sum thus spent in a year would be $78.25, making no account of any used on Sundays.

This is something that cannot be proved to do a particle of good to those who use it, and many medical men claim to know that it is highly injurious. But granting that it does neither special good nor harm, why should any one tax himself to that amount and take from his family the extra comforts it would buy?

It seems like selfishness for a man to indulge even his innocent tastes at the expense of his family, and worse than selfish to spend money for that which will be almost sure to injure his health permanently.

And how can a man for a single moment believe that beer as a frequent drink does him any good? If beer drinkers will take the pains to find out for themselves the different substances contained in their favorite drink, we think they will be less likely to relish it as they now do. Its tendency to make those who drink it have a stout or bloated appearance is well known, but instead of being a sign of health, this is exactly the opposite. The best advice for any one about to drink a glass of beer is simply "don't do it."—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

A special from Paris, Ky., says: Henry M. Vinont of Millersburg, Ky., was sent to the Lexington insane asylum. Those who were acquainted with his habits say that his loss of reason was caused by his inveterate cigarette smoking, he having been known to smoke over one hundred per day. At the time that his mind commenced to give away he was holding a lucrative position in Leadville, Col., a couple of years ago, and was a model young man.

A CALL FOR GERMAN PROHIBITIONISTS.

It is claimed by liquor dealers that Germans are, almost without exception, friendly to their business, and opposed to any interference with it. This is a mistake. Multitudes of Germans never patronize a saloon, and have no special affection for the saloon-keeper; and I have no doubt many German votes will be cast for Fisk and Brocks next November.

It has seemed to me that German Prohibitionists would be cheered and strengthened if each knew of the existence and sentiments of the others. When Elijah fancied that he only was left, a prophet of the true God, his heart sunk within him, and he requested for himself that he might die; but when he learned that seven thousand others had not bowed their knees to Baal, he took up his burdens again and carried them without complaint, until the chariot and horses of fire bore him home in triumph.

Very likely, too, many hesitating ones will be brought into the Prohibition ranks, if they learn that "Landsleute" are there now, and that they will not be as lonesome as they feared.

For these reasons I announce myself for Fisk and Brooks. Although Illinois is my native State, I inherited enough German blood from both my parents to call myself a German.

I also wish to make lists of German Prohibitionists in the different States, and, therefore, request that their names and postoffice addresses be sent to me by letter or postal card. Please include only voters who are Germans by birth or immediate descent.

If there are encouraging responses to this request, I shall be glad to report progress from time to time in such Prohibition papers as desire to publish the facts. As far as other engagements will permit, an effort will be made to open correspondence with German Prohibition workers, and to solicit and distribute Prohibition literature. Wherever practicable, German Prohibition clubs might also be organized, and other steps taken that will lend to a unity of effort against King Gambrinus.

Will not German and English papers, favorable to this movement, kindly publish this call? H. A. FISCHER.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON XI.—Third Quarter.—Sept. 9.

SUBJECT.—The Unbelief of the People.—Num. 14: 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief.—Heb. 3: 19.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Folly of Unbelief. vs. 1–4. Nothing could show more fully the slavish spirit of the people than their proposition to return back into Egypt; back to the life which had been made so "bitter with hard bondage;" to the whip of the task-master; to making brick without straw; to be daily driven, like cattle, to their hopeless, unrequited toil, with nothing but death to look for at last! But this is exactly the folly which the Christian commits when he looks back in his heart to Egypt; when it seems better to him to drift with the tide and do as the world does, than to struggle manfully against the obstacles to holy living which he must meet. Unbelief is always unreasonable, always ready to accuse God falsely, and add outward rebellion to inward murmurs. Our only safety is to crush the serpent while in embryo. It is the wrong thought harbored which becomes sin. When the heart inclines towards Egypt it wants to cast off its allegiance, to "choose other gods to go before it." The human heart is so constituted that it must worship something, must believe in something. "Let us make us a captain." False gods and false religions are all man made, and they all lead back into Egypt. Liberty has always had to be fought for. Spiritual freedom must be attained in the same way. It is not by "sitting at ease in Zion" and receiving religious instruction from the pulpit, as a bog or a sponge receives water, that we conquer the foes that would bring us into bondage, or make spiritual conquests. Nor is it by joining a lodge of Masons or Odd-fellows and professing the universal religion in which all men agree. The very terms of the proposition show that in such a religion there can be no battle-fields, for never yet have all men agreed to conquer their evil inclinations and appetites, the foes to which our race has been in bondage since the fall. When a Christian joins the lodge he has made himself a captain who will lead him back to Egypt by the shortest possible route. Whatever sin we allow to have dominion over us, that sin we make our captain, and though it be but a trifling self-indulgence it may lead us back into Egypt before we are aware.

2. The four faithful Witnesses. vs. 5-10. Caleb and Joshua, by reiterating their former testimony, sought to quell the tumult. "The land is a good land, flowing with milk and honey, only rebel not against the Lord, and fear not the people of the land." It was this fear which led them to rebel; and we shall find in the Christian life that we generally approach nearest rebellion when we are most fearful, or, to use a synonymous word, most distrustful. "Their defence is departed from them;" the margin reads, "shadow." They are left exposed, as it were, to the vertical heat of the desert sun, while we are under the sheltering wing of the Almighty. When we are fighting evil and it looks too strong for us, let us remember this passage. Evil may try to hide under some great name, under the verdict of popular opinion, or in the darkness of "secret chambers," but sooner or later it will shrivel to ashes when His glance finds it out Who "is as a consuming fire." There is every possible encouragement for the Lord's people, even when they seem to lead a forlorn hope to apparently certain defeat. The appeal of these devoted men only served to raise a riot, and the whole multitude cried out to stone them, as centuries later their posterity cried out, "Crucify Him." The man or the woman who stands boldly up for truth must not expect always to be appreciated by their day and generation. The experience of ages has taught us quite the contrary. But it is given to them who suffer for the truth to see "the glory of the Lord." They may see no visible "heavens opened," as did Stephen, but they will feel in their own souls the kingdom for which they are battling begun—the kingdom of peace and joy in the Holy Ghost.

—The Synod of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland has instructed its Board of Foreign Missions to transfer its mission in Japan to the care of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. The reason given for this is lack of funds We are sorry that such a reason must be given, but suppose that the change will tend to the unification of Presbyterianism in the Empire of Japan, in which we greatly rejoice.—The Presbyterian.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

On the 21st of May Senator Blair introduced a bill into the Senate dispensing with all postal service and all military and naval parades on Sunday, in time of peace; and the day following the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church, then in session in Philadelphia, adopted a resolution requesting Congress to enact the Blair bill and make it the law of the land.

In support of that bill, the Sabbath Association of Illinois has sent to Senator Blair the petitions of the churches (to the Senate) in favor of Sabbath observance.

Coming, as the petitions have, from churches in forty different States and Territories, they show how widespread the interest in the Sabbath question is; and they may be taken as a fair expression of the Christian sentiment of the country on this important subject.

These petitions are the first fruits of the Sabbath Association of Illinois in favor of Sabbath reform. There are many interesting things connected with with this "feast of the first fruits."

What a grand thing it would be for every church in the United States, by a unanimous vote of all its members, to place itself on record as being in favor of Sabbath observance.

To every thoughtful mind this Sabbath question is of greater importance than that of the tariff or finance that now engrosses the attention of the people.

"Show me the history of any nation that has lost its Sabbaths and is worthy to be called a nation;" "Lose the Sabbath and you lose the national life and its blessings;" were the warning words that were spoken from the gallery in Music Hall, Chicago, at a meeting in favor of Sabbath observance, by a white-haired old gentleman who stated: "I am what you call a Roman Catholic, and my sentiments and the sentiments of my church and people are with you in this work."

Will those pastors and churches that have not taken any action on the petitions do so at an early day, so that the petitions may be arranged and forwarded to Congress at the beginning of its next session?

Those pastors who have not received the petitions, or who have mislaid them, can be supplied by applying to G. P. Lord, secretary, Elgin, Ill.

PETITION.

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress Assembled:

Your petitioners would respectfully represent that the Sabbath is the dividing line between Christianity and heathenism: that it is the bulwark that shields our Christian civilization against anarchy, with its train of lawlessness and barbarism; that all labor done on that day, other than works of necessity and mercy, is in violation of our State law; that the telegraph has so utilized the forces of electricity for the transmission of intelligence as to annihilate distance and bring the people of the whole world into close proximity with each other; that the telegraph is now used to transmit all important news, and the transaction of business between large commercial centers where despatch is an important factor, and therefore there is no absolute necessity for running the mails on the Sabbath. Consequently, the running of mails on that day is in violation of State laws; that our government should not ignore those laws in making its postal arrangements, but it should be in harmony with, and foremost in every endeavor to maintain the integrity of the Sabbath; that there is an increasing demand for more leisure and rest from labor and business; that the government has heretofore recognized the reasonableness of this demand by reducing the number of hours required for a day's work, that it should now recognize the reasonableness of requiring but six days for a week's work, so that its employes may have a weekly rest day; that it is unjust to require its employes in the postal department to work on Sunday while its employes in every other department rest on that day.

We therefore pray that you will enact such laws and make such regulations as may be required in order to discontinue the running of the mails, and all military and naval parades, and close the post-offices on the Sabbath, and thus we will ever pray.

—August 9th was the date appointed for the laying of the corner-stone of the Judson Memorial Church in Burmah. An aged Christian Burmese woman whom Dr. Judson baptized has given 3,000 rupees, about $1,500.

—The Chicago Evangelization Society has arranged for a convention of Christian workers to be held in Farwell Hall this week Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. At the request of Mr. Moody, Hudson Taylor, director of the China Inland Mission, and Reginald Radcliff of London will be present. Dr. Taylor will be accompanied by his son, Dr. Stanard Taylor, H. W. Frost of the China Inland Mission, and George B. Studd, of London. Hudson Taylor is the veteran missionary who thirty-five years ago founded the China Inland Mission, which has now nearly 300 missionaries at work in all parts of China. He solicits no money for the support of his missions, and guarantees his missionaries no field salary. His work and friends are never wanting. Dr. Taylor and his co-laborers will speak especially on the needs and claims of foreign missions and personal consecration. Reginald Radcliff will deal chiefly with Christian work as carried on in London, Paris, and other great European cities. He is one of the acknowledged leaders as an organizer of city evangelization work, in which he has been engaged for over forty years. The object of the convention is the deepening of the spiritual life of Christian workers, and the promotion of the work of evangelization in the home and foreign fields.

—According to the statistical report for 1888 of the Evangelical Association, just published, that body of German Methodists has 141,853 members, 1,159 itinerant preachers, and 1,916 churches, indicating a gain of 4,156 members, 38 preachers, and 85 churches.

—The first Sabbath of September has been chosen by the Reformed Presbyterian Synod as the day for the collection for the Chinese Mission. This mission, which has for years been under the control of Rev. N. R. Johnston, has been found by him to be too great a burden, and his resignation was tendered to the Board in April. He is carrying on the work only until his successor shall be ready to take it up, when he is anxious to yield it and all the mission properties into his hands and be entirely relieved of all connection with the mission. The Board at its July meeting appointed Mr. Jas. Patton, licentiate, as Chinese missionary at Oakland, Cal. After careful consideration he has accepted, and just as soon as necessary arrangements can be made expects to go to Oakland and take up the work.

IN BRIEF.

At a celebration of high mass by Bishop O'Hara at Wilkesbarre, July 11, Mallincroot Convent, twenty-seven young women took the veil. The ceremonies were impressive, being participated in by twenty priests from various portions of this diocese.

Two heavy brewing firms of Cincinnati are at war over exclusive privileges which each claims to have received to sell beer at the centennial exposition in that city. One firm paid $21,000 for the privilege, and the other secured the restaurant right to sell for $15,000.

"James," said the father of the family, sternly, "your school reports have been anything but favorable this term. I suppose you failed in your examinations, as usual?" "No, sir," protested the boy. "I passed, but it was a tight squeeze." "Laura," continued the father, turning to his oldest daughter, "I think I heard voices in the hall late last evening. I have told you repeatedly not to let that young man stay later than 11 o'clock." "It was just 11 when he left, father." "That's so," testified James, coming to the relief of his sister. "I was at the top of the stairway and saw him go. He got away at 11 o'clock, but it was a tight squ"—"James!" shrieked Laura.—Chicago Tribune.

During a recent thunderstorm a maple tree in front of Miner Cresco's residence, at Crescoville, Pa., was struck by lightning. The only damage done to the tree was the chipping of a piece out of the trunk, as if it had been done with an ax, about midway between the ground and the lower branches. After the storm Mr. Cresco went out to look at the tree. On the ground at the foot of the tree lay an immense black snake dead, and holding in its mouth a young robin. There was a robin's nest in the tree, and it was known to have had three young ones in it the day before. As the tree had been struck by lightning it was supposed that they had been killed. A boy climbed the tree and found two young robins in the nest alive and lively. It is supposed that the black snake had climbed the tree and robbed the nest of one of the newly-hatched birds, and was descending the trunk as it was struck by lightning, and was killed with its prey in its mouth.

Two hundred years ago in China there was just such a craze about natural gas as we have in this country to-day. Gas wells were sunk with as much vim and vigor as the celestials were capable of, but owing to a gas explosion that had killed several millions of people and tore up and destroyed a large district of country, leaving a large inland sea, known on the maps as Lake Foo Chang, the boring of any more gas wells was then and there prohibited by law. It seems, according to Chinese history, that many large and heavy-pressure gas wells were struck, and in some districts wells were sunk quite near to each other. Gas was lighted as soon as struck, as in this country. It is stated that one well, with its unusual pressure, by induction or back draught, pulled down into the earth the burning gas of a smaller well, resulting in the dreadful explosion of a large district, destroying the inhabitants thereof. Lake Foo Chang rests on this district. The same catastrophe is imminent in this country unless the laws restict further developments in boring so many wells. Should a similar explosion occur there will be such an upheaval as will dwarf the most terrible earthquakes ever known. The country along the gas belt, from Toledo, through Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, will be ripped up to the depth of 1,200 to 1,500 feet and flopped over like a pancake, leaving a chasm through which the waters of Lake Erie will come howling down, filling the Ohio and Mississippi valleys and blotting them out forever.—Fireman's Herald.

Some one has recently made public the remark that if the whole human race were divided into families of five persons each, the State of Texas is large enough to supply half an acre of land to each family. The statement surprised some people, and not a few of them declared hastily, without performing the necessary calculations, that it could not be true. There are supposed to be about 1,400,000,000 persons living on the globe. A half acre to each family of five would require one acre for ten persons, or 140,000,000 acres in all. The area of Texas is more than 262,000 square miles, or nearly 168,000,000 acres, consequently there would be a surplus of almost 28,000,000 acres left over after every family was provided for, which would be sufficient for four or five times the present population of the United States. Not many people realize how little space would be needed to accommodate the whole human race assembled in one place. Suppose we were to fancy every human being forming one of a vast congregation seated in 1,400,000,000 easy-chairs, each occupying a square yard of ground space. As there are nearly 3,600,000 square yards in a square mile, that number represents the size of the congregation that could be seated upon it under the conditions named; and the whole human family could be gathered on a tract of 452 square miles—or 21¼ miles each way. Less than two fifths of the area of the little State of Rhode Island would suffice to give comfortable seating room to the whole human race. One twelfth of the area of Rhode Island would be enough to afford standing room—as people stand in a crowd, without crushing—to every man, woman, and child on the face of the globe.—Youth's Companion.

PERSECUTION

By the Roman Catholic Church.

A Moral Mystery how any Friend of Religious Liberty could Consent to "Hand over Ireland to Parnellite Rule."

By Rev. John Lee, A. M., B. D.

General Viscount Wolseley: "Interesting."
Chicago Inter-Ocean: "A searching review."
Christian Cynosure: "It deserves a wide circulation at the present time."
Bishop Coxe, Protestant Episcopal, of Western New York: "Most useful publication; a logical sequel to 'Our Country,' by Josiah Strong."
Emile De Laveleye of Belgium, the great publicist: "I have read with the greatest interest your answer to Cardinal Manning. I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted."
Rev. C. C. McCabe, D. D.: "It is a useful book and ought to have a wide sale. You are dealing with a question which will soon dominate every other in American politics. The Assassin of Nations is in our midst and is approaching the Temple of Liberty with steal hy tread. The people of this country will understand the Belfast frenzy some day better than they do now."
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Montague: "I have read it with the greatest pleasure, and with amazement at the intimate acquaintance with the acts of Romanism in our midst which you have evinced. I only wish that, instead of publishing your pamphlet in Chicago, you had sown it broadcast over England, Scotland and Ireland."

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkab alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

FARM NOTES.

CLEAN UP THE FARM.

What an argument for "farming the corners" is the advice given by Prof. S. A. Forbes, Illinois State Entomologist: "Pick up boards, rails and sticks along roadsides and around headlands this fall, and thoroughly burn over the borders of the fields and similar places, thickets, woodlands, etc., late this fall." All this to destroy chinch bugs. Ill health is generally found where there is filth—disease comes from foulness. Cleanliness and neatness in person and house with its surroundings keeps off much sickness. Death and destruction to crops follow dirty farming. He who keeps his roadsides, farmyards and fence corners clean for their tidy look, and farms the corners for the profit in it, does wiser than he thinks. He does much to keep off the foul brood of bugs. He not only gets money from the corners themselves, but also gets more from the fields, of which they form a part, by preventing the destruction of crops by insect pests. Clean up, clean up now, and next spring farm every corner of your farm if you have to summer fallow some of the "fields" to get time to do it. How much of the $15,000,000 lost in the crops of Illinois in 1887 by the ravages of the chinch bug alone was due to the neglected corners, fence rows, clumps of thickets and piles of rubbish in the fields and barnyards of our farms, which gave homes to these destructive pests?

Farmers of Illinois, clean up your farms! Go at it unitedly, systematically, and do it thoroughly—do it now. Burn every old dry thing on the place, either by running fires, bon-fires, or as fire wood.

The improvement in the looks of some farms would add dollars to their selling value. It may add hundreds of dollars to their producing value. Farmers can all be Protectionists and Prohibitionists in this matter, and they ought to be Free-traders in means of helpfulness to rid their farms of everything that makes harbors for insect pests, especially chinch bugs. Perhaps the destructive chinch bug may prove a blessing in disguise.

MAKING MANURE.

Upon well regulated farms, where the work is done systematically (and the two generally go together), it is usually the custom to draw out what manure there is in and about the yards as soon as the small grains are harvested. After the yards are all thoroughly cleaned it is a good plan to draw into them any old stack bottoms or straw piles that may be in the stack yard or the field. In this way a triple good is accomplished. The yard and field is rid of an unsightly vermin harbor, the foundation laid for a good supply of manure for next season, and the yard is made cleanly for the stock. After the yard is ready, look about and see if there are any ways in which you can make a larger amount of manure the coming season than you have usually. It is generally admitted that no one commercial fertilizer is equal to good barnyard manure for all purposes If this is true, every farmer ought to aim to make as much as possible; for when the manure cart stops the crop stops. If you have no shed in which to store and compost your manure till ready to draw upon the land, it is a good plan to put together in a pile all the small lots of manure from the horse and cow stables, the calf and pig pens, the sheep yards and poultry houses. Do this each day as they are cleaned out. Throw upon this all the house slops that are not suitable for the pigs to drink, ashes and refuse of house, wood yard and garden. In this way you will keep your sheds, yards and garden clean and neat, and at the same time be making a good lot of the best manure.

The horse may be trusted to gauge his thirst, except on occasions of extreme exertion. That horses are the better for being watered before they are fed is an admitted fact with all veterinary surgeons. Colic and gripes are thus avoided. The explanation given is this: When the stomach is full, water, passing rapidly through the stomach, on the way is very apt to carry with it into the small intestines undigested corn, and this produces local irritation. There is less danger in watering a horse actively warm than when the system is somewhat lowered. Soft water is better for all stock, and on no account let horses drink dirty water; it is very objectionable.

"My wife had a distressing cough, with pains in the side and breast. We tried various medicines, but none did her any good until I got a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which has cured her. A neighbor, Mrs. Glenn, had the measles, and the cough was relieved by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have no hesitation in recommending this to every one afflicted."—Robert Horton, Foreman Headlight, Morrillton, Ark.

"I have been afflicted with asthma for forty years. Last spring I was taken with a violent cough, which threatened to terminate my days. Every one pronounced me in consumption. I determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Its effects were magical. I was immediately relieved and continued to improve until entirely recovered."—Joel Bullard, Guilford, Conn.

"Six months ago I had a severe hemorrhage of the lungs, brought on by an incessant cough which deprived me of sleep and rest. I tried various remedies, but obtained no relief until I began to take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. A few bottles of this medicine cured me." Mrs. E. Coburn, 19 Second st., Lowell, Mass.

"For children afflicted with colds, coughs, sore throat, or croup, I do not know of any remedy which will give more speedy relief than Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have found it, also, invaluable in cases of Whooping Cough."—Ann Lovejoy, 1257 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

THE SECRET ORDERS

WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington, in a letter written a year before his death: "I preside over no lodge, nor have I been in one more than once or twice during the last thirty years."

President Millard Fillmore, J. C. Spencer and others: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

Chief Justice John Marshall: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned as one capable of much evil and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

John Quincy Adams: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

General A. W. Riley:—I hold that the difference between the Christian and a heathen religion is, that one has morality and the other has not. And when our churches refuse to speak of such subjects as slavery, liquor-selling and secret societies, they are becoming heathen religions; that is, religions without morals.

Charles Francis Adams: "Every man who takes a Masonic oath forbids himself from divulging any criminal act, unless it might be murder or treason, that may be communicated to him under the seal of fraternal bond, even though such concealment were to prove a burden upon his conscience and a violation of his bounden duty to society and to his God."

Charles Sumner: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistical to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield; In conducting the governments of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but secret orders to be considered, which have agents everywhere—reckless agents, who countenance assassination, and, if necessary, can produce a massacre."

General J. W. Phelps:—All secret organizations are links of one and the same chain which binds men to evil and not to good. The Masonic lodge is the parent source from which all similar modern organizations have emanated and this lodge is now in active operation in every city and considerable village of the country swaying our parties and churches; filling our offices, secular and divine, with its partisans; shaping our political destinies; and teaching a spurious and corrupting morality subversive both of the Christian religion and of free institutions.

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

A. M. Sullivan, Irish Leader: I had not studied in vain the history of secret, oath-bound associations. I regarded them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization and are often on the whole more perilous to society than open tyranny."

Hon. Edward Blake, leader in Canadian Parliament, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

George Washington (to Gov. Trumbull): "Masonry is a benevolent institution, which may be employed for the best or worst purposes."

Edward Everett: "A secret society so widely diffused and connected as this puts a vast power, capable of the most dangerous abuse, into hands irresponsible to the public."

Richard Rush: Hooker, personifying law, eloquently exclaims, 'her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world; everything on earth does her homage, the highest is not beyond her control, the least as claiming her protection." Masonry has overset this primordial system. She has dethroned this image of God upon earth. To reinstate it over so insolent a victor, we must have a political organization. There is no other way of assaulting, there is no other hope of vanquishing, there need be no other dream of humbling such a foe. It fights with desperation.

Wendell Phillips: "History shows them perverting justice, stopping at no crime to protect and conceal their mummeries; controlling politics for selfish and personal ends, and interfering with great danger in national emergencies. Every good citizen should make war on all secret societies, and give himself no rest until they are forbidden by law and rooted out of existence."

John Hancock: "I am opposed to all secret associations."

James Madison: "From the number and character of those who now support the charges against Masonry, I cannot doubt that it is at least susceptible of abuse, outweighing any advantages promised by its patrons."

General U. S. Grant:—All secret, oath-bound political parties are dangerous to any nation, no matter how pure or how patriotic the motives and principles which first bring them together.

Myron Holley of New York: —"Such a rebellion Freemasonry has raised. It has violated the dearest rights of nature, and the most sacred enactments of our laws, and this in a spirit manifestly treasonable, for it has done this in pursuance of solemn, deliberate and voluntary obligations to a foreign government,—I mean its own—a government far more alien to that which claims our allegiance than any which has ever afflicted mankind."

Gerrit Smith, in an address, 1870:—Masonry murdered Morgan. If it could not conceal his murderers, it nevertheless protected them. It overrode the laws of the land and ruled the courts and the ballot-boxes. Moreover, it is capable of repeating the crimes. Why then should we not dread secret societies, and do what we can to bring them to an end?

William Wirt: "If this be Masonry, as according to uncontradicted evidence it seems to be, I have no hesitation in saying that I consider it at war with the fundamental principles of the social compact, and a wicked conspiracy against the laws of God and man, that ought to be put down.

Joseph Ritner, governor of Pennsylvania, 1837:—"If it be true as the lamented Colden (himself one of the initiated) declared that many a Mason became a great man but no great man ever became a Mason, how nearly does it concern the youth of our country to pause and reflect before they commit their present standing and future reputation to the keeping of a society, which for its cold-hearted and selfish purposes could immolate even the fame of Washington at the shrine of its abominations."

Lewis Tappan, private journal, 1814;—"Dr. Dixwell gave me lectures on Masonry at his house." "In September left the lodge." Letter, Jan. 21, 1829:— "I am free to say that I henceforth renounce Freemasonry, considering it a useless and profane institution."

George Washington, to friends in 1794, quoted by Myron Holley:—"The real people occasionally assembled in order to express their sentiments on political sentiments, ought never to be confounded with permanent, self-appointed societies, usurping the right to control constituted authorities, and to dictate to public opinion. While the former was entitled to respect, the latter was incompatible with all government, and must either sink into general dis-esteem, or finally overturn the established order of things."

Charles Francis Adams: "A more perfect agent for the devising and execution of conspiracies against church and state could scarcely have been conceived."

Thaddeus Stevens: "By Freemasonry, trial by jury is transformed into an engine of despotism and Masonic fraud."

Judge Pliny Merrick (a seceded Mason);—If ever a Chapter or a lodge shall establish laws in conflict with those of the state the Masonic requisition is obedience to the lodge and conflict with the state; and if a member hesitates at this humiliating obedience, his heart must be "torn from his bosom," his "vitals plucked from his body," and Masonic vengeance, not satisfied with this bloody immolation, denies a resting place to the motionless remains, but they are to be "burnt to ashes and scattered to the winds."

Samuel C. Pomeroy, in an address, 1883:—"There may be a broad distinction between the good and the bad in secret societies, but as they all alike have oath bound obligations to complete oblivion of all they do or say, I have no means of judging the good from the bad. So I turn away from them all to the great Teacher who said, "In secret have I said nothing."

Judge Daniel H. Whitney, (renouncing Mason): While professed ministers of the Gospel and members of churches are permitted to associate themselves with these organizations, the task to apply a remedy will be a hopeless one; and just so long will the declaration made to me not long since by a high Mason and a worthy man prove true, that "a Masonic lodge is the strangest medley of priests and murderers—deacons and whoremasters—church members and gamblers—decent men and loafers—drunkards and rowdies, that the All Seeing-Eye ever looked down upon."

Hon. Samuel Dexter, in an open letter to the Grand Master of Mass., 1798: "If there be no very important reason for upholding Masonry at a moment like the present, there is a reason against it. The system of the destroyers of human virtue and happiness is to undermine in the dark the castle that cannot be carried by storm. Secret agency has overthrown all the republics of Europe, and an extended, secret, leveling, self-created society, without any valuable object of pursuit, and embracing bad characters as well as good, cannot be the subject of approbation of an anxious patriot."

William H. Seward: "Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and, bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow-men."

Wendell Phillips: "I wish you success most heartily in your efforts to arouse the community to the danger of secret societies. They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them. Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organizations, such should not be allowed to exist."

George Washington's Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency."

Daniel Webster: "All secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and just government. Under the influence of this conviction I heartily approved the law, lately enacted in the State of which I am a citizen, for abolishing all such oaths and obligations."

James G. Birney, candidate of the Liberty party for President, was a Freemason, "but never entered a lodge after he joined the church, and, as his sons grew up, he cautioned them against joining any secret order."—Gen. Wm. Birney.

Charles P. Sumner, father of the Senator, and a renouncing Mason:—Masonic engagements, whether they are called oaths, obligations, or promises, ought never to be made. They are not sanctioned by law and are not obligatory. They make it a Masonic crime to divulge that which the good of the community requires should not be concealed.

Hon. Ezra Butler, ex-Governor of Vermont:—One Masonic obligation requires that a Mason shall vote for a brother in preference to any other person of equal qualifications. Is not this political Masonry? The Masons in Vermont are about one-twentieth part of the freemen, and they hold about three-fourths of all the important offices in the State. Is this owing to their superior fitness, or to political Masonry?

Philo Carpenter:—This saint of God (Moses Stuart) like the old prophets, was satisfied with the institutions and ordinances of God's house, and consequently did not give his influence or aid in supplementing the same with human ordinances and worldly alliances; in other words, he was opposed to secret, oath-bound societies, into which many good men, and even clergymen, have been, and are being "ensnared."

Hon. Cadwallader C. Colden, Mayor of New York and M. C.:—It is true that I have been a Mason a great number of years, and that I have held very high Masonic offices and honors. It is equally true that I have for a long time ceased to have any connection with the institution because I have believed, and do now believe, it is productive of much more evil than good. I have long entertained my present opinion, that a man who would eschew all evil should not be a Freemason.

Horace Greeley:—Many persons were brought to trial on account of the murder of Morgan, but no one was judicially found guilty of murder. It was established by secreting Masons that the oaths—at least in some of the highest degrees—that were administered, and taken by those admitted to Masonic lodges, disqualified them from serving as jurors in any case where a brother Mason of like degree was a party, and his antagonist was not.

Hon. Seth M. Gates, ex-Mason:—Profoundly convinced by long experience and observation that Freemasonry is an evil and pernicious institution. I wish once more in my advanced age to lift my warning voice publicly against it and all kindred organizations, and to beseech Christian men to have no connection or fellowship with them. Jesus is not, and cannot properly be recognized in Freemasonry. He must be ignored in the lodge-room, in its lectures, instructions, and in its prayers.

Hon. Heman Lincoln, ex-Governor, Mass:—Freemasonry, as a distinct, independent government within our own government, and beyond the control of the laws of the land, by means of its secrecy and the oaths and regulations which its subjects are bound to obey under penalties of death, has occupied much of the attention of the committee. . . . We believe, in the language of the Edinburgh Review, that all secret societies are justly deemed odious, wherever the government is tolerably free, and can only be excused where the existence of arbitrary power, foreign or domestic, leaves no other means of escaping from hopeless slavery.

Gen. Henry Sewall, a companion of Washington:—I was initiated an Entered Apprentice to the Masonic rites in October, 1777, at Albany, soon after the capture of Burgoyne, being then an officer in the American army. . . . I was led by the influence of this "perfect rule of faith and practice," during the year 1784, to view speculative Masonry in a shape still more deformed. Its charity appeared to be selfishness, because restricted to its own members; its religion deism because entirely devoid of the Gospel. Its history appeared fabulous; its claims to antiquity unsustainable; its titles fulsome; its rites barbarous and absurd; its oaths extra-judicial, unlawfully imposed and blindly taken, and the penal sanctions annexed, horrid and impious.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The House Monday passed the Chinese bills, with an amendment that upon the ratification of the pending treaty only, shall the repealing clause go into effect.

Monday Mr. Anderson of Iowa presented a bill to define trusts and to provide for the punishment of persons connected with them. Also a resolution providing for the printing of 10,000 extra copies of the report of the Pacific Railroad Commission, which he declares discloses scandalous law-breaking on the part of the management.

POLITICAL.

Mr. Thurman, Democratic candidate for Vice President, made his first campaign trip last week to Toledo, Detroit, Fort Huron, and Chicago. He was greeted by large crowds, and was well satisfied with his ability to address large crowds. His arguments were mainly on the tariff.

Col. Geo. O. Jones of the Riggs House, Washington, chairman of the National Committee of the Greenback party, has issued a call for a National Convention of that party, to be held in Cincinnati, September 12th next., to nominate candidates for President and Vice President.

The Chairman of the Democratic Central Committee of North Carolina has addressed a large number of circulars to the employes of the Pension and other departments at Washington, soliciting contributions to a campaign fund. This is a direct violation of the civil-service law, and is being winked at by the officers in charge.

COUNTRY.

A cyclone swept over Eastern Maryland Tuesday afternoon, demolishing houses and orchards and wrecking the canning establishment at Still Pond, in which were 100 men, women and children, mostly Bohemians and Germans from Baltimore, and killed nine; three were dangerously hurt, and a number were slightly injured.

Through trains were run Friday on the main lines east of Pittsburg of the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore and Ohio roads for the first time since Tuesday's flood.

During a heavy fog in the bay of San Francisco Wednesday morning the steamer Oceanica ran into the City of Chester, damaging her so badly that she went down in five minutes. Over thirty persons were drowned.

At Bradford, Pennsylvania, Wednesday night, while Edward Duell was compounding colored fire in a gas pipe, at a G. A. R celebration, it exploded, killing him and two others, and wounding still others.

An explosion of 20,000 pounds of black powder occurred in the drying house of the Giant Powder Company near West Berkeley, Friday. Two white men and three Chinamen were killed.

Sunday afternoon the engineers and firemen of the Evansville and Terre Haute railroad, Evansville and Indianapolis, and the Peoria, Decatur and Evansville railroad, known as the Mackey system, were ordered out on a strike by order of Chief Arthur and Chief Sargent. Two hundred men left their engines. The trouble is about the employment of Master Mechanic Smith at Mattoon, Ill. The men claim that he has discharged men without cause and is working against their interests.

Two agents left Trinidad, Col., to arbitrate the rights of the Maxwell grantees and the settlers, if possible The sheriff's posse, which was besieged in a house at Stonewall, made its escape. One of the settlers was killed and nine wounded in the fight.

A team of horses was stung to death by bees at Findlay, O., Aug. 26. A boy drove the horses past a bee-hive, when the insects came out in a body and attacked the animals. In less than thirty minutes after the attack was over both the horses were dead.

The yellow-fever scourge is visiting Jacksonville, Florida, with some severity. Vigorous efforts have been made to check the disease, but Aug. 26 nine new cases were reported, and there were two deaths. Two cases were discharged cured. There have been an even 100 cases all told, many light, with marked yellow-fever symptoms, and believed to be remittent or bilious fever. The infected district is gradually enlarging. It looks now as if the ending of this epidemic is a matter of intelligent and energetic work, but one of no small magnitude.

Violent windstorms swept over Louisiana, Southern Maryland, Delaware and New Jersey Tuesday, leveling houses, fences, and growing crops. Along the Lower Mississippi a large number of coal boats were damaged or destroyed, the loss in this particular being estimated at $500,000. At Wilmington, Del., a cyclone wrecked the iron works of the Mablow Bros., and carried away 100 feet of Pusey & Jones's iron works, and crossing to the river, upset a number of boats, causing the loss of two lives. At Boston the Journal press-room is under water.

A flash of lightning recently killed eighteen head of blooded horses valued at $20,000, and owned by George Rainsford of Wyoming Territory.

A cyclone struck Marquette, Mich., Monday afternoon, and many buildings were partly demolished, but no lives were lost.

The Whitney Paper Mill at Menasha, Wis., caught fire in the engine room about midnight Wednesday, and an hour later, when several hundred persons were watching the flames, a superheated bleach rotary boiler, suddenly cooled by streams of water thrown by the firemen, exploded, and the entire mass, weighing about ten tons, was blown through the throng a distance of about 300 feet, killing fourteen men outright and injuring about as many more. The dead were all poor workmen. Fourteen persons were killed, three or four fatally injured, twelve or thirteen suffering from broken limbs or serious bruises, and a good many others seriously bruised or burned.

FOREIGN.

The steamer Oceanic, from China and Japan, brings advices that a short time since at Antique, China, a Spanish priest and one other Spaniard were attacked by a horde of native inhabitants with the intention of putting the priest to death, and that his companion fired at the mob until fifty of them were killed.

The latest semi-official returns from the Bandaisan, Japan, earthquake give the number of persons killed at 476 and the injured at forty-one.

Eight hundred workmen at Teng-Leon, China, were drowned recently by an inundation.

Owing to the treatment to which Mr. John Dillon is subjected in Dundalk jail, he has already lost seven pounds, and his health is seriously injured.

Consul Manton, who for eighteen years has been consul at Collonia, Uruguay, says that the recent emancipation of slaves by Brazil was simply a sop to the large number of the southern provinces of the empire. The inhabitants of these provinces, he said, are ripe for a revolution, and it is likely that as soon as Dom Pedro dies a concerted effort will be made to overthrow the throne and declare a republic in Brazil.

The Berlin newspapers are silent on the subject of the arrests which are made daily. The prisons are crowded with men and women charged with propagation of socialist doctrines and the utterance of seditious cries. The socialists continue to circulate what appears to be a popular fly-sheet.

The Emperor William, it is now reported, will not visit the Vatican unless the Vatican authorities arrange that there shall be no semblance in the ceremony of superiority. The Vatican in the meantime declines to make an exception of the new German Emperor. Cologne papers say the attitude of the Pope represents an absolute abandonment of the papacy. No European power now cares to support its pretensions to be the spiritual guide of the people. Emperor William personally desires to see the Pope. The arrangements at the Vatican are to receive him with the usual ceremonies, and the Pope refuses to allow any back-stairs conference. The ceremonial has been acceded to by Emperor William as the head of the German people. Within court circles it is known that Prince Bismarck has had trouble in persuading the Emperor to submit to the Papal ceremonial.

We join the protest of the Free Methodist against the late desecration of the Lord's day at a Prohibition camp meeting in Spencerport, New York. Rev. J. A. Brooks was the central figure of the occasion. It is not clear that his remarks were inappropriate for the day, but his presence at a political meeting, where a traffic in refreshments was going on, should have the condemnation of every man who hopes for the triumph of Prohibition. Of course, the old parties condemn the act, though their leaders have much less concern for the day than they have for gaining a vote.

The Washington correspondent of the News of this city, writes that among the best paid campaign speakers for the Republicans in 1884 was Alexander Sullivan, of this city, the murderer (unconvicted) of the teacher Hanford. This year he, with John Finerty, the big fighting Irishman and ex-Congressman, and R. G Ingersoll, are rated at $500 a speech. For the Democrats Henry George receives a like amount, as his influence is supposed to be still great with laboring men. Such names and figures indicate how desperate is the game the old parties are playing.

The Mormon church organ, Deseret News, has a correspondent in Chicago who is capable of writing the most inveracious jumbles of fact and fancy. He closes a late letter to the Salt Lake organ, after describing the iniquities of the Gentiles and foretelling the woes impending, with these words of peace for the Brighamites: "Is it any wonder we have dynamite in our midst? Is it any wonder that Pinkerton is chief of the Brotherhood of Engineers? Is it any wonder we have a Christian Endeavor Convention? In fact, Christianity at present is but an endeavor to keep on its last legs; an endeavor to keep above water. Is it any wonder we have seven political parties now formed, with seven more in process of formation? All will come right for Utah in the end."

It is reported that the young Emperor of Germany is inclined to be hostile toward Freemasonry. His immediate predecessors, father and grandfather, patronized the lodge. Prof. C. M. Mead, writing to the Advance from Interlaken, Switzerland, says that the accession of William II. will promote evangelical religion in Germany. The reasons for this judgment will surprise and grieve many American readers. He claims that the Empress Victoria, wife of the late Frederick, is a Free Thinker and would have exerted her influence with her husband, had he lived, to organize a rationalistic court. The new Emperor is a religious man of orthodox views, and his wife, says Prof. Mead, is "a most earnestly religious woman, whose influence will be as much in the right direction as her mother-in-law's would have been in the wrong one." This is an excellent message concerning the young ruler, and we hope there may be added to it a repudiation of some of his warlike declarations, which come not well from a Christian man opposed to secret societies.

A meeting of colored men was held two weeks ago in Geddes Hall, New Orleans, to consider the recent slaughter of innocent Negroes in the country parishes of Louisiana. Among the names of New Orleans pastors at this meeting we recognize those of Revs. A. S. Jackson, E. Lyon and C. B. Mason, who attended the N. C. A. convention last February. The address adopted by the convention recounts several bloody massacres, and adds the painful truth, "The civil authorities are in sympathy with the crimes." It advises the Negroes to be calm and be law-abiding; to expect no mercy if attacked, and defend their homes as well as they may be able; and to get away from every community where they cannot live quietly. The Negroes are too much in terror, and to emigrate they have no means. Their condition is sad, perplexing, and to the nation to the last degree disgraceful. The discussion of these infamous crimes has again begun in the Senate. Mr. Chandler is pushing his resolution for an investigation of Louisiana elections, and a grand war of words will follow, but all such investigations have of late proved only a mockery. The colored man gets no benefit from them. They furnish an argument for politicians, and that is the end of it. The Republicans suggest no cure for the evil but war, but this is only in their speeches. Their platform has no such sentiment, nor would General Harrison, if elected, undertake to punish the assassins. When Mr. McKinley, of Ohio, lately went to Georgia to speak, he said no word about the outrages to warn or advise his Southern brethren, but only argued for tariff. Either the South must be persuaded to stop these henious murders, or there must be a political division on some new issue, in which the Negro vote may be in demand on both sides.

There are according to report one hundred and fifty-six pension bills pending in Congress, and scores are put through in a lump on convenient days. As these bills are generally for the relief of individual cases which in some way are not satisfactorily reached by the general pension laws, they indicate to what an extent the pension business is growing; and with every year put between us and the war this business increases. The annual report of the commissioner of pensions shows that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, there were added to the pension rolls 62,280 names, the largest annual increase in the history of the bureau, making a total of 452,557 pensioners on the rolls at the close of the year, as follows: 326,835 invalids, 92,928 widows, minor children and dependent relatives, 37 revolutionary widows, 806 survivors of the war of 1812, 10,787 widows of those who served in that war, 16,060 survivors of the war with Mexico, and 5,104 widows of those who served in that war. During the same period 15,730 were dropped from the rolls on account of death and various other causes, leaving a net increase to the rolls of 46,550 names. The amount paid for pensions since 1861 has been $963,086,444. The amount of pensions paid during the year was $78,775,862, an increase over the previous year of $5,308,280. The total amount disbursed by pension agents for all purposes was $79,646,146. The cost attending such disbursements was in the aggregate $3,262,524. The total amount expended for all purposes was $82,038,386, being 21½ per cent of the total estimated gross income of the United States Government for the period. The total expenditures of the government for the fiscal year 1888 were $267,924,801, so that the amount expended for and on account of pensions was nearly 31 per cent of the entire outlay of the government.

BISHOP VAIL AND THE NATIONAL REFORM ASSOCIATION.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

If we were to ask the average Kansan who was the most popular man in the State, he would most likely say, Bishop Thomas H. Vail of Topeka, who is at the head of Bethany College. For a quarter of a century he has been prominently identified with educational and church work in the State, as the leading man in the Episcopal church.

About the year 1872, when Dr. D. McAllister was giving his time to the lecture work of the National Reform Association, he held a convention at Leavenworth, at which Bishop Vail took a prominent part, acting as chairman, and making an address. He was interrupted by an infidel in the audience, who asked him a question which threw the Bishop on his metal, and aroused him thoroughly. He was put on the list of vice-presidents of the Association; but years afterward, when I was holding conventions in the State, I called on him a number of times, but failed to interest him enough to attend any of our conventions, or even to read the organ of the movement. He told me once, that as long as the Association confined itself to the single idea of recognizing God in the Constitution, he was in sympathy with it; but when it began to incorporate such questions as the Sabbath, and Prohibition, he begged leave to object. In other words, he was willing that the nation should confess God as the Supreme Ruler, provided it was only a confession; but when it was proposed to carry out that profession, by applying God's law in the solution of great political questions, like the Sabbath and Prohibition, then he must enter his dissent. And this is about where a great many of the so-called prominent men stand, whose names we are tempted to put on the list of our vice-presidents.

Bishop Vail confessed to me that he was a Mason in regular standing, and that he had never found anything in the oaths and obligations of Masonry inconsistent with his Christianity. When the editor of the Topeka Capital requested the ministers of the city to write for publication their answer to the question, "Are the principles of Christianity gaining ground, or are they declining?" Bishop Vail answered by saying, that the influence of Christianity was not confined to the church. His language was: "Even all through our modern society, in a large number of associations which professedly have no connection with religion, and many of whose members theoretically reject a Divine revelation, this influence of the precepts of Jesus is clearly realized. The principle of benevolence, the care of the sick, and of the widow, and of the orphan, which so largely permeates all such associations as the Masonic, the Odd-fellow, the unions of every class and order, comes from Christianity."

Thus the Bishop claims these Christless orders of darkness as the offspring of Christianity. We are not surprised, then, to know that he wrote some time ago to Dr. Stevenson of Philadelphia, to take his name from the list of vice-presidents of the National Reform Association, and it was done.

It seems to me that what our Association most needs to do now, is to push our lines of work out so practically that the names of all mere nominal, theoretical reformers will be dropped from our list, for they are a dead weight to our cause. As Gideon's army was sifted of all time-serving, compromising men before the Lord would use them in gaining the victory, so with the moral forces in the world to-day. Our National Reform work has heretofore been too theoretical. Both the National Reform lecturers and anti-secret lecturers, we believe, should now devote their main strength to the Prohibition agitation, aiming to bring the party into line with their respective reforms.

Dr. Stevenson, some time ago in the Christian Statesman, published a list of living issues that had been raised by the attempt to apply the moral laws of Jesus Christ to our national life, or by the assaults of irreligion and immorality upon established Christian features of our government. Among these living issues, which, he says, "are of necessity under continual discussion in our columns," are "The Secret Orders, their relation to Republican government and the Christian religion."

Along side of the question of Prohibition and the Sabbath, this question of secret societies is a great, living issue of our times. Why, then, should the Statesman not keep it under constant discussion? We make a serious mistake if we count as allies men who are in sworn alliance with an institution like Freemasonry, which in reality displaces Christ by substituting another supreme, and actually strikes his blessed name from the texts of Scripture quoted in its rituals. Dr. Stevenson told me, what I have demonstrated in my experience for six years in the National Reform lecture field, that he had never yet found a regular adhering Mason who was of value as an ally of our cause. This has led him to the determination to put upon the program of our next annual convention a strong address on the question of secret societies.

SECRET SOCIETIES NOT OF THE ONE WAY.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

Secret societies seek the promotion of their objects by impracticable and often by evil methods. It is not sufficient that we seek to accomplish right objects. Our methods, as well as our purposes, must be in harmony with Christian principles.

> "Who noble ends by noble means obtains,
> Or failing, dies in exile or in chains,
> Like good Aurelius, let him reign or bleed,
> Like Socrates, that man is great, indeed."

Secret societies all profess laudable purposes. Nowhere can be found more earnest protestations of benevolent objects than in their public declarations. In the profusion and loudness of professions they greatly exceed all religious and openly benevolent institutions.

Nor do we need to conclude that they are insincere. We may safely admit that in many cases, at least, their objects are praiseworthy. The fault is in their methods. They have undertaken "to do evil that good may come, and have forgotten that God says of such that "their condemnation is just."

One of the landmarks of Masonry is that it teaches (by symbolism) "piety, morality and science." It proposes also to teach Faith, Hope and Charity. But there can be no real piety that is not the outgrowth of a regenerate heart, and does not come from love for and fellowship with our Lord Jesus Christ. Before there can be piety the soul must be born again by the power of the Holy Spirit. None of the secret societies require or expect this. Their efforts and teachings are all in another direction. The piety (if so it may be called) which they teach is that of the heathen. It is a religion that does not imply reconciliation to God or faith in his Word. It is not such piety as writes the law of God on the heart. Freemasonry, nor any other secret order, does or can teach morality; for to be truly moral is to have Christ for our pattern, and to set him always before our face as the supreme object of our affection and imitation. None of these societies have any such standard of morality. Their morality has selfishness as its basis—is partial and perverted.

There is but one method of teaching piety, morality, faith, hope, or charity, and that is by proclaiming the Gospel of Christ. He only is the Saviour from sin. Everything that is not simply Christian must inevitably fail. No other method reaches the seat of the disease which is the selfishness of the human heart. Christ said, "Without me ye can do nothing." This applies to all plans for moral improvement. Freemasonry does not teach science. It cannot teach it. No institution can teach science without learned teachers and text books. Freemasonry as such has none of these. Its pretense of teaching science is the grossest of falsehoods. If it taught anything of scientific value it would be open to the world of science. The great majority of the scientific world knows little and care less for its pretended mysteries.

Odd-fellowship professes to teach Friendship, Love and Truth, but it neither does nor can teach them. "Love is of God, and he that loveth is born of God and knoweth God. He that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love!" 1 John 4: 7, 8. It does not require that its members shall be "born of God," and without this they cannot have true love. Nor can they have the "truth," for Christ is the truth, and until men come to know him, they cannot know the truth. Odd-fellowship does, indeed, teach friendship, but it is the "friendship of the world," which "is enmity to God." "For whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is an enemy of God." James 4: 4.

Nor can secret societies teach true temperance. Abstinence from intoxicating drinks is but a small part of temperance. Real reformation is not simply the putting off one evil habit. To be truly reformed is to become "a new creature" in whom the "old things have passed away and all things have become new." 2 Cor. 5: 17. Secret temperance societies do not undertake to make men Christians, and Christianity is not essential to their membership. For this reason, if for no other, they must fail of their professed object. All their vain attempts to reform society are like the prescriptions of the physicians of whom Luke tells us. The poor woman had been sick twelve years. She had spent all that she had on their worthless remedies, and was "nothing better, but rather worse." It was not until she came to Jesus and touched the hem of his garment that she was made whole. See Luke 8: 43, 44. So it is to-day. A touch but of the garment of Christ is worth more than all lodges and orders combined.

A SUMMER WITH THE CHURCHES.—III.

BY PRES. C. A. BLANCHARD.

STREATOR.

This growing little city was my fifth place of labor. It is, like so many of our Illinois towns, a marvel of growth. In 1866 I came to the place where now live fifteen thousand inhabitants. I was teaching at Farm Ridge in the Seminary. Mr. Chandler, a young gentleman whose sister was a pupil in the Seminary, was quite a botanist and geologist. Mr. Williams, for many years County Superintendent of Schools in LaSalle county, lived near Mr. Chandler's, and was an inspiring and helpful teacher. He is now principal of the Streator High School. He, I think, started Mr. Chandler on his road as an independent student.

The last named gentleman asked me if I did not wish to visit the coal mines at "Hard Scrabble." I replied that I should be glad to do so, and on Saturday we made the trip. The Vermillion flowed quietly along the bluff; a few miners' cottages sent their smoke through the winter air; now and again a farm team pulled its load from the pit's mouth up the steep hill, making it a "hard scrabble," indeed. Perhaps as many as twenty-five or thirty people lived here at that time.

In 1877, when I came here to preach for what is now the Congregational church, there were about six thousand inhabitants. Now glass works, additional shafts for coal mining, machine shops, foundries, car works, stores and other industrial enterprises flourished on every side, and a population variously estimated, but I think fully reaching the number first named, here have a home. It is a human hive, with men and women from almost every clime, eagerly pushing and striving for the meat that perishes, the comforts and luxuries of mere earthly existence.

Our meetings were held with the Congregational church, which after a long season of trial is now doing good work and prospering under the lead of Rev. F. G. Alger, its pastor. This brother is entirely devoted to his chosen work, and did all in his power both before and during the series of meetings to make them helpful to the souls for whom Jesus Christ died on the cross.

The morning and afternoon meetings were small. The evening audiences were better and increased somewhat from day to day. Here, as in all the towns I visited, there were a few who were always on hand. Others were present at times. My home was with Bro. J. T. Buckley, who was my host when I first went to Streator to lecture against secret societies in 1874. He gave $100 toward the Carpenter building fund, has been and is an earnest Prohibitionist, a friend of every good cause.

> "And spring came forth her works of gladness to fulfill,
> With all her joyous birds upon the wing;
> I turned from all she brought,
> To those she could not bring."

I never go to this city without feeling how our truest and best friends are being gathered with apostles, prophets, martyrs and saints to the Paradise of God. Here lived that clear-minded, large-hearted, tender, courageous soul, who, while he walked the earth, was called Samuel Plumb. What high service is now appointed him I know not; but do not at all doubt that, freed from the body which was worn by labor and racked with pain, with intellectual and spiritual powers clarified, quickened and energized, he still keeps step to the music of Gods advancing host, and looks forward with perfect faith and love to the grand victory which shall end the reign of sin on earth. He and his were not with us. We missed them greatly. Other true friends of olden times were with us; some weakened by advancing years, but all with loving hearts, and faces toward the sunrise. In the homes of Mr. and Mrs. Laughlin, Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson, Mr. and Mrs. Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Jennings, I was also a guest. With these and others my stay was pleasant, and to leave Streator was like going from home.

was my next tenting place. The Congregational church here is not strong in numbers, and has been sustained for years by the self-sacrifice and determination of a few friends, chief among whom is our friend and brother, J. P. Naramore, Esq. The pastor of the church, Rev. W. D. Eddy, is by birthright a Friend, but at this time is completing his studies in theology at the Seminary in Chicago. He is a single-hearted and devoted man. The pastor of the Methodist church here was in at a number of our meetings, and kindly gave up his Sabbath evening service that we might all worship together. The pastor of the Evangelical church was also in on one occasion, and several soldiers of the Salvation Army were present. I met a number of persons who had been converted in their meetings.

At Streator, also, there was in progress a camp meeting, under the leadership of my friend and neighbor, Bro. Dake. His company of workers are called the "Pentecost Bands." Their meetings were largely attended and good was done. It seems to me that the rise and progress of these Salvation Armies, Pentecost Bands, etc., are a sign of the times. Our ordinary church services are entirely failing to reach a certain class of our population. Let the reason be what it may, the fault lie with whom it will, the fact remains. It is particularly sad for one reason more than others: the ones whom the church is losing are the mechanic class, and here are, on the whole, perhaps, the brightest, soundest set of men in the country. A vigorous, intelligent, moral class of men, but largely irreligious and becoming more so. Why are they outside the church? For various reasons. Their wives and children cannot dress richly; they themselves cannot; pews are sold, and they don't wish to buy; the sermons are not scriptural in character, in many instances eloquence and learning instead of Gospel; the men do not feel that the ministers care for them; Sabbath work keeps the very cream of this population out of church whether they wish to go or not. These and other things are acting, and the lodges are bidding for them on every side, so that the church is robbed of her children. These organizations, the Salvation Army, Pentecost Band, etc., go after men, appeal to them, and, in many instances, win them to Christ. Our churches ought to be doing this same work, saving men with fear, pulling them out of the fire.

Our street meetings were well attended in Downer's Grove. More Christian women came out to help in the singing here than at any other point visited. The town was boiling and bubbling with excitement, and marching clubs, bands and political rallies were the order of the day. It seems strange that men will become so excited over a matter which in six months will have almost faded from their minds. Civil duties should be performed conscientiously, thoughtfully, decidedly. But to see a mere question of office-holding so rouse and excite a people, when no principle is at stake, is strange. The officers and members of these political organizations were very courteous. They did not in any way interfere with our street work. I am grateful to them for this, and only wish that they would be as wide-awake soldiers of the cross as they are members of various political organizations. The Prohibition party was to have a meeting the next week after our meetings closed. I was told that twenty-eight voters now belong to that party in this place, where four years since one vote was cast for St. John. It is no doubt so in thousands of towns.

The attendance at our meetings was, nevertheless, quite good, and the Christian people seemed to hear the word with gladness. One who had wandered away from Christ returned, and I trust other consciences were touched.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN THE TWO SICILIES.

[By E. Strachan Morgan, in the Fortnightly Review, London.]

[Concluded.]

And now look for a moment at one of the villages of this great Sicilian plain where Maffia is most at home. For mile after mile, hour after hour, the traveler has been jolted on a rough, ill-kept road, through a vast treeless plain. Here and there he has passed a rough, shaggy borghese, painfully urging his team of ox and ass, and scraping the soil of his allotment with rude wooden plough; here and there a herd of cattle browsing among the withered weeds and stubble of last year's fallow, or a string of mules laden with sacks of produce for the distant market, but save these up to the foot of the distant hills no sign of human life. The pitiless sun has burnt everything to an even brown. On the top of a small hill stands the village. Half-a-dozen large stone houses—half prison, half palace—built on the model of the great mansions of an Italian town, occupied by the gabelloti of the surrounding estates and the few families that form the ruling caste, domineer over the hundred or two miserable hovels where the rest of the population find shelter. Few of these huts have more than one room, hardly any more than a single story. In one corner of the unpaved earthen floor, reeking with ammoniacal odors, lies a heap of straw or a few sheepskins on which the human occupants sleep—father and mother, sons and daughters, pell-mell beside the brutes that share the house. A single opening serves for a door, window, chimney, and for discharging dirt into the common dust-bin, the street, where the population squats or lounges among the piles of vegetable and animal refuse. Hardly a man is to be seen, for most of the able-bodied work in the fields, five, or six, or eight miles off, and return home scarcely one night in the week. Notice the ill-fed bodies and the brutish faces of the women and children, the heritage of generations of immorality, from which traces of beauty dimly peer, deformed by squalor and vice; "the idiot head (dolicocephalia occipitale) predominates. Adultery, incest, uxorcide, usually by poison, prostitution, are terribly frequent, and wrought shamelessly in the light of day as though by cretins."

It would take the pen of a Swift to describe the lives of these Yahoos, and even the imagination of a Swift would halt behind the bare directness of official reports. One is not surprised to hear that a common threat among these people is: "Ti aiu a mangiari lu cori di tia mi uni aiu a biviri lu sangu—I'll eat your heart and drink your blood;" that a mother will often punish her child by biting it till the blood flows. Suddenly they all scuttle from the street into their dwellings as, with a clatter of hoofs and loud shouting, a gabelloto spurs up to his house followed by a score of attendants, each with a musket at saddle bow.

The gabelloto lives in the house, and rents the estate that belonged once to a feudal noble. Like his predecessor he holds himself above the law. "He is convinced that professional men and officials exist simply to serve as instruments for satisfying his daily wants and grudges, and looks on them as mere freedmen. His field-hands he hardly recognizes as human-beings. He detests the present Government, though he condescends to act as grand-elector in order to keep up his political importance and his authority in his village; but he cannot understand why the police should trouble themselves to protect the lower orders from the violence of one of his caste." The chief men of his retinue are influential members of the Maffia, who have won the respect of their neighbors by the reputation at any rate of a couple of homicides. Their ostensible duty is to preserve his herds from the cattle-thieves, his cornfields and barns from accidental or incendiary fires; they have usually been recommended or forced on him by the Maffia (unless, indeed, as is often the case, he is himself a recognized member of it), which thus provides easily-earned wages and plentiful opportunities of peculation for its members, and the mere prestige of their name and position will guard the property under their care more effectually than the untiring watchfulness of an honest man; while the proprietors rest satisfied that the Society will punish far more promptly and surely than the police any attempt by outsiders to plunder the property it protects. But another not less important part of their duties is to support their patron in all quarrels with his neighbors of his own class. These quarrels, originating often in old standing family feuds, fought out openly in former times with sword and pistol, have now developed into no less bitter political rivalry. Two parties can no more live peaceably side by side than could Guelphs and Ghibellines in the Florentine republic. One must crush the other utterly, so as to be able to monopolize all the spoils of local office, and by the influence of the deputy which it elects deter the Prefetto from looking too curiously into any irregularities that may be committed under his jurisdiction. The struggle for the municipal purse is more ignoble and more injurious to public morals than even the family disputes of former days, and of them the Maffia, with its terrible power, is practically the arbiter. Willingly or unwillingly, the wealthy gabelloto must need support it with his influence, providing its members with employment and wages or pushing them into municipal office according to their wishes and qualifications, and winking at the harboring of stolen cattle among his herds. The penalty of resistence is theft, arson, and finally murder.

Before the gabelloto can market his crops, which have thus been watched from seed-time to harvest by the Maffia, he, like the smaller farmer of the coast line, must pass through another form of Maffia, not less powerful, that honeycombs the large coast towns, for nowhere is Maffia more developed than where misery is less pressing, and it reigns supreme in the concha d'oro of Palermo, where the lemon-groves yield a net profit of over £50 per acre, and every peasant proprietor might live in comfort or luxury. Here it organizes powerful "rings" in the produce markets, dictating prices, "boycotting" dealers to whom it objects, and exacting commissions on all sales concluded. The penalty of disobedience to its orders is death, and in the rare cases in which it is needful so to uphold its authority, an alibi is arranged beforehand so effectually that conviction or even suspicion is seldom possible. An example will sufficiently explain how things are done. Soon after harvest a man, ostensibly a produce-broker, will introduce himself to a farmer and say with all show of respect, "Sir, a customer has instructed me to buy such and such goods. I thought of you, and have come to propose the sale. In fact, to prevent you from losing the market, I have ventured to close and take the earnest money." "At what price do I sell?" the owner asks mildly. "At such a price, sir." "But, my good man, that's below the current rates," as indeed it is. "Oh, no, you are mistaken; and anyway, you would not have me break my word to my client for a few pounds. However, if you refuse—" But the seller knows far too well what the consequences would be, and in nine cases out of ten submits to be fleeced rather than incur the resentment of the honest broker and his friends.

Though, as has been said, the Maffia is not itself an organized secret society, yet not the less the Maffiosi in a given locality do occasionally join themselves to a closer union, with oaths of secrecy, code of laws, hierarchy of offices, common purse, and fixed right of admission.

Far more interesting is the account given of the Mano Fraterna or Fratellanza (Brotherhood), which had its headquarters in Favara and spread over the whole province of Girgenti. Here we have a concrete example in which, as in a microcosm, the general principles on which the Maffia is based, and which so often elude even shrewd observers by their Protean mutability, may be seen at work reduced to definite system.

If the origin of the society, the first germ of which was apparently planted in 1879 by a group of coatti (transported convicts), released from one of the small islands of the Sicilian Archipelago, remains somewhat obscure, its aims and methods were brought to the light of day both by oral testimony and by a copy of the "statutes" that were seized on one of the "brothers," and put in evidence during the trial. In the communes where the brotherhood most flourished "family hatreds" transmitted from father to son, and as in the Middle Ages, ranging the whole community on one side or the other, develop into feuds that find a battle-field in local politics, and private grudges embitter the opposition of public life. The more ambitious and unscrupulous of the party leaders, seeing a useful weapon in the passionate tempers of the mob, and the criminal classes, hoping for impunity behind the shield of official protection, came to an understanding with each other, and in this congenial soil the Mano Fraterna struck deep roots. Even honest men and good citizens were driven, lest a worse thing should come upon them, to seek protection for their property and their lives, of free will or under compulsion, by membership in the Fratellanza. The aims of the brotherhood were neither political reform nor socialism, nor yet mere robbery, but the gratification of the lust of power and of idle affluence in its members by appropriating municipal offices and municipal purse, and by providing for its members easy work and good wages in public or private employment. The means employed were terrorism based on the death of all who resisted its orders. The events that led to the discovery of the society were very characteristic. In 1884 Camilleri, "a brother," having fallen under suspicion of betraying the secrets of the "brotherhood," his own uncle, Martello, was charged with the punishment of the traitor, and with the aid of four brothers strangled him. Stung by remorse, he confessed all, and then fearing the vengeance of the "brotherhood," and doubting the power of the Government to protect him, he hanged himself in prison.

In 1885 the police drew in their nets, and it was found that there were grounds for proceeding against more than twelve hundred. Of these, about a thousand were allowed to slip through the meshes, "lest the very extent of the contagion should make punishment impossible." Thirty-two ringleaders, accused of "more than ten murders," reserved for future trial, have not yet been disposed of, and a hundred and sixty-nine, including one schoolmaster, one priest, a few tradesmen, and a large majority of miners and agricultural laborers, charged with the minor offenses of "illegal association," were tried at Girgenti, in the church of St. Anna, transformed for the occasion into a law court. The trial lasted from March 2 to March 30, 1885; ten only of the accused were acquitted and the rest were condemned to various terms of imprisonment. The only interesting figure among the accused, and the only one who had joined the association from public motives, and whose hands were comparatively clean, was the priest, Padre Don Angelo, a man of education, a Greek and Latin scholar, and an eloquent preacher. He spoke well in his own defense, trying to make out that he was the victim of the jealousy of municipal parties. He had some years before been prosecuted on a charge of instigating to assassination, but the prosecution had failed for want of evidence, and he complained of being now put on his trial as a mere gregario (subordinate). Like a true Sicilian, he would gladly have gratified his vanity by sharing with the ten ringleaders the more serious charge. He had long before taken part in local politics as protector of his ignorant and unenfranchised parishioners, and having thus made powerful enemies, joined the "brotherhood," intending to use it, as it would seem, for political ends; but once in he was unable to keep himself clean from its lawless and selfish operations, and he was accordingly condemned to two years' imprisonment.

The statutes of the "brotherhood" regulated: (1.) The relations of members to officers; (2.) The duties of members to each other; (3.) The admission of new members. The officers included two head centers, one cashier, who collected the admission fees and monthly dues, and as many captains of ten and captains of five as might be required. To these absolute obedience was due, though important questions were decided at general meetings. Members were bound to stand by each other on all occasions, whether by force or by providing evidence in law courts, and an elaborate code of signals was arranged enabling members to recognize each other under all circumstances. The forms of initiation, which usually took place in an old limekiln, an abandoned quarry, or some similar hiding-place, were singular. The presence of three old members besides the neophyte was necessary. The three "brothers" took off their hats, then the senior of them tied a thread tightly round the right forefinger of the "son," pricked it with his knife and let a few drops of blood fall on the print of a saint. The print was then set on fire and placed in the left hand of the "son," who blew away the ashes, repeating the formula, "I swear on my honor to be true to the brotherhood as the brotherhood is true to me. As the saint and these few drops of my blood are burned, so am I ready to give all my blood for the brotherhood; as the ashes and blood cannot return again as they were, so I cannot abandon the brotherhood." Sometimes the ceremony ended in the "son" firing a pistol at a crucifix to symbolize his readiness for any crime, to take any life, at the command of the king. The neophyte was after this recognized as a full brother, and the whole party adjourned to a tavern to drink the toast of the brotherhood: "Educi lu vinu ma assai echiu duci e lu sangu di li Christiani—Sweet is wine, but far sweeter is the blood of Christians." By way of comment, it is perhaps enough to add two lines of statistics from the same official publication. The murders in England, in 1884, numbered one hundred and seventy. In the single province of Palermo, for the same period, they were four hundred and thirty-four.

A bomb was thrown into the Prohibition tent at Manheim, Pa., amid an audiance of 500 persons, and was barely extinguished without explosion.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Are we growing frivolous?—A proposition—Geo. Ames and his gifts to Romanism—The anti-Romanist candidate—Will Massachusetts anti secretists support a Mason for governor?—A singular and startling fact in regard to Mr Davis's prosecutors—Free preaching and the Franklin Park Commissioners—The Italian element.

Said an intelligent lady to me the other day, "I am so sick of seeing our young people go by in piebald suits and with racquets in their hands, as if their sole business in life was to play lawn tennis."

Her remark set me to wondering if Americans, as a people, are not growing frivolous. This childish mania for games nearly forces an affirmative answer. The serious earnestness of the generation that produced our Emersons and Alcotts and Lowells has small affinity with one that treats a yacht race or a base-ball contest as if it was an affair of the greatest national importance. That "iron band of poverty, of necessity, of austerity," that made Emerson, when a boy of ten, "rise before six and help make the fires," then after school was over and the chores done, "have some time to play and eat my supper," after which he and his brothers "say their hymns and chapters, and then take turns in reading Rollins,"—that simple, unvaried, daily routine of work and study recorded in his Memoirs, helped to evolve the future Sage of Concord.

Forty Chinamen, members of the Clarendon Street Baptist Sunday-school, which has between eighty and one hundred Chinese pupils, held a picnic at Franklin Park last Monday, in which they enjoyed to the full their national amusement of kite-flying. It was said to be a very pretty sight as the bright-colored paper kites floated in the air. When base ball is "done to death," should that happy period ever arrive, and we cast about for a game to take its place, the writer would move that we follow the example of the Celestials and try kite-flying, which is a great deal more picturesque, and involves no danger of broken heads in either participants or spectators.

Governor Ames was lately called upon to aid the Ebenezer Baptist church, whose members, hard-working colored people, have already paid $5,000, and hoped with a little outside assistance to extinguish the debt still remaining on their church edifice. The governor refused; he had no money. But directly after this applicant had left appeared another, an Irishman, who asked for a donation for a Roman Catholic charity. He instantly wrote his check for $100. The above facts are taken from the Free Press, which also contains the following clipping from the Globe of Aug. 15:

NORTH EASTON, AUG. 14.—Governor Ames has presented his check for $500 to Rev. Father McCombe, pastor of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, and his check for $100 to Rev. L. B. Codding, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church.

It will thus be seen, as the Free Press pertinently observes, that in the governor's place of residence Rome gets five times as much from him as Protestantism. Like Cleveland, the whole secret of the matter is he wants another term of office, and the anti-Romanist party are already naming Gen. Wm. F. Draper, born in Lowell, a mill-boy in his youth, like Gen. Banks, and with a most honorable military record, as their candidate for the governorship next fall. Gov. Ames's Masonry ought to make him distasteful to all anti-secret voters. Gen. Draper's attitude on that question is yet to learn. It is certain that there is to be a great battle fought with Romanism; and it would not at all surprise me, indeed, I believe it is what the prophecies of Scripture teach us to expect, if Masonry and Jesuitism should gloss over their family quarrel, and join in unholy alliance once more, as they have so often joined in the past. It may not be generally known that, while while ordinary Roman Catholics are forbidden by their church to join a secret society, Jesuits are free to become Masons, or anything else, if by so doing they can advance the papal cause. This is only an application of that infamous principle which is the Alpha and Omega of Jesuitism: that the end sanctifies the means.

Our Masonic governor, who had the power to release Mr. Davis, but refused to exercise it, may well ponder the singular and startling fact, that the four most directly concerned in his arrest and imprisonment have all been called before the Judgment bar of Him who has said, "Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm." Alderman Hall, chairman of the committee which denied permits to preach on the Common; Timothy J. Dacy, assistant district attorney for Suffolk county, who prosecuted Mr. Davis and moved for sentence against him; Wm. P. Carroll, a leading Democratic ward politician and an Irish Roman Catholic rum-seller, who in spite of his criminal career was one of Boston's most prominent legislators; Judge John W. Bacon of the Supreme Court, who gave sentence against Mr. Davis,—all four have been called to render up their eternal account in the short space of a few months. Who can say that this is not, indeed, "the finger of God?"

That the attitude of the city government towards preaching has not altered, may be seen from some correspondence which has lately passed between the Harvard Congregational church of Dorchester, and the Honorable Commissioners of Franklin Park, Boston. The committee in behalf of the church respectfully asked these gentlemen "for a permit, as their field of special labor is in the neighborhood of Franklin Park, to hold a series of religious meetings in some proper place in the park for an hour, or thereabouts, on each Sunday afternoon in July and August of the current year." They go on to state that "many resort to the park on Sundays who have no place of stated religious worship, and who do not feel able to pay the pew rental in our churches, but would gladly attend some free religious services in the park." Also that "many might attend and be benefited, who have been tempted into criminal and irreligious courses of life."

This eminently reasonable, and certainly very humble, appeal received the following reply:

In reply to your request of July 23, for permission to hold religious services at Franklin Park, I beg to state that at a meeting of the board to-day, it was voted that it is inexpedient to grant permits for such purposes. Yours respectfully,
GEO. F. CLARK, Sec'y.

Surely nothing could be plainer or more explicit. A public demonstration is talked of on the occasion of Mr. Davis's release from jail. I hope it will be big enough and enthusiastic enough to show that though Boston's Puritan blood, to parody some lines of Whittier's,

"Moves slow and calm and cool,
She cannot stoop her chainless neck,
The Jesuit's slave and tool."

The Congressional Committee, appointed to investigate violations of the contract law, are expected to come to Boston soon. The Italian element is fast making an Italian quarter of the North End. It is said that there are no paupers among them, or any applications for aid. They are extremely ignorant; they are Romanists; they are hot-tempered, vindictive, and as ready to use the knife in a quarrel as a Malay, but they have their redeeming traits. They are not habitats of our police courts, they are generally temperate. These Italian peasants, who labor on our railroads and water-works, are the countrymen of Dante and Mazzini, and in their veins runs that strong love of popular government which made possible the revolution of '48, and twenty years later stripped the pope of his temporal possessions to make a united Italy. It is possible that they may yet become an integral part of our population, and looking towards this contingency, it is well not to take counsel of prejudice, but try, as far as it lies in educating and Christianizing agencies, to make them good citizens.

E. E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31, 1888.

It was believed that the present week would be a blank in the record of the House of Representatives, from a legislative standpoint, because of the difficulty attending all efforts to secure not only the presence but the continuous attendance of a quorum. On Saturday last 127 telegrams were sent to absentees demanding their attendance. About fifteen of these failed of delivery. More than a dozen telegraphed to have their leaves extended on account of sickness. Fifty or sixty sent word they would start for Washington at once, and the rest appeared in the House that morning. The telegrams sent out were paid for by the Government, but the replies of the members were at their own expense.

The President's message to Congress on the Fisheries question, requesting further power to retaliate upon Canada, was the sensation of the week at the Capitol. Almost without exception the Democrats endorse the President's position, while the Republicans criticise it severely. Speaking of the charge generally made against President Cleveland, that he has suddenly taken a new position on the Canadian question, Mr. Crain, of Texas, who was a member of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs in the last Congress, said: "It is exactly the position he took two years ago, when the subject of a retaliation act was engaging the attention of both Houses of Congress. Every one remembers that there were two retaliation bills—a House bill and a Senate bill. The House bill was a thoroughly comprehensive, non-intercourse measure. The Senate bill was the weak milk and water measure that became a law, and is the retaliation act of March 3, 1887, that is being so much talked about. I remember very distinctly that the President then expressed to me and other Democratic members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs exactly the same opinion which in his message he now expresses in regard to the retaliation act.

During the last week the District of Columbia authorities have swooped down on 110 bar-keepers, whose licenses had been refused, and closed their places of business.

The statement that President Cleveland had sent his check for $10,000 to the Democratic Campaign Committee was very generally discussed here, and though the amount is much larger than any previous candidate for the Presidency has ever contributed toward the expense of his election, it was generally believed that the statement was on good authority. The amount is not only larger than any single candidate ever gave to a campaign fund before, but it is larger than all the Republican Presidents contributed in twenty-five years. *

—It is reported that the Iowa Masonic Grand Lodge lately met at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and adopted a rule that "the sale of intoxicating liquors is an intentional violation of the laws of Iowa, and the penalty of convictions therefor shall be expulsion." After six years the Masonic lodge has succumbed to the inevitable, and makes its laws agree with the law of the State. But a Mason expelled in Iowa for this offense can go across to Nebraska, Wisconsin, or Illinois and find no law to interfere with his Masonic right to sell liquor, and can be restored to the lodge.

REFORM NEWS.

WASHINGTON HEADQUARTER NOTES.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 31, 1888.

Three men have just left the office. One, an M. E. minister who spent an hour with our books, principally with the "Broken Seal." He remarked, "It reads as smoothly as a novel." The second was a brisk, well-to-do appearing man, who stepped in with the inquiry, "Have you the minutes of the Syracuse convention?" Stepping to the shelf I produced the document. Glancing at the book-case he said, "What have you here?" I replied, "Thirty-three degrees of Scotch Masonry," laying the books on the desk. Meantime his eye caught "Masonic Outrages." "How much for these four books?" he inquired. Naming the price, he dropped the money on the desk, and was out and off almost before I could supply him with a catalogue, tract and a copy of the Cynosure. The third was a fine-appearing young man, who had but recently taken his first degree in Masonry. He was seeking "more light," and remained for a few minutes in conversation. He listened attentively and with apparent candor; bought a three-degree expose, and promised to examine it and then report to me further on.

I am satisfied that the craft are on the alert, and using their best endeavors to prevent the renting of rooms and otherwise to hedge up our way, but every day brings with it tokens of God's favor, and we feel an assurance of success in spite of all hindrances. The laws are very stringent against distribution of circulars, bills, etc., which the police construe as including tracts of all kinds. I have, however, quietly distributed tracts occasionally without interruption, and find such work invariably followed by an increased number of callers at the office. I trust Mrs. Stoddard's work among the children and poor people in this neighborhood, and the efforts to reach all classes here will not be forgotten in the prayers of our Christian helpers.

HE WOULD NOT DEFEND HIS LODGE.

HOPEWELL, O., Aug. 29, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—This finds me in Perry county, a number of miles from any town, the nearest is named above. After a month of city life, one can fully appreciate a visit to the "green-clad hills." Contemplating the beautiful and grand in nature almost involuntarily brings the Christian nearer nature's God.

Yesterday I rode for the first time on the new railroad, the Columbus and Eastern. For first class accommodations and charges I can recommend it. An hour's ride brought us to the station of Thornport, from whence I was conveyed to the residence of Rev. M. R. Walter, pastor of the Lutheran church, Thornville, where a cordial reception awaited me. Both Rev. Walter and his excellent wife assured me of their sympathy. The day was spent in finding those interested, securing their subscriptions to the paper and ascertaining their wish as to lectures. In the subscriptions received the Lutheran, United Presbyterian, Methodist, and Reformed churches were represented. It seemed to be the unanimous opinion of those consulted that lectures should be given in the near future, and steps were taken to secure a hall.

The Methodist minister (Rev. Marks) seemed to take the least interest in my work of any visited. He declared himself to be a Mason and in sympathy with the order. Said he had given the subject considerable thought. When I suggested that he assemble the people and give them his reasons for being a Mason, as he would his reasons for being a Christian or Prohibitionist (I agreeing to give my objections to the order), he replied that he thought the lodge a neutral society that did not make one any worse or any better to join, and he did not think the matter of enough importance to present his reasons to the people for belonging. In plain English, he was sensible enough to know that discussion, candid and fair, meant death to the lodge, and as he did not wish to sacrifice his reputation as a preacher of the Gospel, he would let it alone. Reader, what will God say of such watchmen on the walls of Zion?

Leaving Thornville with thanks to God in my heart for the friends I found true to principle, I soon arrived at Mt. Perry and made my way to Bro. James McCullough's, where I knew from past experience I would be made welcome. Bro. Martin, present pastor of the United Presbyterian church here, met me on the road and renewed an acquaintance made at his former home, New Salem. The reason I say he renewed the acquaintance is that, in the multitude of those whom I have met since at his home, his smiling countenance had almost been forgotten, though his kind hospitality could never be. A number who had formerly subscribed with me for the Cynosure, renewed, expressing approbation of the work we were doing.

After my lecture in Mt. Perry over a year ago, Rev. Patton, then pastor of the United Presbyterian church in which I spoke, was attacked by a Masonic doctor, and after a number of railing accusations, was threatened with personal combat. Being assured that he could have perfect liberty for such combat if it was desired, the Dr. concluded "discretion the better part of valor" and subsided. I think his decision wise.

Time forbids a detailed account of my visits today. Suffice it to say I have met no serious obstacles, and find to-night that I have taken seven subscriptions to the paper. Were it not for the Zanesville fair and the absence of Rev. Cannon of the Covenanter church, I should have lectures at this time, but it seems best to wait. I am at present the guest of Samuel Johnston, an old line Covenanter. I go, D. V., to-morrow to White Cottage, thence to Zanesville, and as the way may open, returning to Columbus to work some at the Centennial.

HOSPITALITY AND SYMPATHY.

THE SWEDISH BRETHREN GIVE THE IOWA AGENT A WELCOME HEARING.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After my call on pastor Ostlin on Monday, Aug. 20, I went to Corning and called upon a U. P. minister there. I also went out into the country and visited one of the elders of the church. I then went to Lenox, making a few calls upon members of the U. P. congregation at Adams by the way.

After visiting and conferring with Rev. Cox, the pastor of the U. P. church of Lenox, I went several miles into the country to see Bro. John Plummer, who is earnestly opposed to secret societies, and a member of the M. E. church. Bro. Plummer expressed his anxiety that I should speak on the relation of the secret society system to Christianity, on the Sabbath. I told him that if he would get the M. E. church of Lenox for me to speak in, I would do so, believing I could harmonize an arrangement made with Rev. Cox.

The pastor of the M. E. church was away at conference, and there was no arrangement for filling the pulpit that Sabbath. So the coast seemed clear, and Bro. Plummer felt confident. The first trustee spoken to readily gave his consent. He thought he should like to hear such a discourse. But the second, a Mason and a man of wealth, refused; and so hot was he in his opposition that the first withdrew his consent. So Bro. Plummer was obliged to relinquish his purpose.

However, as there was a desire that the fact should be brought out that the secret lodge system is a Satanic conspiracy to supplant Christ by educating our young men in a deistical ritual of worship, I took up the matter in my Sabbath evening sermon at the U. P. church, and showed how the Masonic plan of salvation conflicts with the Gospel plan of salvation by Christ. If I did not put leaven enough into the meal to work until all is leavened, a little more can be added on a future occasion. Bro. Cox assured me of a welcome if I would return again next month, when the U. P. Synod of Iowa meets with the church of Lenox.

I had an engagement to return on the Monday following this Sabbath's work to Stanton, in Montgomery county, to accompany pastor Ostlin to the district meeting of the Swedish Lutheran churches of southwest Iowa, to be held with the Fremont church in Page county. So, after securing two subscribers to the Cynosure Monday morning, I left Lenox and returned to Stanton. From Stanton I was conveyed across the country to Fremont, calling by the way to visit the Orphans' Home, of the Iowa conference of the Evangelical Swedish Lutheran church. I took note of the fact that the Iowa Swedes did not have to become Odd-fellows in order that their orphan children be cared for.

On Wednesday, the second day of the meeting, the church, which will seat about six hundred persons, was filled. I was invited to occupy the pulpit on Wednesday evening, as they wished a discourse against secret societies, and a deep interest was manifest.

Rev. Widen, pastor of the church at Essex, Page county, invited me to address his young people, to fortify them against the wiles of secret societies. The young people's meeting was on Friday night. The meeting was opened by the principal of the public school of Essex, who is a Presbyterian, with Scripture reading and prayer. One essay was read, and the remainder of the evening was given to me.

On Saturday I returned by rail to Stanton. Pastor Ostlin's desire that his whole congregation should hear my discourse against secret societies led him to give me the Sabbath morning hour.

The communicants of pastor Ostlin's church number between five and six hundred, and his church will seat about twelve hundred; and in pleasant weather, on Sabbath morning, it is filled. It threatened rain the Sabbath I preached against the secret orders, but a large congregation was present. At the request of the principal of the public schools I preached in the evening to the American people. The school building was to be the place of meeting, but pastor Ostlin said, "Have it in the church," which invitation was thankfully accepted.

I began a canvass for the Cynosure among the people on Monday, and secured fourteen new subscribers. Pastor Ostlin has been taking the paper for some time. Pastor Widen, of Essex, subscribed while I was there. Bro. Hagg took me around in his carriage to see the people.

As the hands of Moses were held up by Aaron and Hurr, so have my hands been held up by these Swedish brethren, and my heart greatly encouraged and strengthened for the work. The truth, as it is in Jesus, will prevail over the error and falsehood of the lodge system. Let us have your earnest prayers and hearty co-operation, brethren of Iowa, that the coming triumph may be hastened.

C. F. HAWLEY.

THE COLPORTEUR WORK.

FINAL REPORTS.

The agents of the N. C. A., whose field was Indiana, present the following report:

We left Chicago on the 2d of July by the Panhandle road, and returned by the lake on the 23d of August. Our route is sufficiently indicated by the names of the county seats we visited: Crown Point, Logansport, Marion, Bluffton, Fort Wayne, Auburn, Albion, Goshen and Berrien Springs. In our work we distributed tracts, took subscriptions to the Cynosure, and held meetings.

We gave out about forty thousand pages of tracts, making in many places house-to-house distribution. We put them in wagons and carriages from the country, sowed them on one excursion train, and scattered them in one convention from which they were carried into a dozen States.

We took sixty-five subscriptions to the Cynosure. In canvassing, we met in conversation on the subject secretism, ministers, teachers and business men. We carried with us, to prove our words, Mackey's Ritualist and Sickles's Monitor. We met no Masons who knew, before we showed them, that the Bible was mutilated in the charge to the Royal Arch Mason.

We held meetings in three different places: once in a U. B. church, and twice in Wesleyan churches. At the U. B. church our audience was quite large, and there was some "talk back." This helped us. We just about made our expenses. The Cynosure was almost money to us. It settled our board bills, paid for our beds, re-soled our shoes, got our photographs taken, and did whatever it could for our comfort. In money our expenses would be about $73 and our receipts about $63. We lessened our expenses by traveling over two hundred miles on foot.

BRO. DAVIDSON THREATENED AGAIN.

THE DELUGE AT NEW ORLEANS.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Aug. 21, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I returned from Plaquemine Monday evening. The severest rainstorm visited southern Louisiana Sunday night that we have experienced since the dark days of slavery.

I spent last week at the pleasant home of Rev. B. Dorsey, of Dorseyville, and preached at his church, the St. John Baptist, Friday night. I visited Bayou Goula Thursday, and expected to preach at the Pilgrim church, Rev. Geo. W. Davis, pastor, but wet weather and mud prevented the services. I returned to Plaquemine Saturday, and received a message from one of the leading colored gentlemen of the place, to the effect that a committee of white and black Odd-fellows had consulted together over my anti-secret course in that town, and they (the committee) denounced such course, and if I did not desist in opposing lodgery as I had heretofore, they would get behind me and run me out of the town. I obeyed the lodge orders by preaching an anti-lodge sermon at St. Matthew Baptist church Sabbath at 11 A. M., and had an appointment to preach a second in the evening at Pilgrim Rest Baptist church, but the rain and storm prevented. Although I am informed that this very gentleman and other Odd-fellows have heretofore given out that all I said against the lodge was false, they have now in plain words acknowledged all I have said to be true by sending me these two warnings (one in June and this one) not to preach nor distribute tracts against their lodges.

The storm Sunday night did great damage in and about Plaquemine, Bayou Goula and Dorseyville. Great trees were uprooted, and several houses partly blown down, including several sugar mills. I was told that one man was killed and several head of mules and horses. The steamer Keokuk, plying between this city and Bayou Sara, was sunk between Plaquemine and Baton Rouge, but fortunately the crew and passengers escaped. The telegraph wires were blown down, and Plaquemine was for awhile cut off from communication with the outside world. The sugar-cane and rice crops along the coast will suffer greatly from the storm.

This city is inundated. From Claiborne street to the lake, all looks like one great lake of water. The old rum-lodge Democratic party have managed things so nicely for the past ten years until there is not a drainage machine in running order up to this hour, 5 P. M. Tuesday, and the suffering of the poor people in the rear of the city is almost unendurable. Many of them have been forced to leave their houses in skiffs, and escape for their lives. The church in Port Barrow, on the T. & P. R. R., was blown completely down.

The Odd-fellows gave an excursion from here to Mobile, Ala., a few weeks ago, and I am informed they had a fight on the train. This is not surprising, when the Grand Lodge that met in Plaquemine not long since gave a lodge ball on Saturday night, and it lasted until Sunday morning. But what is worse is to see so many of our anti-lodge ministers taking such active parts in these abominable affairs. When will our brethren come to the light and see how these railroad excursions are draining their poor race, and indirectly helping to lower wages? May God's ministers cry aloud against this monster of iniquity.

THURSDAY, AUG. 23.—The water is gradually falling. The draining machines have been slowly running since Tuesday night. The weather is yet very heavy and threatening. Some of the poor water-stricken people are being frightened by some of the inhuman hoodlums telling them that the astronomer predicts another storm in a short time. Provisions have taken a rise since this terrible disaster. The probabilities are if the yellow fever has not yet reached New Orleans it may break out since the water has gone down. The city press gives terrible accounts of the suffering poor in the rear of the city; but notwithstanding these calamities, the secretists are doing all they can to make other proselytes; yet they are doing nothing to relieve these suffering poor. In the Garden District of the city the water has been as far as South Rampart St. I have been walking about the city for these three days, trying to learn what the lodges are doing in the way of relief, and get as exact account as possible of the suffering poor. I have not been able to go further back than St. Jane St., as yet, in this part of the city, and Magnolia St. in the upper part, and not farther back than Dryades St. in Jefferson city. Revs. A. S. Jackson, H. C. Green, T. J. Johnson, and other prominent ministers are under water. May God bless these poor people and save them from the secret lodge and excursion serpents. Amen.

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A TESTIMONY IN FLORIDA.

MILTON, Fla., Aug. 20, 1888.

DEAR EDITOR:—For some months I have been circulating your tracts and loaning your books, with not very marked results, but some good seed has been sown which I hope will bring forth fruit. The more I learn of Masonry, the more I am ashamed of Freemason preachers, who preach Christ in the pulpit, and the more I am ashamed of myself, that I have not done more to spread the light and expose this iniquity. Nearly all the preachers here are bound by Masonic oaths. The rest nearly all give silent consent. This is a place of a thousand or so white inhabitants, and four churches.

The Baptists lately held a protracted meeting, called here a glorious revival; about eighty accessions, a part by letter; some of them having held their letters ten to fifteen years. To the best of my knowledge and belief it was a superficial work, like all other Southern revivals I ever attended. If one of the new converts gives evidence of a saving change of heart I would be glad to know it and rejoice with him. I attended a majority of the meetings. The new baptistry added eclat to the occasion, and drew crowded audiences. The presiding evangelist, Rev. Mr. Bass of Evergreen, Ala., enjoyed the distinction of being a Freemason, and referred to it more than once in the pulpit. I hope and pray that but few more years will pass till public opinion will place Freemason preachers below par.

If such a being as a Freemason Christian exists, he must know that holiness and the principles of Masonry are antagonistic; that they cannot possibly co-exist in the same heart, unless a man can at the same time serve God and mammon.

I have put out a few questions which neither Masonic preachers nor their apologists dare answer. Thus: Is any man entitled to our confidence and respect as a true Christian, whose life and character are controlled by Masonic oaths and public opinion?

Is not the man a hypocrite who preaches Christ and him crucified in the pulpit, he being a member of the Masonic fraternity, who reject Christ in their ritual and prayers?

For those who will not examine the subject: Is not the man who will not know the truth equally as guilty in the sight of God as the man who knew his duty, and did it not?

Let us pray the Lord to break the spell that binds the churches to the Mason lodge, and not only pray, but work for it. Up with the right, down with the wrong. Truly yours, J. MARSH.

THE POSITION OF DR. BROOKS.

DALE, N. Y., Aug. 27, 1888.

Editor Cynosure,

DEAR BROTHER:—I send you the open letter of Bro. M. N. Butler of Avalon, Mo., for publication. He raises the question whether those who are conscientiously opposed to voting for lodge men for office can consistently support Dr. Brooks for Vice President, he being a demitted Freemason.

Bro. Butler quotes Dr. Brooks's language in regard to the lodge as follows: "I have no prejudice to secret societies." One of Webster's definitions of "prejudice" is, "A previous bent or bias of mind for or against any person or thing." Now, charity would believe the Dr. intended to say he had no bias of mind for secret societies. On the other hand, Bro. Butler says: "Thus he candidly avows, like a man, that his heart is in harmony with that demit," and "that he has no prejudice against secret societies."

Can anti-secretists vote the Prohibition electoral ticket? I think we can, under protest. We can most heartily vote for that grand man, free from the lodge, Clinton B. Fisk, and protest against being compelled at the same time, by present laws, to vote for John A. Brooks, a Mason. Yours for Christ and reform, F. W. CAPWELL.

F. W. Capwell, Esq.,

MY DEAR SIR AND BROTHER:—Have just read the Cynosure of the 26th inst. [July], your letter with the rest. We are in a pickle on Dr. Brooks, a demitted Freemason. I have a copy of the constitution of the Grand Lodge of Missouri, and it tells me that a demit is a recommendation that the holder is a good and true Freemason, worthy the fellowship and the confidence of the fraternity the globe around. Unless Dr. Brooks has been suspended or expelled since the issuance of that demit (and he has not), then the cold fact is he is a Mason in good and regular standing. He is now a member, so to speak, of every Masonic lodge in the United States, and in the world; is under the jurisdiction of the order, and any lodge where he may chance to be has certain jurisdiction over him, until he gives up that demit, or voucher of good standing, and surrenders his Masonic standing to a particular individual lodge.

But Mr. Brooks is frank enough. Though not now an affiliated member, with its burdens and responsibilities, but a demitted Mason, with all its benefits and reciprocal aid, yet, for fear some thick-headed Anti-mason should charge him with being a seceder, or some mystic brother challenge his good standing in the order, he adds: "I have no prejudice to secret societies." Thus he candidly avows, like a man, that his heart is in harmony with that demit. He can visit any Masonic lodge at pleasure.

I have not yet signed the "Anti Secrecy League," and if its pledge will allow men to vote for an adhering Mason, who has no prejudice to secret societies," then I will not be in haste to sign. Remember, I do not dispute Mr. Brooks's non-affiliation. Thousands of adhering Freemasons are non-affiliates, and every well-informed Anti-mason knows as much. We look to the esteemed chairman of the American party for light. We don't want to be hasty, neither over-scrupulous politically. If our brethren want to sign a "league" not to vote for secrecy men, and then vote for Dr. Brooks, we prefer not to sign, then we will violate no pledge, at least, should we vote for him. The writer has made it a rule not to knowingly vote for members of secret orders. We did this without any individual pledging, except as every individual is responsible for the actions and resolutions of a caucus or a convention. In behalf of myself, and others, we would all be pleased to have a concise opinion on this specific case from our honored chairman through either the Cynosure or the American, or both. It will be time for individual opinions from the rank and file later along, after our leaders have spoken.

Wishing you abundant success, I am, as ever, yours for right and good government,

M. N. BUTLER.

PITH AND POINT.

THE LODGE FIEND.

I have taken three degrees in a lodge, but quit it for good. I was notified to meet with them, but did not. Bad luck has been my lot ever since. First my dwelling burned one night; myself and family just got out in time to save our lives. Another night my stables, horses, harness, farming tools, includlng a threshing machine, wheat and oat stacks were one smoking mass. Beside these two accidents I am game for boycotting, for I can hardly sell an article or buy a thing without this dirty business being tried against me. Wishing you success in your fight against secret societies, I remain yours,—J. J. KYOS, Ridgeway, Iowa.

BRETHREN MUST ALL WATCH WITH THE CYNOSURE.

I used to think the Cynosure so nice and good that it couldn't be improved. But improved it is, and it keeps on improving. I don't know of a paper which excels the beloved Cynosure. Of course my being in love with it makes a difference. Well, I have been wanting to prepare a series of articles on "Romanism in History and in Practice," but just now I am making hasty preparations to remove to Florida, and so haven't time. I am very glad you can support Fisk and Brooks. But I am very sorry the young party is already in danger of being swallowed up by the "Great Beast." Your timely watchfulness will no doubt do much toward keeping the party pure. If my health will permit me to labor in the cause of righteousness I shall endeavor to do what I can, and in my travels I shall always be ready to speak a word for you and try to get readers. I hope, too, to be able to help the cause materially. But now I cannot.

THE FLAG ON CURRICANTI NEEDLE.

It is quite a pleasing incident to notice that our national flag has been placed upon the isolated peak of one of our mountains 2,000 feet high in Colorado, a dangerous performance, done at the risk of his life, and after one fall from the precipitous side into the river, by an English sailor. The courageous Englishman has illustrated the truest spirit of mutual national brotherhood, and deserves to be made an American citizen without, if he has not already done so, renouncing his native country. What a glorious unity of heart for the welfare of the world might be manifested by this double citizenship of men willing to risk their lives for the honor and glory of both of these great peoples who speak and write the same language and are taught the same Christianity. —T. H.

THE FATHER'S SPIRIT LIVING YET.

My father, Erastus Day, who has been a subscriber for the Cynosure for many years, was called to the better land last winter. Though I do not think it best to renew for myself, I had hoped at this time to send you the price of the paper that it may go into some other home. I still hope that in the near future I shall be able to send you a small donation to help on the cause that was dear to my father's heart.—MARY DAY, Colchester, Conn.

LITERATURE.

ALDEN'S CYCLOPEDIA OF UNIVERSAL LITERATURE, presenting Biographical and Critical notices, and specimens from the writings of eminent authors of all ages and all nations. Vol. X. Pp. 479. Price 50 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

The names included in the list of ninety-five eminent authors represented in this volume serve to illustrate the scope and the popular character of the work. The Italian, French, Scottish, German, American, Swiss, English, Persian, Canadian and Irish are represented. Each author is presented in a concise biographical sketch, following which is a specimen of his or her writing translated into English, if a foreign author. Guicciardini writes of the trial and death of Savonarola; Guizot, of the Crusades, Cæsar in Gaul, the St. Bartholomew Massacre, etc.; pious Madame Guyon, of God, the Fountain of Love; Alex. Hamilton, of the Necessity of a National Bank; John Hancock gives his Oration on the Boston Massacre; Patrick Henry speaks of the Abolishment of Slavery, etc., and George Herbert sings of Paradise. As a literary hand-book this Cyclopedia has a thousand recommendations. It is compendious and entertaining as an introduction to the society of authors of all ages and countries, and for a book of reference nothing could be more convenient, and for ordinary occasions, more valuable.

THE UNITY OF THE TRUTH in Christianity and Evolution. By J. Max Hark, D.D. Pp. 288. Price, 80c. John B. Alden, New York.

The Christian reader begins this book with feelings like those with which he enters a temple through an ugly and dangerous portico. The handsome volume is inscribed to Dr. Lyman Abbott, the successor of H. W. Beecher in Plymouth pulpit, who has lead the company of "new departure" theologians in seeking a probation after death. Rev. T. T. Munger is another advocate of "progressive theology." Among the authors quoted, Herbert Spencer leads the list, while Munger, Darwin, and John Fiske, the infidel, follow next in importance. The long introductory chapter of thirty-four pages iterates and re-iterates the presentiment that our ideas of Christian theology are about to undergo a revolution, and nature is groaning with the threatened change. By the time we finish this chapter the impression is quite definite that Dr. Hark has a case to make out, and is working up the conditions for a favorable presentation of it. He is said to be a young man, and is an able thinker and writer, as this volume proves. He is a member of the Moravian church, and believes in cremation. In the volume are many indications of a reverent spirit and a hearty acceptance of the Christian Scriptures and their Author; but in the effort to prove that those Scriptures agree with the evolution theory we hardly conceive that the case is yet made out.

The Christian Intelligencer, in reviewing "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated," published by E. A. Cook, and for sale at the N. C. A. office, says: "The work, apparently, is done with unusual thoroughness and particularity. If the statements of the volumes are correct, the Scottish Rite, which is said to be in the ascendent in Masonry, rests upon false statements, and indulges in puerile, blasphemous and injurious practices. The text is sustained by hundreds of quotations from Masonic authorities. If the work is true, this form of Masonry is an abomination to be shunned, condemned and resisted by every lover of truth and decency, every Christian and every patriot. If it is not true, it becomes the advocates of the Scottish Rite to prove that it is not."

In Scribner's Magazine for September, "Railway Passenger Travel," by Gen. Horace Porter, is the fourth article in the successful series on Railways, begun in the June number. Gen. Porter describes the development of the convenience and luxury of modern travel, especially with reference to sleeping, parlor, and dining-cars, and vestibuled trains. There are also brief discussions of couplers, steam-heating, switches, checks, immigrant transportation, ratio of accidents and relative fares in Europe and America. Gen. Porter has used his unusual faculty for narrative to bring out the most interesting and striking features of the subject. W. H. Mallock, the well-known English writer, has written a brief paper of recollections of a recent delightful visit to the island of Cyprus, embodying in poetic prose some of its romance and beauty. It is fully illustrated from photographs taken by the author. "Presidential Campaign Medals," by Gustav Kobbe, describes the circumstances from which sprang the unique devices used in our national campaigns. "The Modern Greek" is an article of great interest. It presents us the personal and social traits of that interesting people, whose devotion to their glorious ancestral history at once inspires their ambition and tempts them to worship their forefathers. Hugh McCulloch, one of the conspicuous figures in our recent financial history, contributes a paper entitled "Memories of Some Contemporaries." After a public life of half a century he has recalled, vividly and with fine feeling and generous appreciation of all political parties, his impressions of eminent men whom he has known.

The John Shilloto Company have sent out to their friends and patrons a unique eight page sheet, finely illustrated and well written, giving briefly the past history, the present success and future expectations of Cincinnati. The copies of old engravings, maps and documents make it a document well worth preserving.

Science, for Aug. 24, contains a valuable review of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1886-7 now being printed. The article on "Prevention of Floods in the Lower Mississippi" and the address on "Phases in the Progress of Chemistry" must command a wide reading among intelligent people.

LODGE NOTES.

In consequence of the vast amount of sickness throughout the country and in the ranks of the Seven Stars of Consolidation, the Supreme Grand Convention of that colored lodge in the United States will be postponed to meet in Greenville, Miss, December 11, 1888.

New York is said to be one of the strongest Romish cities in the world. It has seventy-two parish churches, forty chapels, 300 priests. Full $30,000,000 are invested in Romish churches and institutions, and there are 800,000 followers of the Pope within the city limits.

The surrender of the government of Quebec to the Jesuits appears worse and worse the more closely it is looked into. Four hundred thousand dollars of the public money is to be handed over to the Jesuit Society. In order to appease Protestants a sum of $60 000 is to be devoted to their educational institutions.

J. G. Roberts, an engineer on the Burlington road, was arrested at Lincoln, Neb, charged with manslaughter. He claims that the charge is only a method of persecution employed by the brotherhood, as the arrest is ostensibly for an accident on the N. Y., Lake Shore and Western road for which he was not responsible.

At the convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians held recently in this State, representing both wings of the order, the delegates in attendance at the national conventions held in New York and Louisville, respectively, reported that resolutions had been adopted in the national bodies seeking to effect a union of the orgainization in America.

The forty fourth annual session of the Sons of Temperance for the United States and Canada met in Toronto in July. Jewell of Boston and Stearns of New York, members with big titles, were present. They report 1,604 lodges with 79,158 members, and the net gain is only 245 There were 35,573 members withdrawn, suspended or expelled, most of them sick of such folly as trying to promote temperance by secret lodge methods.

According to C. F. Griffin, Secretary of State for Indiana, a prominent member of the Sons of Veteran lodge, the late meeting of that order in Wheeling, W. Va., was to attend to the annual election of officers, a commander in chief and his subordinates, a staff similar to that of the Grand Army. Some changes were agreed upon in the uniform, which is like that of the regular army [of the U. S !] except that the letters S. V. on the buttons are substituted for U. S. A." When questioned as to the particular work of the organization, he replied: "It is chiefly caring for old and disabled soldiers, and looking after the widows and orphans of veterans. The representation was by delegates, each State constituting a division."

At a socialistic meeting in Chicago, Sunday, Aug. 26, the only matter discussed was the expulsion of Joseph R. Buchanan, editor of the Labor Enquirer, because of his hostility to Tommy Morgan as well as for his support of Cleveland and Thurman and tariff reform. John Z. White, Joe Gruenhut and J. R. Buchanan were denounced as traitors and professional politicians. A motion was put and carried unanimously to peremptorily expel Buchanan from the Socialistic Labor party.

The New Orleans Times Democrat, shortly after the N. C. A. convention in that city last spring, published the following at the head of its Masonic column: "The quiet in Masonic circles the past week might almost cause the thought that the sword-bearer at the temple portals was more than ordinarily vigilant, and the eyes of the profane pencil pusher less keen, were it not for the fact that a faint whisper of 'barely a quorum present' falls now and then upon the listening ear, when the mystic brethren are in conversation. This dereliction in attendance is a subject of much concern among those who have at heart the continued prosperity of their beloved order. Various causes are assigned and numerous remedies are suggested. More work might excite the attention, but neophytes are scarce, and some other means of attraction will have to be provided: and upon that problem some of the brightest Masonic intellects are now engaged, and no doubt will find a satisfactory solution."

On Pythian day at the State military encampment at Evansville, Ind., the city was thronged and the streets decorated along which the grand parade of the Knights of Pythias passed. The King Komus parade by far exceeded the expectations of even the most sanguine in point of numbers and grandeur. At 7:30 the steamer Isabella, bearing the honored personage, was sighted around the point and landed the wharfboat amid a grand display of fireworks. The entire levee was lighted up. At the foot of Main Street the great chariot of the king was standing and after being seated among his court, Mayor Dannatell came with his body guard and with a short speech delivered to him the great golden key of the city. Then the king announced that the city for this one night was his, and as it was his he gave it to his royal subjects and bid them go and do as they pleased until daylight. The carnival then opened. The disguises combined all that was grotesque, ludicrous, solemn, and fantastic. Gov. Gray and staff, after reviewing the parade, were escorted to the Crescent club-rooms, whose guests they are, and were royally entertained.

LOVE IN A COTTAGE.

"Chally," said Amarantha Jane, "I notice that your spirits recently seem to be bubbling over with happiness. I am glad to see it, but do tell me dear, what has caused it?" "I will," said Charley, as he encircled her waist and imprinted a kiss on her inviting lips. "You know for a while I was melancholly, blue as indigo, —had no appetite, was bilious and dyspeptic, but the use of two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has brought me out and I am 'bright as a button.' I feel like a new man now. Jane, name the day soon; there is more of this medicine at the drug store."

The success of some of the agents employed by B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., is truly marvelous. It is not an unusual thing for their agents to make as high as $20 and $30 a day, and sometimes their profits run up as high as $40 and $50—even more. But we hesitate to tell you the whole truth, or you will scarcely believe we are in earnest. Write them and see for yourself what they will do for you.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1888

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

NORTHFIELD, Mass., Aug. 27, 1888.

TO OUR READERS:—Mrs. General Phelps wrote, earnestly urging Mrs. Blanchard to come to Northfield, one and one-half miles across the Vermont line into Massachusetts. I replied, "To see the Congregational committee, and if I can occupy their church on the Sabbath we will come down on Saturday. But say to the committee, distinctly, that if I come I shall speak against secret societies in their pulpit. Do not trouble Bro. Moody about my coming."

Mrs. Phelps was born here in Northfield. She is an agreeable young woman: reared by Unitarian parents, who deserve well of the country for raising such children. Mrs. Phelps, when little past mere girlhood, went into a store in Brattleboro, in New England fashion. And although those who designated themselves, "the ladies of Brattleboro," were proud of the courtesies of General Phelps, this young lady, who was already a widow with one son, charmed Gen. Phelps into matrimony, which through a long military, but strictly virtuous life, he had shunned and almost forsworn. She made his last days happy, and bore him a son in his own likeness, a bright and beautiful boy.

Our readers know General Phelps. His Sunday-school was West Point, his Bible-class a camp; and after some travel abroad, his life was passed amid the ruffianism of Western and Southern frontier life, where good morals were the very rare exception. He owed his pure morals amid contagion to a pure and determined mother. He was a gentleman, scholar, patriot and Christian soldier: and if the providence of God had given him the command of our armies, instead of Halleck, at the opening of the war, the slaves would have been enlisted from the first, the war shortened, and half the blood saved. But the country hated the Negroes, and General Phelps had neither the wisdom nor patience of Lincoln; so the whole land was punished, according to the Word of God, that national sins must be punished in this life, because there are no nations in the life to come.

But I wander. Mrs. Phelps wrote to Mr. Moody, and also to the committee, who do nothing when he is here without his advice. He said to the committee (who had read my letter and knew I would speak against the lodge or not come), "Yes, I know Mr. Blanchard. Let him come."

So I came. I preached yesterday to a very full house, with a long row in the gallery. I said: The difference between the lodges and Christianity is three-fold:

1. They are secret, and Christianity is open.
2. They are human inventions, and Christianity is of divine appointment.
3. They have no Messiah or Mediator, and so have no access to God, but must eternally wander in darkness.

It was a characteristic New England congregation, having many large, white heads who could remember when Massachusetts had a law prohibiting and punishing Masonic oaths. I never preached to a more intelligent or attentive congregation. There were many Masons and other secretists, but they were such Masons as attend church and keep the Sabbath.

I saw, last night, a small crowd here in the hotel of wholly another sort, and conversed with them for an hour, and learned the following facts:

1. That Mr. Moody says little or nothing against the lodge here.
2. That the old Northfield lodge was kept from entire dissolution by a Mr. Belcher, and two or three others, who hid the charter and met in entire secrecy.
3. My informant, the son of the Masonic Mr. Belcher, never heard his father say a word about Masonry.
4. Many years ago there was a flourishing Odd-fellow lodge here, before Mr. Moody came, but it had gone down.
5. The old Northfield lodge is decaying.

"How do you know?" I asked Mr. Belcher.

"I do not see them around, as I used to, and many Masons are buried without any lodge rites," was his reply.

This, of course, was encouraging; but in the crowd where we conversed were some younger men. One Methodist Mason from Greenfield said the lodge was flourishing there. Another decent young man, with an honest face, lied without hesitation to keep his oath, to "ever conceal."

But I learned in the crowd, that 2,000 campers still come annually to Lake Pleasant, ten miles below here, to hear the babbling sorcerers and necromancers, but the ten thousand who used to throng the camp-ground (now wholly owned by worshipers of familiar spirits) are falling off.

Mr. Moody preached yesterday three times, and attended a fourth meeting at night! I heard his third sermon. A jumble of notices dwarfed my afternoon meeting to a handful; but I read a "lecture on Odd-fellowship," prepared for Saxton's River, which I gave there last Friday night. Several men and many godly women came round Mrs. Blanchard for tracts, and to give us their God speed.

I wish I could report Mr. Moody's discourse from John 8th chapter, particularly the verse, "Jesus said, if any man keep my sayings he shall not see death." It was simple, solid Scripture, and the crowd devoured it here, where he has been speaking all summer, as if they heard him for the first time. I have sometimes censured him for not "taking forth the precious from among the vile," as God commanded Ezekiel to do; but I understand him better than ever I have. The golden shower of tongues at Pentecost each contained one separate, special gift, and Mr. Moody's was that of a teacher. He does not see that the secret lodge worships of this land and world are the children of those which Moses and the reformer kings denounced and executed; and which Peter chased from the infant church in the person of Simon, and Paul in the person of Elymas the sorcerer. Hence the devil worships which confronted Moses and the prophets, and Christ and the apostles, lie underneath, and listen to Mr. Moody and the preaching evangelists, Pentecost, Whittle, and the rest, and lie still till the storm of revival is past, and then, wolf-like, seize their sheep. But God be praised for Moody and Pentecost and Whittle. But John Rogers said, "Few rare and worthy men continue such to the end. Therefore, let no man trust in men."

I wish, fervently, I could look over the stupenpous work of Mr. Moody, and the buildings which have sprung up like gourds in the night; but I must leave in an hour for my native State, which, as I suppose, is my mission from God. I have edited the Cynosure in part for over twenty years, and have asked few favors of its readers. I now humbly and fervently beg their pfayers to Christ, who alone is mightier than Satan, "stronger than the strong man armed." He will yet "bind the strong man and spoil his goods." J. B.

THE SABBATH IN CHICAGO.

A great meeting of German and Scandinavian citizens was held in this city Sabbath afternoon to protest against the desecration of the Lord's day, and the criminal complicity of the city authorities in the violation of Sunday laws. Speeches were made in four languages: Drs. Little and Barrows and lawyer Bonney and others in English, Bishop Escher in German, Rev. O. Juul in Norwegian and Rev. M. C. Ranseen in Swedish. It was a great and powerful meeting, and the speakers, evidently under less restraint than if the audience had been all American, dealt with official incapacity and neglect of duty with earnest remonstrance. Mayor Roche, whose administration began with such flattering appearances of improvement on the long reign of Harrison, is disappointing everybody but the politicians. He should have heard Pastor Bruhn, of the Norwegian Lutheran church, charge the American civil officers with the demoralization of the foreign immigrants by their lax administration of law. He should have heard Rev. J. Berger, of the Centennial German Methodist church, say that in the old country his people were law-abiding citizens, but here they were deceived by the reckless disobedience of law by men in authority, until they, too, trampled the law under foot. Dr. Barrows, especially, had something to say to Mayor Roche, and he did it fearlessly. As the executive of this great city he could not be a good citizen so long as he left the breeding-places of crime open on Sunday. "We are here to tell the Mayor," he said, "that his opinions don't suit, and if they are not changed we will elect for his successor a man who will not try to ride two horses going in opposite directions." For the time being this severe reproof will have little effect, but there will come a day when the same sentiments can be spoken by ballots. Then they will be heard and heeded.

Yesterday was another "dry" and, consequently, quiet Sunday in Hyde Park, our Chicago suburb, say the morning papers of the 27th ult. No attempt was made by any of the saloon-keepers to open up, and there was, therefore, no need of any arrests. The saloon-keepers have apparently accepted Sunday closing as a settled feature of their business, but have adopted a very quiet, but severe, retaliatory measure against the police. They won't sell a drink to a policeman at any price, Sunday or any other day. Good for the saloons! Better for the police! Best for the people!

HOW STAND YOUR CANDIDATES?

NOTES OF THE AMERICAN ANTI-SECRECY LEAGUE.

The 18,500 Prohibitionists, who voted last year in Pennsylvania, have to-day a large increase in their number. None are indifferent respecting the character of their candidate for Supreme Judge. James Black of Lancaster is nominated for that high office, and as he has long been identified with that party, received 5,600 votes in 1872 as first Prohibition candidate for President, and was chairman of the Platform committee in the late Indianapolis convention;—because of this prominence in the party, it is the greater pity that Judge Black should hold such relations to the lodge as indicated in his letter to the League. He writes:

"I reply: 1st. That I am now and have been for twenty years and more a member of the 'Independent Order of Good Templars,' an organization for the promotion of personal abstinence from the use of intoxicating beverages, and the prohibition of their manufacture and sale by the State; and also a member of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows, an organization for providing pecuniary relief in time of sickness and death of its members. 2d. I have always regarded these purposes as Christian and patriotic, and have seen nothing in their constitutions, by-laws, teaching or action contrary to or in tendency subversive of these. Respectfully yours,

"JAMES BLACK."

Judge Black may regard the purposes of these orders as "Christian and patriotic," but he does not need to become a Mohammedan to promote temperance, for those false religionists make that reform a success. Bandits also provide pecuniary relief for their own members, and distribute the surplus money among the rich. Odd-fellows cannot be justified for such a reason. The preaching of virtue is good, but how is it taught? The Good Templars were established in 1851, not primarily to promote temperance so much as to "unite all temperance lodges in one grand organization." Read S. B. Chase, P. R. W. G. T., the historian of the order, in his pamphlet on Good Templarism. Such has continued the history of this order. Let Judge Black study the bad record in California, Wisconsin and elsewhere. Even if it is purely and solely for the promotion of temperance, a gentleman who is worthy the votes of Pennsylvania Prohibitionists should be of sufficient discernment to see that the reform under the open work of the W. C. T. U. and of the political movement has been carried far beyond the expectations of the Good Templars or of any other secret order. It is, in fact, out of their sight, and they are simply a dead weight upon the temperance movement. Dr. Charles Jewett, the champion of the cause, went into these orders along with Judge Black, but condemns them as retarding the final triumph of the cause, which the open societies were almost ready to seize upon. In the Odd-fellow order there can be no excuse for the vindication of the humiliating performance through which Judge Black was taken under the old ritual; nor in either order for the obligations of life-long secrecy, which are contrary to the doctrine of Jesus Christ; nor for partaking in religious ceremony prepared for ungodly and unrepentant men, as well as for believers.

But it is not the object of the League to discuss opinions in reporting the standing of candidates. We sincerely hope Mr. Black will reconsider his position. A man fit for the office of Supreme Judge should be too intelligent and discerning to be deceived by the lodge.

The letter of Mr. W. T. May of Sharon, Pa., Prohibition candidate for Congress, is more satisfactory reading, and we doubt not it will prove, also, more popular with Pennsylvania voters:

"I have never given much thought to secret societies or their influence for either good or evil, saving only what thoughts have been suggested by the public display of some societies, their well furnished lodge rooms, street and funeral parades, etc. My idea is that the whole concern of secret societies, their vows, obligations, organizations and all is a pack of nonsense and unworthy the attention of serious men, fitly characterized by Wendell Phillips as 'mummeries.' As a matter of course I do not belong to any secret society, nor, indeed, to any society excepting the M. E. church, and if you are pleased to call a political party a society, the Prohibition party, but I am willing always to array myself with good men against the evils of our day and to contend earnestly for good laws and their enforcement. Yours very truly,

"W. T. MAY."

This week's record has a grievous beginning, but ends well. The Prohibition candidate for State Treasurer of Kansas sends a letter that rings like a silver bell:

"I always deem it a privilege to add my testimony, whenever an opportunity is offered, against all oath-bound secret societies. First, I am of the opinion that in both civil and criminal suits preferment is shown to members of the orders, and violators of the law escape just punishment on account of their connection with them. I also maintain that all such societies are a great hindrance to our Master's cause and the Christian religion. Their claims are delusive, and are on a false foundation of assumed religion, 'not Christianity;' which is calculated to deceive uninvestigating minds into the belief that if their lives are in accord with the teachings of the order, they will be saved without the exercise of faith in Christ as their Redeemer. Very respectfully,

"R. M. SLONAKER."

Thank God for men of conviction, and faith and courage; their fellow citizens may safely entrust the duties of public office to them.

—The Annual Bible School Assembly of Western Yearly Meeting of Friends, held at Kokomo, Ind., Aug. 3d to 8th, 1888, adopted the following:

"Resolved, That the church has in secret, oath-bound societies one of her greatest enemies, and we earnestly regret the hold which these have gained both within and without the church; and that we reaffirm our opposition to all such orders, and pledge ourselves to increased effort against them."

—The Free Methodist remarks upon an incident reported lately in the Wesleyan Methodist: "Joining the Masons is always dangerous to the soul, and sometimes to the body. Last spring Rev. W. T. Jackson of the Wesleyan Methodist Champlain Conference left it and united with the M. E. church. At Pittsburg he joined the Masons. Recently, after having been initiated into the third degree, he was brought home from the lodge sick about one o'clock at night, and ran right down and died one week after being carried from the lodge. At Geneva, N. Y., a few years ago, a prominent member of the M. E. church was accidentally killed in the lodge while being raised to a higher degree. In some lodges the treatment is rougher than in others; but in all the strain upon the conscience of a Christian must be enough to kill a man of less than ordinary physical vigor. Is this one reason why none but able-bodied men are eligible for admission to the lodge?"

—The Standard of this city speaks thus highly of the late Prof. Woodsmall, and of Miss Moore of Leland University, New Orleans: "'We must train Christian leaders, men and women, for the colored people faster than at present.' This sentence is taken from the last open letter written by Dr. H. Woodsmall, dated in its publication in the National Baptist March 15, 1888. It was the testimony of a man who had the reputation of knowing the colored people, from actual contact, better than any other living man. The question is, whether our Southern schools, however earnest and efficient their labors, are doing a tithe of what is needed at once to arrest the downward movement of the great mass of the African race in America. Instruction must be carried to the people who will not come to receive it, and the system of missionary itineracy, so well exemplified in the work of Joanna P. Moore, should be largely recruited. Whilst we care for the generations to come in laying right foundations, let us not forget the generation of to-day."

"The necessary tendency of Masonry is toward naturalism, the ignoring of revelation, and therefore the opposing of the church that upholds the supernatural order. Its spirit is to make the state atheistical to incline men to worship a god which is not the God of the Christians to set up a so-called system of morality founded on a mere animal utility, but not on Christian doctrine." These observations observations are strikingly and startlingly true, as we believe and give the most substantial reasons why we as Christians and citizens should oppose and seek to overthow the whole secret empire.—Associate Reformed Presbyterian.

A sad case of suicide, for which whisky is responsible, occurred recently near Carthage, Ill. A six months' bride was found hanging in the smoke-house by her husband, upon his return after several days' absence from home. Upon discovering the body the horrified husband fainted and lay in a stupor several hours. The body was cut down by the neighbors. A letter written by her was found in which she bade her husband good-bye, and said she would hang herself because she would be happier dead than living with a drunkard. The husband had on several occasions come home intoxicated, the disgrace of which had so worked on the poor wife's mind as to drive her to suicide. This is only one case of self destruction caused by liquor, but many hundreds of others occur annually in the United States. How long will we endure this the greatest of all evils?

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. Byron Gunner spoke in Cleveland, Ohio, on Sabbath last in three churches. He expected to return to New Iberia immediately, starting Monday.

—The Vermont Chronicle, Republican paper of Brattleboro, of the 24th ult. contains a brief, but handsome notice of the meetings addressed by the editor of the Cynosure in that place.

—Bro. M. N. Butler and family have been spending the summer with his parents, on the old farm near Avalon, Mo. We hear rumors that he intends moving to Tennessee.

—Rev. J. A. Brooks, candidate for Vice President, addressed a large crowd at the county fair at Rockford, Ill., last Friday. The Inter Ocean reports his speech as administering a stinging rebuke to papers that have been basely hounding him as a rebel, and emphatically denied the charge, first made in the Chicago Tribune, that he said he was glad he was never a Republican.

—Last week Bro. M. A. Gault gave two lectures in Dr. Kennedy's church near Sandwich, Illinois. He reports him as among the stalwarts in moral reform, and enjoying the cordial sympathy of his large congregation, who are among the liberal National Reform contributors in the State. Dr. Kennedy arranged for a number of reform lectures in adjoining towns. Bro. Gault spoke at these last week, and is now filling a number of engagements in Mercer county, Illinois.

WILL THE PROHIBITION PARTY REFUSE THE BIRTHRIGHT?

CHICAGO, Sept. 1, 1888.

A private letter just received from a leading National Reformer expresses so clearly the duty of the hour in reference to the Prohibition party that I desire to give it to the Cynosure readers. He says:

"I have been much interested in your account of Lake Bluff, of W. T. Mills's course, of Dr. Bascom's utterances, and in your extracts from Mr. Sharp's letter. It is plain that the Prohibition party has not yet intelligently and deliberately made its choice between the Christian and the secular ideas of government. Of the party it may be said, 'Two manner of people are within thee.' Which will supplant the other, gain the birthright, and hold pre-eminence, the future will show. This country is unquestionably to be the theater of a great conflict between national Christianity and political atheism. We are bound by every dictate of prudence and duty to win every ally possible for the right side. If we can win the coming party I think it will hasten the final issue. Therefore, I think our efforts to that end ought still to be continued. We have no right to charge the party with the intentional and deliberate rejection of Christ. We have not made the demand widely, clearly, emphatically enough. When this campaign is past, then let us set ourselves to capture the county conventions one by one, where, as Miss Willard writes, 'The matter can be talked over and prayed over.' Then in 1892 we can make it a square issue as was done this year with woman suffrage. And if we should fail in that effort, the previous work would not be lost. We would have spread the idea widely, have converted multitudes to National Reform principles, and gained a vantage ground for future agitation. Then will be time enough to denounce the Prohibition party, or to criticise it in any unfriendly spirit. For the present I think we ought to hold up the acknowledgments it has already made, which are so numerous and so remarkable; point out their defects, and accept them as the earnest and pledge of complete and consistent declarations in the next campaign. I believe they will then either go on to the acknowledgment of Christ, or will go back on the acknowledgment of God, of the Sabbath, and whatever implies religious principle. And in this way we shall conciliate, not antagonize, the best elements in the party, and dispose them favorably to our cause."

We only add, why wait till this campaign is over? The best time to press the idea of Christ and Divine law in government, is in the very heat of a political campaign, especially when prohibition, with its attendant moral questions, are at the front. Men's minds are now prepared to consider the relation of Divine law to government as never before, and as they will not be even after the excitement of the campaign.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, O., Aug. 29, 1888.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—A friend of mine said to me a few days ago: "I do not think the temperance, or any other great reform, will triumph until secretism is put down. The liquor dealers and the Prohibitionists are in the same lodge together, and they are sworn to protect each other, and we need not expect them to be earnest in pushing each other to the wall. Masonry is the curse of our country. Two weeks ago the corner-stone of our city building was laid by the Masons. Their orator said that 'heaven was the grand lodge above.' As women are not allowed in the lodge below, I suppose they will be excluded from the lodge above. They exclude Christ from the lodge below; I suppose he will also be kept out of the lodge above. What kind of a heaven will they have, I wonder?"

There is no doubt that Masonry is a great evil. It manipulates politics, and it dominates many of our churches. If the money spent by church members on their lodges were given to missions, the Bible could be placed in the hands of every human being in his own language, and the Gospel preached to him many times within the next decade. How will they give an account of the wrong use they make of the Lord's money?

Last Sabbath morning I preached on the Sabbath Question in the York Street M. E. church, Rev. Lease, pastor. This brother said he would arrange for me to preach on the same subject in Madisonville, as there are many railroad men there. Whatever we may say about the propriety of running the street cars certain hours on the Sabbath, to carry the people to and from church, keeping them tied up the rest of the day, to run them all the Lord's day for unnecessary purposes is a sin against God and his people. These companies are chargeable with furnishing the masses who spend the day in pleasure-seeking the facilities for desecrating the Sabbath. They are chargeable with using God's time for business that brings them in a larger revenue on that day than any other day of the week. They are chargeable with compelling their employes to work on that day on pain of losing their position. As Dr. Crafts says, this is the car of Juggernaut, crushing out the liberties of our working people.

Who is responsible for it? The stockholders, the officers and members of the corporation. If, as is alleged, a man may be a member of a corporation that does wrong, so long as he does nothing personally that is wrong, and be innocent, then he may hold stock in a brewery, a distillery, a saloon, a Sunday newspaper, or a lottery, and not be guilty. Every member of a corporate body is responsible for the character and conduct of that body. If an agent of the body should do wrong, a Christian member might enter his protest and still retain his membership. But when the body itself resolves to break God's law and sin against his people in order to increase their gains, the only alternative for the Christian is absolute separation. "Come out from among them and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you." I know this is unpopular doctrine. I know it is all a man's position is worth to say it in certain quarters. But when I keep back the truth for fear or favor may my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth.

In the evening I preached National Reform in Asbury Chapel, M. E., Rev. Dr. Van Cleve, pastor. This brother has been in the ministry forty years. His eye is not dim, nor his natural force abated. My attention has been called to an argument for the immortality of the soul in Job. When his prosperity returned God gave him "twice as much as he had before;" 14,000 sheep instead of 7,000 at first; 6,000 camels, in place of 3,000 before; 1,000 yoke of oxen and 1,000 she asses, instead of 500 each. But he only gave him seven sons and three daughters, the same unmber he had before his family was swept away by a cyclone. Why did he not have double the number of children? Because that was not necessary to make the statement of "twice as much" good. The first family was not lost, as his cattle and sheep had been. His sons and daughters were still living; so that he had fourteen sons and six daughters. The author of "Ecce Homo" tells us how we are to treat an offending brother as compared with an injurious worldling. The latter is an enemy. He knows not what he does. He sins ignorantly. There must be patient forbearance shown. "If a man smite thee on the one cheek, turn to him the other also." The former is a brother in Christ. He knew better. It is our duty to bring him to repentance by reproof. "If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him, and if he repent, forgive him." Yours,

J. M. FOSTER.

CHRIST ALL AND IN ALL.

(Colossions 3: 11.)

BY ELDER J. L. BARLOW.

Christ is all in all to me,
Giving life and liberty.
Now are prudence, wisdom mine,
Graces which in Jesus shine—
Righteousness is mine, as well,
Sanctified, in Him I dwell.
Mine, redemption, too, shall be,
When my Lord returns for me.

He-e, and in eternity,
Christ our all in all will be.
Shout His praises, then, ye saints—
Stilled forever, your complaints.
E'er in Him all fullness dwells;
While each saint the story tells,
That he finds a full supply,
When to Christ he draweth nigh.

Would'st thou, then, from sin be freed?
Christ is all thy soul can need—
Will and power He lacketh not,
Cleansing souls from foulest blot.
Captive ones He will relieve—
All, who will on Him believe.
Hear ye, then, His gentle voice,
And in Him fore'er rejoice.

MR. MOODY ON SPIRITUAL POWER.

CHRIST AND THE HOLY SPIRIT.

[From an Address by D. L. Moody.]

I want to call your attention to the way in which the Holy Spirit took part in six different steps of our blessed Lord's life, or the six great events of his life, when the Holy Spirit was there.

His conception was by the Spirit. His baptism was into the Spirit, as well as in the water. He was tempted, and the Spirit was there in his temptation. In his preaching the Spirit of God was upon him. Then his miracles: we find that it was by the Spirit of God he performed those miracles. And his resurrection: that dead body of Jesus Christ was raised by the Holy Ghost—by the same power. Six things, remember: Born of the Spirit, that is the first thing. There is no spiritual life until we are born of God. Let every one take this question home to himself, and be sure that he is born of the Spirit of God. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." But, then, we must not be satisfied merely with being born of the Spirit. We must have power. The next thing, then, is, Quickened by the Spirit. That is what Christ was. In his baptism he was quickened. We need the same quickening. The third step is, Sanctified by the Spirit. There is nothing that will separate us from the world like the Spirit of God. We are sanctified by the Spirit. "Sanctify them through thy Word: thy Word is truth." And the Word is the Sword of the Spirit. I used to be terribly confused about sanctification. I suppose I had hundreds of people laboring with me, and asking me, "Are you wholly sanctified?" Then I would go to work and try to get what they call sanctification. But I tell you, if God will fill me with the Holy Spirit, that is the short cut to holiness. If the Lord will keep me full of the Holy Ghost, I will let sanctification take care of itself. It is a command that we be filled with the Spirit of God. Every one of us may be filled if we will. The fourth step is, Guided by the Spirit. The mistake many of us make is in following our own will, when our own will may be really in opposition to God's will. What we want to do is to put our will right along side of God's will, so that the two will move in the same direction. "My yoke is easy." You will find the yoke of Christ very easy when the heart is filled with the Spirit of God. Then you will understand that passage, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Now, if a young man finds the yoke of Christ galling, what is the trouble? He hasn't got enough of the Spirit. That is the trouble. If the yoke chafes he can't be wholly sanctified. You remember what John the Baptist said: "He must increase, but I must decrease." I want to tell you what I heard Dr. Bonar say. He says, "If you hear a man all the time talking about himself, you may know that he is not filled with the Spirit of God. He is filled with his own spirit; because when a man is filled with the Spirit of God he will be talking about Jesus Christ, and not be talking about himself." He said: "A gentleman came to me to labor with me and get me into the 'higher life.' For an hour that man was with me, and he referred to himself more than a hundred times. It was 'I—I—I.'" And so he said: "I can always tell whether a man has got the Spirit of God or has got some other spirit by the way he talks about himself." The nearer I get to God the less I will think about myself. "He must increase, but I must decrease." Let us get this capital I abolished—get it out of the way. Then we will not only be filled with the Spirit but be guided by the Spirit. The fifth step is, Led by the Spirit. Just follow the Spirit as the children of Israel followed the cloud in the wilderness. When the cloud moved, they moved; and when the cloud rested, they rested. They kept their eye on the cloud. What you and I want is to let the Spirit of God lead us. How he will open doors of usefulness! How he will lead us into green pastures! Let us learn this lesson: not to be led by the flesh, which will lead you into bondage and darkness; but be led by the Spirit of God, who will lead you out into liberty—lead you into fields of usefulness and your life will be anything but a failure. The sixth step is, The Spirit of God will strengthen you. There are, then, those six steps: Born of the Spirit. Quickened by the Spirit. Sanctified by the Spirit. Guided by the Spirit. Led by the Spirit. Strengthened by the Spirit.

RELIGION WITHOUT THE HOLY SPIRIT.

A religion without the Holy Spirit may sometimes be worse than no religion. It puffs up the soul with pride and vain glory; it wastes time and money in forms and emptiness; it stands in the way of God and the power of the Spirit, and it finally brings men to perdition who have supposed that they were bound for the kingdom of God.

It has long been feared that many church members, and ministers, and even some of the educated and refined, think and know very little of the power of the Holy Spirit. A curious statement from Dr. Daniel Steele confirms this opinion. He says in a recently published sermon:

"Six years ago I announced to the public that the Holy Ghost was not receiving his due honor in the preaching and theological thinking of New England scholars. As a proof I cited the Bibliotheca Sacra and Theological Review, published at Andover, thirty-six volumes, 1844—1879, containing 1,250 articles by 300 contributors, as not containing one article on the personality and offices of the Holy Spirit in the salvation of men. This indicates a corresponding silence in the pulpit during the same period. As a result of this long neglect of the Spirit, a plentiful crop of speculative errors in respect to fundamental truth will soon spring up. The same causes are at work in other evangelical denominations. The theological thought of Methodism as reflected in her Quarterly for the last forty years has not one article on the Holy Ghost, save one on the sin against the Holy Ghost."

These publications named represent the highest culture and the ripest thought of two great leading American denominations. And if in forty years writing by and expressly for ministers and Bible students there is not an article to be found on the Holy Spirit, then the subject cannot have been among those uppermost in the minds of ordinary theologians.

Of course there are the creeds—which it requires a liberal education and a Latin Lexicon to understand—there is the jargon of scholastic terms—which misleads the common mind, and requires a learned man to explain it;—but the plain simple teaching of Scripture concerning the Holy Spirit, stripped of empty verbiage and obsolete and technical phrases, is too little heard or known in the present time.

The Holy Spirit convinces the world of sin; and where the Holy Spirit is not present in power, sin is rarely reproved. The sins of Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar may be alluded to, but the sins of the rich man who sits in the third pew from the front, right hand side of the broad aisle, are not meddled with unless some one present preaches the Gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven.

The Holy Spirit convinces the world of righteousness, but when the Holy Spirit is ignored, the great facts of truth and righteousness are set aside, and sinners think they are as good as anybody. Piety is counted as old-fashioned, zeal as fanaticism, and backslidden professors and unconverted worldlings, full of craft, trickery, politics, and secret intrigue, do things in the name of religion and for the interest of the church, which an honest sinner would not touch with the tongs. Thus a church left destitute of the Holy Spirit, becomes a center of worldliness, a cage of unclean and hateful things.

The Holy Spirit convinces the world of judgment to come! But men who preach without the Holy Spirit can easily find subjects more palatable than that. Hence in these very denominations whose "Quarterlies" show such a lack of testimony concerning the Holy Spirit, there is a similar lack of preaching "righteousness and judgment to come."

The subject is largely ignored in the pulpit. The Bible is full of it; but the sermons are empty. The great white throne, the rising dead, the awful separation, the lake of fire, the second death, are not the themes that occupy the twenty or thirty minutes during which the cultured congregation consent to listen to the reading of a polished essay from their "beloved pastor."

The Psalmist said, "I will sing of mercy and of judgment, unto thee, O Lord! will I sing." And those who sing with the Spirit and the understanding choose such themes as these. But how little of such singing is heard. A rosewater Gospel is accompanied by dishwater songs. The grand old melodies that stir the hearts of men to their center, are forgotten, and namby-pamby rhymes joined to operatic melodies and consecrated jigs take the place of those solemn strains of prayer and praise and supplication which have subdued and uplifted the hearts of men for ages past.

Here is the evil; is there a remedy? There is. It is found in asking, seeking and receiving into our own hearts the Holy Spirit; in being filled by the Spirit, and in being led by the Spirit of God in all things. It is found in taking the Sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God, and cutting with it on the right, and the left.

It is found in reverencing every word of God as the written and recorded utterance of the Holy Spirit and in yielding an absolute submission to the authority of the Most High God, who has spoken to us by the prophets, and by his Son whose words are Spirit and life, and who dwells in every humble and contrite heart; and that church which is "builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit."

THE CHILDREN AND THE PANTHER.

Down on the Blackwater, in southeastern Saline, about the year 1830, a settler, named Samuel Miller, had built his cabin and was opening a small farm. He had two little daughters, Jennie and Susie, aged seven and six. One morning the mother of the little girls sent them on an errand to a neighbor's, nearly two miles distant. The road was a mere pathway through the thick woods, but the children knew it very well. Hand in hand, they toddled along, unheeding peril, because unconscious of it. But half a mile from home, on the upper arc of a large, leaning tree, which bent directly over their path, they saw a large panther stretched out at full length, basking in the morning sun. They did not know rightly what it was.

"Oh, Susie," said Jennie, "there's a wolf!"

"Yes," said Susie; "and I s'pect it's the bad old fellow that catched my lamb and kills papa's pigs. Let us go right back home and tell paps, and he will come and shoot it wiv his gun."

"But what if it runs away while we are gone?" returned Jennie. "Tell you what we'll do, Susie: you stay here and watch it, and I'll run and tell papa! I can run fastest, you know."

Little Susie readily assented to the arrangement, assuring her sister that if the "bad old wolf" should come down the tree, she would "take a stick and punch his eyes out." Then, gathering some acorn cups and a quantity of velvety moss, she set about constructing a "play-house" at the foot of the very tree on which crouched the panther, watching her curiously. Presently he arose, and walked back and forth, back and forth, along the level extent of the tree, as if impatient and meaning to descend. But Susie shook her little fist at him menacingly; and soon he lay down again, with his head between his paws, lazily blinking his great, yellow eyes, "as if," Susie said, "he was awful sleepy."

Away ran Jennie, fleet as a little fawn; and in due time she reached her father's cabin, and hurriedly told her mother that there was a "big wolf on the tree, and that Susie had stayed to mind it." Mrs. Miller at once comprehended the harrowing truth, and called frantically to her husband, who was at work in his clearing near by. Mr. Miller came at once, accompanied by a young man in his employ, named George Plunkett. Realizing the imminent peril of his child, and dreading that perhaps already a horrible fate had befallen it, the pioneer did not speak a word; but in a few seconds he and young

Plunkett, rifle in hand, were running swiftly to the scene. Nearing the locality, Miller said:

"If we are not too late, George, let me fire first."

Possibly the emotions of the father at this time may be imagined; certainly, I cannot describe them. Faint hopes and sickening fear alternated in his breast as he sped fleetly on. It was hardly possible that the child was yet alive; but as the panther had not sprung at first, there was a bare chance. Meanwhile, in the little cabin home, the agonized mother had caught her remaining little one to her breast, and was praying silently, but fervently.

But,—oh, the joy of it!—on coming within sight of the fatal tree, Miller saw his child safe and unharmed. The little innocent was busy at her play, crooning sweetly the while. Doubtless, He who stopped the mouths of the lions had preserved her. High above, the panther was on his perch. In two seconds Miller's rifle rang out; the panther came crashing to the ground, a bullet fairly in his brain; and little Susie sprang up and exclaimed, "O papa, how you scared me!"

This panther measured five feet, ten inches. Miller tanned its skin; and, when his daughters had grown to womanhood, each of them had a cape made from it.—Vermont Chronicle.

THE "GOODEST" MOTHER.

Evening was falling, cold and dark,
And people hurried along the way,
As if they were longing soon to mark
Their own home candle's cheering ray.

Before me toiled, in the whirling wind,
A woman with bundles, great and small,
And after her tugged, a step behind,
The bundle she loved the best of all—

A dear little roly-poly boy,
With rosy cheeks and a jacket blue,
Laughing and chattering, full of joy:
And here's what he said—I tell you true:

"You're the goodest mother that ever was,"
A voice as clear as the forest birds;
And I'm sure the glad young heart had cause
To utter the sweet of the lovely words.

Perhaps the woman had worked all day,
Washing or scrubbing; perhaps she sewed;
I know by her weary footfall's way,
That life for her was an up-hill road.

But here was a comfort, children dear;
Think what a comfort you might give
To the very best friend you can have here—
The mother, dear, in whose house you live.

If once in a while you stop and say,
In task or play, for moment's pause,
And tell her, in sweet and winning way,
"You're the goodest mother that ever was."

TEMPERANCE.

A PRISON INCIDENT.

Mrs. Emma Molloy relates the following indident in one of her speeches, referring to the relation of temperance to crime:

In a recent visit to the Leavenworth, Kan., prison during my address on Sabbath morning, I observed a boy, not more than seventeen or eighteen years of age, on the front seat intently eyeing me. The look he gave me was so full of earnest longing it spoke in volumes to me. At the close of the service I asked the warden for an interview with him, which was readily granted. As he approached me his face grew deathly pale, and, as he grasped my hand, he could not restrain the fast falling tears. Choking with emotion he said:

"I have been in this prison two years, and you are the first person that has called for me—the first woman who has spoken to me."

"How is this, my child?" I asked. "Have you no friends that love you? Where is your mother?"

The great brown eyes, swimming with tears, were slowly uplifted to mine, as he replied:

"My friends are all in Texas. My mother is an invalid, and fearing that the knowledge of the terrible fall would kill her, I have kept my whereabouts a profound secret. For two years I have borne my awful homesickness in silence for her sake."

As he buried his face in his hands and heartsick sobs burst from his trembling frame, it seemed to me I could see a panorama of the days and nights, the long weeks of homesick longing, that had dragged their weary length out over two years.

So I ventured to ask, "How much longer have you to stay?"

"Three years," was the reply, as the fair young head dropped lower, and the frail little hand trembled with suppressed emotion.

"Five years at your age!" I exclaimed. "How did it happen?"

"Well," he replied, "it's a long story, but I'll make it short. I started out from home to try to do something for myself. Coming to Leavenworth, I found a cheap boarding-house, and one night accepted an invitation from one of the young men to go into a drinking saloon. For the first time in my life I drank a glass of liquor. It fired my brain. There is a confused remembrance of the quarrel. Somebody was stabbed. The bloody knife was found in my hand. I was indicted for assault with intent to kill. Five years for the thoughtless acceptance of a glass of liquor is surely illustrating the Scripture truth that the 'way of the transgressor is hard!'"

I was holding the cold, trembling hand that had crept into mine. He earnestly tightened his grasp as imploringly he said, "Oh, Mrs. Molloy, I want to ask a favor of you."

At once I expected he was going to ask me to help obtain a pardon, and in an instant I measured the weight of public reproach that rests upon the victims of this legalized drink traffic. It is all right to legalize a man to craze the brains of our boys, but not by any means to ask that the State pardon its victims. Interpreting my thought he said, "I am not going to ask you to get me a pardon, but I want you to write to my mother and get a letter from her and send it to me. Don't for the world tell her where I am. Better not tell her anything about me. Just get a line from her so I can look upon it. Oh! I am so homesick for my mother."

The head of the boy dropped down into my lap with a wailing sob; I laid my hand upon his head. I thought of my own boy, and for a few moments was silent, and let the outbursts of sorrow have vent.

Presently I said, "Murray, if I were your mother, and the odor of a thousand prisons were upon you, still you would be my boy, I should like to know where you were. Is it right to keep that mother in suspense? Do you suppose that there ever has been a day or a night that she has not prayed for her wandering boy! No, Murray, I will only consent to write to your mother on consideration that you will permit me to write the whole truth, just as one mother can write to another."

After some argument his consent was finally obtained, and a letter was hastily penned and sent on its way. A week or so elapsed, when the following letter was received from Texas:

"DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST:—Your letter was this day received, and I hasten to thank you for your words of tender sympathy and for tidings of my boy—the first word we have had in two years. When Murray left home we had thought it would not be for long. As the months have rolled on, the family had given him up for dead, but I felt sure God would give me back my boy. As I write from the couch of an invalid, my husband is in W—— nursing another son, who is lying at the gates of death, with typhoid fever. I could not wait his return to write to Murray. I wrote and told him if I could, how quickly I would go and pillow his dear head upon my breast, just as I did when he was a little child. My poor, dear boy—so generous, so kind and loving. What could he have done to deserve this punishment? You do not mention his crime, but you say it was committed while under the influence of drink.

"I did not know he ever tasted liquor. We have raised six boys, and I have never known one of them to be under the influence of drink. Oh! is there any place in this nation that is safe when our boys have left the home fold? Oh God! my sorrow is greater than I can bear. I cannot go to him, but sister, I pray you to talk to him, and comfort him as you would have some mother talk to your boy, were he in his place. Tell him that when he is released, his place in the old home nest and his mother's heart is waiting for him."

Then followed the loving mother's words for Murray, in addition to those written. As I wept bitter tears over the words so full of heart break, I asked myself the question, "How long will the nation continue this covenant with death and league with hell to rob us of our boys?"

The Norwegian Parliament has voted an appropriation equal to about $1,000 toward the expenses of the third International Temperance Conference, to be held in Christiana, Norway, in the autumn of 1889. This friendly act on the part of the Norwegian Government for the promotion of the cause of temperance is a timely precedent, and an object lesson for our own Government.—Nat. Temp. Adv.

THE NATIONAL GOVERNMENT AND STATE LIQUOR LAWS.

An important and interesting question of constitutional law has just been decided by Mr. Justice Harlan of the Supreme Court of the United States, on an application for a writ of habeas corpus to procure the discharge from imprisonment of a steamboat captain, who was convicted of violating the excise laws of Pennsylvania in selling liquor on his vessel. The steamer which he commanded was licensed under the laws of the United States, and engaged in inter-state commerce on the Ohio and Monongahela rivers. The Constitution confers upon Congress power to regulate commerce among the several States. It was argued in behalf of the prisoner that a vessel engaged in such commerce upon public navigable waters was not subject to the excise laws of any of the several States into which it went; and hence that the Pennsylvania statute, requiring a license as a condition precedent to the lawful sale of liquor, was not operative upon such a vessel, even though she lay within the territorial limits of the commonwealth. Mr. Justice Harlan refused to give any such effect to the constitutional provision relating to the regulation of commerce. He declared that even if Congress under that provision had the power to annul or disregard local laws for the protection of health and morals, it had not sought to use this power by any legislation on this subject; and that a mere license to run a steamboat did not justify an infraction of the police laws of a State, when those laws offered no obstruction to the right of public navigation. That this is a sound view of the law can hardly be doubted. To require a license for the sale of liquor on a steamboat, or to prohibit the sale of liquor altogether on such a vessel, does not tend in the least to obstruct the freedom of commerce between the several States. Liquor-selling is in no respect an incident to the right of public navigation, and, therefore, a license to run a steamboat does not import authority to sell liquor. It was long ago held by the Supreme Court of the United States that a license from the Federal Government under the internal revenue acts was no defence to a posecution under a State law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors. The tendency of judicial decisions has been to leave to the several States the utmost liberty of action in respect to regulation of the liquor traffic, and if this Pennsylvania case goes to the Supreme Court at Washington the opinion of Judge Harlan will probably be sustained. To reverse his decision would be to hold in effect that liquor might be sold without let or hindrance on a ferryboat plying between New York and Jersey City, in defiance of the excise laws of this State and of New Jersey—that is to say, without any license whatever.—N. Y. Sun.

AMERICAN SAILORS.—The deck of the United States receiving ship, Vermont, was the scene of a very interesting meeting of the Naval Temperance Union a few days ago. A large number of men from various vessels attended the meeting, over which Chaplain Crane, the president of the union, presided. The union has 25,000 members. The influence of such organizations and of the numerous Seamen's Missions and Bethels have changed the character of the sailor very much of late years. Jack, as a rule, is no longer the drunken rascal he used to be, and a monster like the man Kelly, who murdered two of his shipmates recently, is the exception.—The Presbyterian.

At the annual conference of the British Temperance League held at Leeds, the conviction was expressed in a resolution that the conversion of so many brewery firms into limited liability companies was a strong indication of the success of the temperance movement. At the same time shame and regret was expressed that clergymen and ministers of religion were investing their money in a trade which, more than any other, was counteracting all Christian work and influence.

A Philadelphia correspondent of the New York Herald says: "The brewers are 'tickled to death' over the unforeseen results brought about by the new high license law. In this city there are 120 breweries, and of these twenty-five are big concerns. A canvass of a dozen or so of them brought out the fact, upon comparison of statements, that the lager-beer brewing business has increased 20 per cent since the high license law went into operation."

Hoodlums and young roughs, instigated by politicians, lately assailed a Prohibition tent meeting with eggs and other missiles, pulled down the tent, and were apparently about to give personal injury to the speakers. The shameful business was approved by some of the town authorities.

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Folly and Guilt of Murmuring. Vs. 1-5. Our lesson opens with the death of Miriam in Kadesh,—from our first glimpse of her when she kept her secret vigils by the cradle of bulrushes on the Nile,—one of the most remarkable women of Scripture. But it was not simply her connection with the great Lawgiver which gave her this pre-eminence. The career of Deborah in a succeeding age shows that even in that remote period an exceptional degree of talents and devotion was honored and used by God without any distinction of sex. In the Christian church we read that Phillip had seven daughters who were prophetesses, and on the day of Pentecost the Holy Ghost descended equally on male and female. In our own day the consecrated womanhood of America are carrying forward one of the greatest moral movements the world ever saw. Christ said that the least in his kingdom was greater than John the Baptist, though his eloquence drew all Palestine in wondering crowds to hear him; so the very least in this noble sisterhood who are seeking to reclaim the fallen and bring in the reign of righteousness in our land is greater than Miriam by the Red Sea singing her inspired song of triumph over fallen Pharaoh. The senseless murmuring of the Israelites because of a temporary failure of water, when for nearly forty years they had been miraculously supplied with manna, is often reproduced in the lives of many who call themselves Christians. We have a cross, a disappointment, a trial, and we let it eclipse all our daily blessings, all the years in which God has loaded us with benefits. Probably few among these murmuring Israelites would have been willing that God should take them at their word and destroy them by the same fiery judgment that befell the others whose fate they now impiously envied. Our moments of depression are not our truest moments. We are apt to use false and exaggerated expressions that we should not care to stand by upon sober reflection. The people very unreasonably blamed Moses and Aaron, who were only God's instruments; so we are very apt in misfortune to blame our circumstances, which is only another name for the Providence that permitted these circumstances.

2. Moses' Sin. Vs. 6-13. Moses and Aaron left the riotous assembly and fled to their divine Refuge. And again came the protecting glory, enwrapping them like an ægis; again God commanded Moses to take his wonder-working rod and this time to speak to the rock. It is difficult to understand his conduct on this occasion, for he had received like ungrateful treatment from the people before, and when God was about to cast them off for their disobedience, had pleaded for them in most touching terms. It is possible that he feared another forty years of wandering as a punishment for this fresh rebellion, and as he was now an old man he would himself be shut out from ever entering Canaan. Conjectures are useless, but the fiery temperament of his youth is shown in his smiting the rock twice, and his petulant, almost blasphemous exclamation. His whole nature was stirred up to passionate resentment. When he broke the tables of stone it was a godlike anger. He was angry at the sin the people had committed. Now he is angry with the people themselves. Before he was jealous for God's honor; now he is only jealous for himself. This is a sin into which reformers, men of deep convictions and strong natures, are apt to fall. They are commanded to speak to the people, to oppose reason against their unreason, love against hatred, the truth of God against the lies of the devil. They are not to go in the pride and vain glory of worldly wisdom, but carrying in their hand the simple rod of Scripture which they are to use in another way than to smite with. Men cannot be scolded nor driven into receiving the truth. The reformer, even when presenting the most unpopular truths, is safe in following the example of Jehovah, who uses as his most forcible appeal to the sinners, "Come, let us reason together."

—The Arkansas Baptist State Convention (colored) was held in Little Rock, August 22-25. Rev. E. C. Morris of Helena, a seceded Mason, was chairman; and the Arkansas Baptist issued a daily edition. During the Convention the corner-stone of the new Baptist College was laid.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

THE WHOLE WORLD IS NOW OPEN.

The Bible is printed in 250 languages and dialects. There are 150,000,000 copies in circulation.

Twenty-five Women's Boards in England and America are actively engaged in foreign missionary work.

The Young Men's Christian Associations are now formally inaugurating foreign missionary branches.

The number of missionary societies is ten-fold what it was eighty years ago. The number of converts is nearly fifty-fold.

The increased facilities for intercommunication.

The diffusion of the English language.

Wonderful revivals, with pentecostal power, are frequent in heathen lands.

The increase in membership in heathen lands is thirty times greater than at home in proportion to the number of ministers employed, although the test of discipleship are of the most trying nature.

But above all other encouragements are the precious promises of God:

"As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Numbers 14: 21.

"He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." Psalms 72: 8.

"Yea, all kings shall fall down before Him; all nations shall serve Him." Psalms 14: 11.

"The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ, and He shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 11: 15.

—Thirty-two years ago Sunday was the anniversary of the founding of Moody's Sunday-school in Chicago, and in honor of the event Mr. J. M. Hitchcock presented the 1,100 scholars at present attending with a picture of Mr. D. L. Moody at 22 years of age, at the time he first founded it.

—By the will of Isaac N. Phelps, the millionaire banker of New York city, the American Bible Society will get $5,000; the American Home Mission Society $10,000; the American Tract Society $5,000; the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions $10,000, and other benevolences smaller ones.

—The "union" formed among the "evangelical" population of Holland for the establishment of what are known as Bible Schools has now 441 such schools, with 71,000 scholars, representing a capital of $2,000,000.

—Rev. Tan Khe, Moderator of the Amoy Presbytery, China, first heard of the Gospel in the shop of a village barber who was a Christian. The good man first reads his sermons to his wife; if they satisfy her then he carries them to the pulpit.

—The Sixteenth Annual State Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of Illinois will convene at Rock Island, September 19-23. Rev. F. W. Gunsaulus, D. D., of Chicago; Rev. J. H. Brooks, D. D., of St. Louis, and L. D. Wishard, College Secretary of the World's Central Committee, have promised to be present and assist. A male chorus from Galesburg will lead the singing. They hope to have 400 delegates in attendance. Reduced rates on the railroads and entertainment provided. All Christian young men expecting to attend should write at once for program and full particulars to W. F. Levings, Office Secretary, 148 Madison St. Chicago, Ill.

—A letter to the secretary of the Free Methodist Missionary Society bears the sad news of death among the company which lately joined Bro. Harry Agnew at Inhambane on the East African coast. Mrs. Lincoln gave birth to a fine, healthy child, which died, it is feared, for lack of proper care. The mother was doing well, but a sudden and distressing inflammation carried her off quickly. Others of the company have the fever, and their prospect, humanly speaking, is discouraging. But the Lord is able to sustain them, and make them a blessing to the natives.

—It is reported the largest Sunday-school in Chicago is conducted as one class. There are thirty-five hundred scholars in the class; it is divided into sections of fifty to one hundred members; each section is under the charge of an adult, who simply keeps order and does no teaching. The sections are indicated by blue banners having on them white numbers. The session is just one hour. Thirty minutes are devoted to teaching by the superintendent, Mr. C. B. Holmes, president of the South Side city railway, and the other thirty minutes are spent in singing from a song-roll, and in learning and reciting choice passages of Scripture. The record is kept by giving each child a number, and opposite the number in the record-book the child's name is placed. A brass badge is then given to the child, and this is shown at the door at every session. The school has been ten years in successful operation.

—The seventy-ninth annual meeting of the American Board will be held in Cleveland, Ohio, beginning October 2, 1888. Henry Hopkins, D.D., Kansas City, will preach the annual sermon.

—The Plainfield, N. J., Friends (Liberal) have just celebrated the hundredth anniversary of their meeting-house on Peace street. The sides of the building are shingled. It is in a good state of preservation.

—The Congregational Year Book gives the following statistics: Number of churches in the United States, 4,404; of members, 457,584; gain, 21,205; benevolent contributions of churches, $2,095,485; home expenditures, $5,078,980. The churches have, on an average, 100 members, give $475 in benevolent contributions and expend $1,150 on home expenses.

—Fifty years ago seven shoemakers in a shop in the city of Hamburg said, "By the grace of God we will help to send the Gospel to our destitute fellowmen." In twenty-five years they had established fifty self-supporting churches, had gathered out 10,000 converts, had distributed 400,000 Bibles and 8,000,000 tracts, and had carried the Gospel to 50,000,000 of the race. It would only take 150 of such men to carry the Gospel to the whole world in twenty-five years.

—Bolivia, which has a population of 2,000,000, is without a single Protestant missionary.

—The rapid growth of the Methodist Episcopal church in the South is shown by the fact that more than 4,000 new churches have been built in sixteen States since the war.

—In connection with the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, New York city, Dr. John Hall, pastor, there are three ladies' missionary societies. During the last church year they raised $15,070 for missions.

—Mrs. Robertson of Muscogee, Indian Territory, is a Mt. Holyoke graduate, and the wife of a minister who has worked for forty-five years among the Creek Indians. She has translated the whole of the New Testament into the Creek language, besides many hymns.

—In South Africa there are two hundred and twenty-three Presbyterian congregations, numbering 54,320 communicants, and controlling five colleges—one each at Cape Town, Wellington, Burghersdorf, in Cape Colony, and two at Blomfontein, in the Orange Free State.

—The next meeting of the Council of the Presbyterian Alliance is to meet in Toronto, Canada. An exchange thinks that it will be a good place to meet, for the report comes that with a population of one hundred and fifty thousand it has no street cars, no Sunday papers, and no open saloons on the Lord's day.

—The Christian Advocate says that "when a camp-meeting association, by vote, deliberately holds over two Sabbaths for the sake of the Sunday revenue, derived from gate fees and a percentage on railway fares, it performs an act which allies it with Sabbath-desecrating elements now destroying the American Sunday."

—A Greek church is about to be established in Chicago for the Servians, Bulgarians, Greeks and Russian residents in this city.

—At the opening centennial exercises of the Negro Baptists of Georgia, 300 ministers were present. There was an attendance of over 10,000 people.

—The Independent states that the Baptist denomination gained last year 4,587 churches. That would be an average gain of more than twelve churches per diem.

—In a single Protestant Episcopal church in New York city there were twenty-five communicants received at the last confirmation, who had been baptized in the Roman Catholic communion.

—A curious coincidence has grown out of the recent destruction of St. Paul's Episcopal cathedral at Buffalo. The trustees of the Jewish Temple Beth Zion invited the congregation of St. Paul to worship in that synagogue until a house of worship had been again secured. The offer was accepted, and a Christian congregation worships in a Jewish synagogue. The most curious phase of the incident, however, was the fact that the Gospel of the day on which the first service was held contains the words of John, 16: 2, "They shall put you out of the synagogues."

HOME AND HEALTH.

WHAT BECOMES OF ALL THE SUGAR AND HONEY.

In the United States the consumption of sugar per head of the population was twenty-nine pounds in 1869; thirty-nine in 1879; forty-eight in 1883, and fifty-four in 1887. In England the consumption of sugar was thirty-two pounds per head in 1858; forty-one and a half in 1867; sixty-two in 1876. For several countries the consumption is placed as follows:

United Kingdom	63 pounds.
France	25 "
Germany	18 "
Denmark	33 "
Holland	25 "
Austro-Hungary	15 "
Italy	6 "
Spain	7 "
United States	54 "
Canada	51 "

Australia is put at eighty-six pounds per capita and Venezuela at one hundred and eighty—a figure that seems incredible. In all countries the average consumption annually increases. Sugar is becoming as much a necessity of life as bread. What wise cultivation has done for beet sugar it may do for the sugar cane and sorghum. Mr. Darwin puts on record the statement that the beet in France has yielded almost exactly double the quantity of sugar that it formerly supplied, and this has been effected by the most careful and systematic selection. The specific gravity of the roots being regularly tested and the best roots saved for seed.

The annual honey product is about 28,000,000 pounds, or half a pound apiece to the population. In 1880, Tennessee made 2,131,000 pounds; New York 2,089,000; Ohio 1,627,000; North Carolina 1,591,000; Kentucky 1,500,565, and seven other States—Arkansas, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Virginia—produced more than one million pounds each; altogether, in the States named, more than half the entire product of the country.—American Agriculturist.

MAKE LIME WATER AT HOME.

There is no need whatever of running to the druggist and buying lime water every time it is needed. And, by the way, it is very useful to have in the house in case of sour stomach, etc. A teaspoonful of it with half a pint of milk will often make the milk quite digestible, when without the lime water it might sour and produce colic, or distress in the stomach. To make lime water, get a lump of good unslaked lime, the size of a hen's egg, or larger; put it into an old pitcher, and pour on a pint or so of water. As soon as it is slaked and cool enough, stir it with a spoon or stick and pour off the principal part of the milky fluid into a pint or quart bottle, leaving the dregs in the pitcher to be thrown away. Cork the bottle well, and let it stand quiet. In a few hours the lime will settle to the botton, except what is dissolved in the clear water above it, and this water will nearly always be of uniform stength. When used down so it cannot be poured off without stirring the bottom, add more water, shake the bottle, cork it well, and let it again settle for use. Once a year or so, make up a new lot as at first. Lime the size of an egg will be enough for a good many quarts of lime water, which will practically cost nothing. At the ordinary temperature of 60 degrees, a pint of clear lime water contains only 9¾ grains of lime. (A pound is 7,000 grains.) Lime water is an anticid, and is a little tonic also.—Prairie Farmer.

Willie Metzger, the two-year-old son of Mr. William Metzger, of Toledo, Ohio, met with a singular accident. The little fellow went into the pantry to get some bread, which was in a large jar, standing under a shelf, leaving a small space between. Willie stepped on a stool and pushed his head in between the jar and the shelf. Somehow, in reaching for the bread, he pushed the stool out from under him and was suspended by the neck, his head being held by the jar and the shelf. Two minutes later he was found by Mrs. Metzger, just as the last spark of life was about to leave him. She rescued him and sent for Dr. Gifford, who did all he could for the little fellow, but to no purpose, and he died next morning. His parents are almost prostrated over the sad event.

A person who had for many years suffered terribly from ivy poisoning, claims to have found an antidote, as follows: Remembering that all poisons are acids, and that alkalies neutralize acids, I bathed the poisoned member in a strong lye made from wood ashes, and obtained instant relief. Subsequently I found that the dry ashes alone, rubbed over the poisoned member, were equally effective. Since this discovery I have had no further trouble, and having tried this simple remedy repeatedly on myself and on many others, with like good results, I am now thoroughly convinced that wood ashes will in every case prove a sure and sovereign specific for all cases of ivy poison.

A physician writes in a medical journal that he learned to get cinders or other substances out of the eye from an engineer on whose locomotive he was riding. The doctor got a cinder in his eye and began to rub it. "Let that eye alone and rub the other," said the engineer. The doctor paid no attention. "Do as I tell you," said the engineer, "and you'll have it out in two minutes." The doctor obeyed, rubbed the well eye, and in a moment the cinder was lying on his cheek. He says that the treatment never fails, where the substance has not cut into the eyeball.

Now that the fly season is upon us, a recipe for getting rid of pests from houses will be useful. Suspend in the place pieces of tow, sponge, cotton-waste, or any other absorbent material; saturate with carbolic acid, and keep it moist. The scent, which is very wholesome, will drive flies away. Common carbolic acid, which is very cheap by the gallon, will do for the purpose.

While the wife of Levi Jeffries, a farmer five miles north of Columbia City, Ind., was filling a lighted lamp, the oil ignited, and in attempting to throw it out of doors the burning oil was spilled over her husband and six-year-old boy. The boy died soon after from his burns, and Jeffries lies in a critical condition.

"WINE, WOMEN AND SONG,"

but the greatest of these is, "women." "Wine is a mocker," and song is good to "sooth the savage," but women respond to every active power and sentiment of the human mind when in good health. But when afflicted with disease you will find them tantalizing, coquettish, cross, and hard to please. For all "female complaints," sick headache, irregularities, nervousness, prolapsus and other displacements popularly known as "female weakness" and other diseases peculiar to the sex, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the great world famed remedy.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

FARM NOTES.

Mayor Hewitt of New York owns a model farm at Ringwood, New Jersey, where he raises fine Jersey cows, and Mrs. Hewitt makes butter. This butter can be bought of a fashionable fruiterer on Broadway for $1 a pound. Sometimes it is worth that price, and at other times it is not. It all depends upon Mrs. Hewitt's dairy-woman. An attractive feature of Ringwood farm is a log cabin built a short distance from the house, and furnished in a manner that is supposed to be indigenous to log cabins, but which is utterly unknown to them. There is a large fire-place at one end, with a crane for boiling the afternoon teakettle, and there are high-backed chairs and claw-foot tables, and other rare and costly antique bits. It is a very jolly place, however, and is the special property of the Misses Hewitt, who do a great deal of entertaining there.

When spokes and felloes shrink, and the wagon tires become loose in consequence, it is the custom to have the tires re-set at the usual expense of fifty cents each. It is far cheaper and better for the wheels to saturate the entire woodwork with hot linseed oil. This may be easily and thoroughly done by having a dish or trough to contain the oil, through which the wheel may be run by passing a stick through the hub in place of the axle, and resting the ends of the stick upon a frame which is just high enough to allow the wheel to clear the bottom of the pan or trough. This fills the pores and causes the timber to swell and fill the tire as when new. With a soaking of hot oil once in a year or two there will be no loose tires, and the wheels will last very much longer.

Draw a strong cord or wire tightly across the horse stall so that it will be about three feet above the horse, and immediately over his tail when he stands with his head close up to the manger. To the cord attach a piece of muslin, old coffee sacking, an old blanket or something of that sort, so that it will reach well across the stall and about one foot below the horse's back. Leave the hitching strap long enough to enable the horse to back up till his neck comes directly under the cloth. There is now a sweep provided which the horse will soon learn to utilize by stepping back and forth under it and brushing the flies from his back and shoulders. It is astonishing how quickly a horse will learn to do this. There is no patent on this device.

Among the rules of a livery stable in New York, where the animals of many wealthy men are kept, are the following: "No man will be employed who drinks intoxicating liquors. No man shall speak loud to any of the horses, or in the stable where they are. Horses of good blood are nervous, and loud, excited conversation is felt by every horse who hears it, and keeps them all nervous and uneasy. No man shall use profane language in the hearing of horses." It would not be a bad idea if every livery stable adopted these rules. How is it in your barn, brother farmer?

During the hot weather of August and September look out for the cows that are soon to calve. They should have shade, and plenty of strengthening food, but not too much of that that heats or fattens. Ground oats and bran are good. Avoid feeding much corn meal. Treat them kindly. It is easier to prevent milk fever than to cure it.

One of the uses of giving cows salt, especially in hot weather, is that it acts as a preservative in the system. Every one accustomed to test milk can tell by its flavor whether the cows have been getting their salt. There is no doubt, whatever, that the neglect of "salting the cows" spoils the butter and injures the milk for the cheese factory.

Professor H. Muller, an eminent botanist, says that the best time to prune vines is while the grapes are ripening, and that the young shoots should be selected for this purpose, as they require for their development a large quantity of sugar, to the detriment of the ripening fruit.

A farmer at Vesta, Neb., has discovered a remedy for apple trees afflicted with blight. As soon as the top of a tree shows that blight has struck it he bores a small hole in the body of the tree and fills it with sulphur, after which the hole is securely sealed or plugged up.

Constipation

Demands prompt treatment. The results of neglect may be serious. Avoid all harsh and drastic purgatives, the tendency of which is to weaken the bowels. The best remedy is Ayer's Pills. Being purely vegetable, their action is prompt and their effect always beneficial. They are an admirable Liver and After-dinner pill, and everywhere endorsed by the profession.

"Ayer's Pills are highly and universally spoken of by the people about here. I make daily use of them in my practice."—Dr. I. E. Fowler, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hess, Leithsville, Pa.

"For several years Ayer's Pills have been used in my family. We find them an

for constipation and indigestion, and are never without them in the house."—Moses Grenier, Lowell, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Pills, for liver troubles and indigestion, during many years, and have always found them prompt and efficient in their action."—L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills effected a complete cure."—D. Burke, Saco, Me.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years and consider them an invaluable family medicine. I know of no better remedy for liver troubles, and have always found them a prompt cure for dyspepsia."—James Quinn, 90 Middle st., Hartford, Conn.

"Having been troubled with costiveness, which seems inevitable with persons of sedentary habits, I have tried Ayer's Pills, hoping for relief. I am glad to say that they have served me better than any other medicine. I arrive at this conclusion only after a faithful trial of their merits."—Samuel T. Jones, Oak st., Boston, Mass.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodge than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

THE GLORIOUS CAUSE.

The new song book, "The Glorious Cause," by Dr. Geo. F. Root (single copy 30 cents; 20 copies or over, 27 cents each, express unpaid), is exactly what is needed for general temperance, Gospel temperance and local Union meetings. It has a fine selection of old tunes, while the new ones "hit the nail" squarely on the head. W. I. PHILLIPS,

YOU SHOULD READ

AMERICA.

WHY?

Because it is the only paper in America that advocates American rule in the United States.

Because AMERICA gives each week for ten cents the equivalent of the contents of a 35c. monthly.

Because AMERICA has a larger corps of distinguished contributors than any paper in this country.

Because you can subscribe one year for $3.50, six months for $2.00, three months for $1.00.

Because you can buy it of any newsdealer for ten cents per copy.

Because if you buy a copy, and can truthfully state that its principles are not worthy of the support of every American citizen, your money will be refunded on application to

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00. Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, in two volumes, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated," as advertised, but the signs, grips, passwords, etc., of these three degrees are given at the close of Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated." Vol. 1 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive. Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive. Price per volume, paper cover, 50 cts. each; in cloth, $1.00 each. Each volume per dozen, paper covers, $4.00; per dozen, cloth bound, $9.00.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639 Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry; the exact "Illinois Work," fully illustrated. New edition 274 pages; bound flexible cloth covers, 50 cts.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing ove five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75 cts.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body at Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

National Christian Association.
221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Free Masonry. 10 cents each, per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers; price, 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DeGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Salvation as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cts.

Anti-Masonic Sermons and Addresses. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness;" the Sermons of Messrs. Cross, Williams, M'Nary, Dow and Sarver; the two addresses of Prest Blanchard, the addresses of Prest H. H. George, Prof. J. G. Carson and Rev. M. S. Drury; "Thirteen Reasons why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion" and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages: cloth, $1.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the InITIATE. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, By Rev. J Day Brownlee. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able Sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The President, Commissioner Miller, and Colonel Lamont returned from Clinton Forge, Va., where they spent several days fishing.

B. J. Hall, commissioner of patents, in his annual report says that the total number of applications received during the year was 40,177, a decrease of 847.

Senator Blair has introduced a resolution instructing the Senate committee on Inter-state Commerce to investigate the Craig system of mechanical telegraph. In explaining the resolution Mr. Blair said that the owner of the patent claimed that 2,000 words could be sent over the wires at the cost of a single letter postage. He suggested that if this was true here was an opportunity for the government to introduce at slight expense a system which would supplant the Western Union monopoly.

POLITICAL.

Gen. B. F. Butler was invited by citizens of Boston, irrespective of party, to give his views on leading political questions, and spoke Friday evening in Tremont Temple. He attacked President Cleveland's messages on tariff and the fisheries and condemned the Mills bill for tariff reduction as unworthy of public approbation.

President Fitzgerald of the Irish National League, learning that the St. Louis branch was preparing a Sunday demonstration at which politics would be discussed by Republican and Democratic speakers, condemned the arrangement as such a departure from the non-political course of the Irish National League, if carried out, would compel the executive to cancel the charter of the central branch.

The Iowa Democratic Convention adopted the following in its platform last week: "The Democratic party now, as heretofore, declares itself opposed to prohibition, and strongly condemns the same as injurious alike to our business interests and the cause of temperance."

A New York dispatch says that Patrick Ford, of the Irish World, has made a demand on the Republican National Committee for $100,000. With this sum he promises to control the Irish organizations of the country, and turn their votes over to Harrison and Morton.

Much indignation has been stirred up against Postmaster Judd of this city, for placing a list of his employes in the hands of his law partner Esher to be bled for campaign funds. They were all called upon individually.

At a Cleveland ratification meeting in New York Monday night speeches were made by Henry George and William Lloyd Garrison, son of the old Abolitionist, who boldly declared that they had no desire to conceal that their "attitude was one of absolute free trade."

CHICAGO.

Articles of incorporation were recorded Wednesday in the office of the Secretary of State of the Chicago West Division Elevated Railroad Company with a capital of ten million dollars. It is intended to construct a railroad from a point on the South Side west across the river with branches.

During the month of August more than $60,000 worth of valuables have been secured by the gang of burglars and housebreakers who have been practicing their peculiar profession in the various sections of the city, and as yet no arrests have been made. A dozen houses are sometimes raided in a single night. Under Mayor Roche the police force is becoming a mere political machine. Many of the new policemen are boys and very inefficient in appearance.

The coal barons of Chicago decided last week to raise the price of hard coal 50 cents a ton, commencing Sept. 1, in spite of the protest of the retail dealers.

The agitation for a change in the management of the postoffice in this city has at last reached Washington, and it is reported that Pres. Cleveland will accept Mr. Judd's resignation soon. The discovery of the robberies going on for two years has settled the question of his ability to manage the business.

COUNTRY.

The Western lines engaged in the live stock war are said to have lost $1,000,000, and the managers of the different roads will meet at Chicago, Monday, Sept. 3, for the purpose of endeavoring to patch up peace.

John Fillhart, aged 93, hanged himself in his son's barn at Depanville, N. Y., Thursday night for some cause unknown.

Frost, Thursday night, in the northern part of Minnesota, and in the Red River Valley, is reported to have injured crops.

The last day of August finds the yellow fever epidemic in full sway in Jacksonville, Florida, with every part of the city infected. The whole number of cases reported to Friday is 211; deaths, 30. Friday's report: 23 new cases for the twenty-four hours ending at 6 o'clock P. M., 4 deaths.

A wind and rain storm of unusual violence prevailed Thursday night in the Hot Springs (Ark.) district. A raging flood swept through the latter city, destroying many structures and partly submerging others. It is said that thirteen persons were drowned. The financial loss is placed at $100,000. Hotels were flooded and houses all along the main street undermined.

The new Chicago, Burlington & Quincy steel railroad bridge at Nebraska City, Neb., built at a cost of $1,500,000, was formally opened Thursday by imposing and interesting ceremonies. Sixty thousand strangers were in the city, and many prominent railroad officials.

The will of the late Charles Crocker, Second Vice President of the Southern Pacific Company, was probated Wednesday. The widow is made executrix, and left half the estate of $25,250,000.

The steamer St. Paul. owned by the Alaska Commercial Company, arrived at San Francisco Monday with a cargo of sealskins and other furs valued at $2,000,000.

Forty-five business firms of Davenport, Iowa, commenced proceedings before the State Railroad Commissioners Thursday against the Rock Island, B., C. R. and N., C., M. and St. Paul, and Minneapolis and St. Louis Railroads for discriminating in freight rates.

The Mississippi State Board of Health Thursday issued an order forbidding entrance to the State without a health officer's certificate, the Governor approving.

The malady which has been affecting the people of Caldwell, Ohio, for a month, is now believed to be caused by disease germs in the drinking water, the town having no system of drainage. The population is only 1,800, but there have been twenty-five deaths, and nearly every family is affected.

An old bridge over Dry Fork, near Taylorsville, Ala., went down Thursday while a party of young folks were on their way to a picnic over it. Four were killed and several wounded.

Samuel Stambroak, a leading merchant at Kincaid, Kan., while umpiring an amateur baseball game Wednesday, was struck on the neck by a swiftly pitched ball, tipped by the batsman, and instantly killed.

A report reached Kansas City that a battle was fought in "No Man's Land" last week between eighteen horse thieves and a force of fifty Colorado settlers, and that all the outlaws were killed, together with three of the vigilantes.

Fire broke out in a toy warehouse at Baltimore, about four o'clock Sunday morning, and before the firemen could get to work, an explosion of fireworks wrecked the building and caused the flames to spread with alarming rapidity to a drug house on the north and a hat house on the south. Scarcely had the firemen entered the building occupied by the drug firm when the inside of the building seemed to suddenly drop in, a terrific explosion followed, and the immense building collapsed. All the men were buried in the wreck and seven were killed. The fire spread through the block and destroyed $1,000,000 worth.

A special Sept. 2 from Booneville, Mo., says: Six section men were killed at a small station near this city yesterday by a freight train jumping the track. A caboose attached to the freight was filled with passengers, all of whom escaped serious injury.

The boiler of Uhler's saw-mill, located ten miles north of Springfield, Ill., exploded Thursday, killing N. M. Richard, a well-known resident, and two others aged 22. Low water in the boiler was the cause of the explosion.

FOREIGN.

Dispatches from St. Paul de Loanda on Wednesday state that Bartellot's expedition in search of Stanley is composed of 640 carriers and 100 soldiers, recruited by Tippo Tib. Three whites, Rose, Troupet and Samesson, accompany Bartellot, Samesson heading the advance. Bartellot proposes to trace Stanley step by step. The force is heavily equipped with supplies, and advances slowly. At the end of June news reached Camp Yambunga that the first stages of Bartellot's march were well over, but no information from Stanley was received.

A party of dervishes numbering 500 recently attacked an Egyptian fort near Wady Halfa, capturing a portion of the works. Re-enforcements arrived from Wady Halfa and the Egyptians repulsed the dervishes, killing 100 of them. The Egyptian loss was sixteen killed and twenty-seven wounded.

The will of the late Emperor Frederick of Germany will soon be published. It is reported that one passage declares that an extension of popular rights would be the strongest bond of union between the nation and the monarchy.

The Catholic Bishops of Germany assembled at Fulda have signed an address to the Pope in which they severely attack the clauses in the Italian penal code regarding abuses by the clergy. The Archbishops of Cologne and Posen are among the signers.

Canadian government officials while admitting that the plan outlined by President Cleveland's Retaliation message would entail great losses to Canadian interests, particularly to the transportation companies, protest that no recent action on the part of the Dominion Government justifies the severe measures proposed by the President.

NEWS OF THE WEEK..... 16

The failure of one of the largest of the fine furniture establishments of this city was heard with surprise last week, and seldom has such a calamity resulted from so tragic a cause. Just after the murder of the millionaire A. J. Snell on the West Side last winter, the youngest son of the furniture dealer appointed himself night-watchman for the house and armed himself with a revolver. Not long after, pointing the weapon in sport at his elder brother, as if at a burglar, an accidental touch upon the trigger sent a fatal bullet on its errand. This older son was the chief business associate in the firm, and the father never recovered from the shock of the tragedy. He lost interest in his business, which declined, and the creditors had to close it up. A similar case, but more shocking, is just reported from Columbus, Ohio. A young man of one of the wealthiest families was explaining the working of his revolver to a friend, when it was discharged and the bullet killed his mother, sitting across the room. The revolver was made to kill men; why should it not be prohibited, except in the hands of those public officers of whom sometimes it is demanded that they shall take life?

The Ohio Centennial Exposition at Columbus is intended to show the growth and development of the "Buckeye" State in the first hundred years of its history. This strange jumble of heathenism and Christianity in its program opened last week. The letter of the Ohio agent shows how much regard is paid to a testimony for Christ in this Vanity-fair hodge-podge of popery, lodgery, political Punch-and-Judy shows, church creeds, etc., etc. But the "great moral circus" will this week be entirely eclipsed by the sham Grand Army, which holds its twenty-second annual meeting in Columbus. The scared press reporters began Monday morning to announce that 250,000 visitors would be in the city, which will be a nice little crowd for a city of 52,000 to entertain. There must be something criminal in attempting, by the attraction of cheap rates and a great show, to crowd a small city so dangerously. And more than this, all over the country the Sabbath quiet was broken by the clamor of crowds on streets and on trains moving toward this lodge meeting. The Secret Empire knows no Sabbath, and will destroy it in [illegible] if unchecked.

Major R. W. McClaughry, whose able management of the Illinois Penitentiary at Joliet has given him a national reputation, spoke in the Centenary M. E. church in this city last Sabbath evening on the reformation of our criminals. At the close of his interesting remarks he spoke of the home influence as a preventive of crime, and eloquently contrasted the happy Christian home with the temptations of the street, the club, the theater, the lodge, the saloon and the dance house. The Major did not mention these agencies, but the general terms of his language covered them all. He said: "All over your city there are beautiful palaces costing thousands of dollars. How many homes do they contain? In how many is there that sturdy, old-fashioned home influence? Those old-fashioned homes gave few recruits to the criminal classes, but from the others thousands have gone forth. There is not that peculiar friendship between parents and children. We should look to it to see where our boys and girls spend their evenings. Most of the evil learned by boys is learned in darkness."

President Cleveland's letter of acceptance was published Monday, and deserves to be read by voters of all parties. It lacks the sententious vigor of General Fisk's acceptance, and has not, like that, the tone of high moral conviction; but on the lower plane of public economy, it is an argument that deserves a fair consideration from every citizen, and especially from the wage-worker. General Harrison has reserved his fire, but his letter may be now daily expected. Mr. Cleveland's turgid and verbose style obscures his ideas, but he evidently has convictions on the injustice of piling up $130,000,000 surplus in the U. S. treasury—money which has been taken, not generally from the rich, but from the poorer classes of workingmen, which should in some just and lawful way be used for their benefit and the accumulation stopped. He argues that the reduction of this income should be on duties on raw material needed in our factories, and his reasoning will justly have great weight with unprejudiced men. On some other points the letter is not so clear. Civil service reform is dismissed with a word. Of a second Presidential term, which four years ago he repudiated, he says nothing. He does not deal in righteousness with the Southern race conflict. And the great national crime of intemperance he dodges, as well as a large man can, by giving the Republican free-whisky plank a splitting blow.

The Philadelphia Telegraph reports that a medal is about to be struck at Rome commemorating the jubilee of Leo XIII. On one side it is to bear the portrait of the Pope; on the reverse are to be represented the five continents prostrated before him. The legend in Latin will express: "The homage and congratulations of the whole world." These medals will probably be carefully distributed among the Protestant rulers, who humbled themselves and abased their religious professions by sending presents to Rome last spring. Only we insist that Grover Cleveland wear his about his neck for a Voodoo charm to keep off the Republican free-whisky mange and carry it away among his relics of office when he leaves the White House. And may God forbid that another American President should ever congratulate a Pope, except on his becoming an humble Christian.

Dr. Windthorst, the late antagonist of Bismarck in the German parliament, addressed the Catholic Diet just closed at Freiburg, and argued that the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope would be for Bismarck one of the most glorious achievements toward maintaining the peace of nations. The scheme would appear to be a joke upon the old chancellor, who a few years ago carried the Falk laws, expelled the Jesuits, and vowed never to go to Canossa, did we not know that the occasion when it was presented was a serious one, and that Bismarck has been out-maneuvered by Rome, until the wily Jesuit has not only nullified or revoked all the decrees against him, but interferes in a very positive manner with the movements of Bismarck's young Emperor. The contemplated visit of the latter to Italy is soon to be made, and the Pope has ordered his retainers and guards to be ready to attend upon his coming with the greatest pomp and dignity. No pains will be spared to impress upon young William that King Humbert is not to be compared with Pope Leo, and it would be a handsome acknowledgment of the fact to aid in the very plot broached by Windthorst.

MODERN INDULGENCES.

BY REV. H. M. BISSELL, MISSIONARY IN MEXICO.

The attention of American citizens has been recently directed to the doctrine of "indulgences," and to the practices connected therewith previous to the Reformation. Some facts touching the present offer of indulgence, as laid down in popular Roman Catholic works in present use, and likewise concerning a related doctrine, which now overshadows this, may be of interest.

The "Catholic Dictionary," by Addis and Arnold, a standard work bearing the imprimatua of two cardinals and the Censor Deputatus, states (p. 444) that "Pius IX (April 14, 1854) bestowed on those who wear the blue ecapular of the Immaculate Conception and say six Paters, Aves and four Marias in honor of the Trinity and the Immaculate Virgin, and for the exaltation of the church, extirpation of heresy, etc., all the indulgences which could be obtained by visiting the seven Roman Basilicas, the holy places of Jerusalem, the church of Portiuncula at Assisi, and that of Compostella. Even confession and communion are not required for these indulgences. Large and often plenary indulgences are attached to the recitation of short prayers (though usually confession and communion are required if the indulgence is plenary), and to the use of blessed crosses, medals, etc."

Let us see what are some of these prayers, and how devoid of any aspiration or desire for deliverance from sin. I have before me the following "Jaculatorio" in two distinct works; one the famous Glorias de Maria, by S. Ligoris, the other, a little book of devotions, costing a few cents. A literal translation runs thus:

"AN EJACULATION TO OUR LADY.

"Blessed be thy purity,
Eternally so let it be,
For very God Himself delights
In thy gracious beauty.

"To thee, celestial princess,
Holy Virgin Mary,
To thee, I offer from this day
Soul, life and heart:
Look upon me with compassion,
Do not leave me, mother mine."

The following note is appended as an incentive to the use of this prayer: "His Holiness, Pius VII., has granted two hundred days of indulgence for each letter which this ejaculation contains; making [for each single repetition] 37,200 [days];" that is a trifle more than a round century. On page 510 of the same "Glories of Mary" we learn that "Pius VI..... granted perpetually to all Christians a hundred days "of indulgence for each devout and contrite repetition of the following ejaculation: 'Blessed be the holy and immaculate conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary.'" A foot note here calls attention to the jaculatorio quoted above, which at 200 days per letter is certainly far more productive.

On the same page we are told that, "In order to stimulate the faithful to come frequently to Most Holy Mary with the devotion of the holy Rosary, Benedict XIII. granted to all, who, with contrite hearts, repeat the entire Rosary, composed of fifteen 'decenas' [the "decena" consists of ten Ave Marias and one Pater Noster], or even the third part of the same, that is, five 'decenas,' a hundred days of indulgence for each Pater Noster and Ave Maria, and plenary indulgence is granted to those who repeat, at least, the third part daily during an entire year, confessing and communing once during that time. These indulgences are perpetual, and may also be applied to the dead." In order to gain them it is necessary that the Rosary shall have been duly blessed. A note here directs us to page 405, where Ligoris, a canonized saint (no error, therefore, could be found in his writings), makes the unqualified assertion that, "To him who repeats the third part of the Rosary, seventy thousand years of indulgence are granted."

The foregoing illustrations might be indefinitely extended. Under the present Romish theory these indulgences are applied to shorten, or to remove entirely, the purgatorial pains of souls saved but not glorified. A strange alternative is presented: either, as Faber tells us,

> "In pains beyond all earthly pains,
> Favorites of Jesus! there they lie,
> Letting the fire purge out their stains," or else, some attention having been given, by themselves or others, to such prayers as those quoted above, this fearful purging can be dispensed with. Either a century of suffering is declared necessary to cleanse a small portion of the stains of sin, or, ten short lines of sentiment addressed to the Virgin.

The numerous prayers similar to the above, the expressed desire of Benedict XIII. "that the faithful come frequently to Most Holy Mary in the devotion of the holy Rosary," and the distribution of the Rosary itself (one hundred and fifty prayers to Mary and ten Pater Nosters), all plainly suggest the practice which to-day holds supreme place in Romish worship. Her apologists may hide as they will behind a saving theory. In fact, the mass of her communicants are left to believe, if not taught to believe, that Mary is practically divine, and fully sufficient for all their needs. The idea is firmly rooted in the popular mind that an appeal to Mary is far surer of its object than a direct appeal to Christ. Within a few months men have solemnly assured the writer: "I believe Mary is superior to the Creator, her Son." Another defended the proposition that Mary, like God, "exists in heaven, on earth and in every place." These men are above, rather than below, the intelligence of the majority, in a land which Rome has instructed for three and a half centuries.

But why should one suggest that such views are the result of ignorance? Open again Las Glorias de Maria, an Italian work sufficiently important to have been rendered into Latin, and to have reached the sixth edition in Spanish in 1883. Coming from the pen of a doctor and saint, Canon Littledale calls it a theological work. Its 518 pages well represent the leading feature of the Romanism of to-day. They are devoted to a glorification of Mary by argument, prayers, citations from ancient authorities (some of them trustworthy and some of them falsified), and by very numerous examples of her alleged mercy and power. A few literal translations will suffice.

1. Mary was a First-begotten of God. "She was His first-begotten daughter, as she herself testifies: 'I came from the mouth of the Most High, begotten before all creatures.'" (See Ecclesiasticus 24: 5.) Again: "Predestinated together with the Son in the divine decrees before every creature" (pp. 204, 205).

2. Mary is more compassionate than Christ. "We shall be more quickly heard and saved, coming to Mary and invoking her holy name, than that of Jesus our Saviour. More quickly shall we find safety flying to the Mother than the Son." "Many things are asked from God and are not obtained: they are asked from Mary [note the "from;" phraseology identical in Spanish and English] and they are granted" (p. 82).

3. Mary is omnipotent. "O Mary, my sovereign Queen.... To Thee I fly. Thou canst help me. Succor me, O my Mother; do not tell me thou canst not, for I know thou art omnipotent" (p. 36). "As the Mother, then, should have the same power that the Son hath, Jesus, who is omnipotent, has, with reason, made Mary omnipotent" (p. 116). "At the command of the Virgin all things obey, even God" (p. 115). In the Latin version this reads: Imperio Virginis omnia famulantur etiam Deus. "God, also, submitted himself to her" (p. 114). "Enough that Mary speak, and her Son executes all" (p. 118).

4. Salvation is in Mary's hands. "The salvation of all depends on their being favored and protected by Mary. He whom she protects is saved, and he whom she protects not will be lost" (p. 107). Addressing Mary: "No one is saved except by Thee" (p. 107, italics quoted). "In Thee I place all my hopes, all my salvation" (p. 198). "None can enter that happy mansion except through Mary, who is its door" (p. 99). "Christ said none could come to him except the Father draw him by grace divine; and likewise he says of his Mother: 'No man cometh unto me unless my Mother draw him by her supplication'" (p. 105).

5. This salvation, and only this, is sure. "It is impossible that a devotee of Mary should be lost" (p. 147). "He that serves not the Virgin shall die in his sins." "He that flies not to Thee, Lady, shall not reach heaven" (p. 148). "Mary says: 'He that cometh unto me, and heareth what I say to him, shall not be lost'" (p. 149). This is, in short, the burden of the work; its precepts, and its more than a hundred examples, all go to show that persistent devotion to Mary, even in the midst of an abandoned life, will save the vilest. Sinners of every hue live godless, shameless lives, and are brought at last to "a good death;" and on being asked how it comes about, tell us, as does the highwayman who confessed himself after being decapitated, "I have done nothing more than to fast regularly one day in the week in honor of the Virgin" (p. 430).

This is indulgence in a subtler form than that antiquated sort which cost Rome so dear, and which she so earnestly desires us to forget, and by this modern indulgence she holds sway over the natural man. This touches society and citizenship at the root. If the present stir brings the evangelical church to feel more directly its responsibility toward those who are held in this bondage, and if for every copy of a text-book thrown out of our public schools on this account, scores of copies of some such compact and telling little work as Littledale's "Plain Reasons,"* packed with unanswerable historic fact, can be put into Christian homes and libraries, as a supplement to Dr. Strong's tremendous fifth chapter in "Our Country," the agitation will not have been in vain.

La Barca, Mexico.

UNDER THE APPLE BOUGHS.

BY MISS E. E. FLAGG.

There is a beautiful legend that the rose was once native to Paradise, the only flower that at the prayer of Eve was allowed to send its roots outside the sword-guarded gates of Eden to spring up amid the thorns and thistles of a sin-cursed earth. She has a near relation in the apple-blossom, I may say a poor relation, beside the royal Bourbon, Marechal Niel, and Jacknemot; but it is the peasant beauty, and not the gem-bedecked belle of the ball-room, that the poet and the artist choose; and though I am neither artist nor poet, I love the apple-blossom so well that I love the whole tree which bears it, root and branch, from the gnarled trunk to the tiniest twig that lifts its coronet of green against this mid-summer sky. And, by the way, it is to me one of the profoundest mysteries how the Divine Artist manages these two seemingly irreconcilable colors, blue and green. Worth would not dare put blue trimmings on a green dress, and I think Morris or Tadema would hesitate before they painted the walls of a room green and the ceiling blue; but He puts emerald green into the landscape and ultramarine blue into the sky and sea, and then so cunningly blends them that they melt together into harmony, perfect as the songs of angels; and the blue-bell springs up under His divine finger, not a whit the less fairy-like for its green setting. Here, in the most common things of every-day life, nature is repeating and confirming to our faithless hearts the truth of revelation's word, "With God all things are possible."

But I digress; let me go back to my apple-tree. It has none of the soaring altitude of the palm, none of the sacred associations of the olive, but all manner of sweet, earthly sympathies cling about it. The neighborly robin chooses her out a crotch of its boughs in which to build; its leaves and bark support a population as various and busy in ephemeral variety and ephemeral busy-ness as if it were a planet, and through the rents in its green curtain of verdure you can look up and see all heaven if you want to. But no thoughtful eye can look on a heap of apples lying under it, ready for the cider-mill, without a very contrary vision.

We may treat the story of Eden as an allegory, and Eve and the apple as a myth, but the serpent in the cider-barrel is neither a myth nor an allegory. Too many souls have been bitten by its sharp, remorseless fangs; for whether evolved from the grain that has absorbed the richness of Western acres, fatter than the regions of the Nile; grapes that have ripened in the suns of Southern California under the same latitude with Palestine; or a New England apple-orchard, that has gathered into itself all the ripeness and glory of the Indian Summer, it is the same old serpent of alcohol that at the last stings like an adder. And just as it comes out of the fairest things in nature, so it takes the fairest things to prey upon. Can you afford to harbor the serpent of the still? If in a magic glass could be shown you, farmers of New England, the career of one single soul whose appetite, fostered when a boy at the bunghole of the cider-cask, has become a raging demon, driving him down to that fearful abyss of destruction plummet has never sounded, and over which is written in letters of fire, "No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God," would you not shudder and turn pale, and vow with all the might of your newly-aroused being not to give the thing place; that heavenly eyes shall not see, as delineated in old Bible pictures, the serpent twining round your apple-trees, to bite any unguarded child of Eve?

But what shall we do with our surplus? Nature has partly answered this question by making the apple one of the most healthful and appetizing articles of diet for horses and cows, children and pigs. But even children and pigs cannot exhaust the supply in our fruit-bearing years. Shall we let them rot on the ground? Better on the ground than in the human stomach. But here Love steps in with "a more excellent way." There is a beautiful old Mosaic law, that the gleanings of the harvest and vintage should be left for the stranger, the widow and the fatherless. Perhaps you live in one of those villages where everybody is well-to-do, is at least above actual want; and if yours be a no-license town, good, thrifty, farmer of Massachusetts or Connecticut, the probabilities are greatly in favor of this supposition; but in these days of steam-travel, the city with its thousands of poor children cannot be more than a few hours remove. I have often wondered why there could not be some concerted movement, aided in the matter of free transportation by the railroads; a fruit mission as well as a flower mission, by which this super-abundance might be utilized for charity. In every barrel of apples thus sent to our city poor, whether to hospitals, asylums, and free-lunch rooms, or into their own wretched homes, dwells an imprisoned angel; the angel of sweet, by-gone memories of old home associations; perhaps to many an angel of health and hope. Mammon may tell you of a small advantage in dollars and cents if you let your apples go to make cider, but like a wily lawyer, while seeming to be for your interests, he is really talking on the side of his client, the devil. Beloved, let him not deceive you. God has called you to be the stewards of his bounty. Those russet and golden and carmine globes are all his. He made them to be not only "good for food," but "pleasant to the eyes." Will you rob him of that which is his own, and give over to the devil this wealth of spicy sweetness that loads your orchard? When your soul stands at the bar of judgment, which do you desire on your side, the fiend or the angel?

Answer these questions as heaven would have you answer them, and, like Adam, you may walk among the trees of your garden in the cool of the day; but unlike him, hear the voice of God call to you in every rustling leaf and not be afraid.

It is very evident that the love of secret combinations and hatred to distinctive holiness entertains no love for or good will towards us as a people. The enemies of a church are sometimes its best commendation. The prince of darkness, as the head center of all organized secretism, most viciously and maliciously hates our disciplinary testimony against all secret societies. The more sin hates the more saints should love the open truth in its fearless testimony against the darkness of associate secretism. God has given us as a people a high and holy commission to spread the light of Scripture holiness and fight the darkness of lodge demonism. As we prove true to our divinely given call will God be with, defend and prosper us. No "wiles" of sin or Satan shall lure or drive us from the work committed to our hearts and hands.—Wesleyan Methodist.

A special from New Lisbon, Ohio, tells of the sad suicide of a woman named Thompson. She had recently given birth to a child, and her husband celebrated the event by getting intoxicated. This so preyed upon Mrs. Thompson's mind that she arose from her bed with the child, and going to a small brook near the house lay down in the water. Mother and child were drowned.

A bushel of corn makes four gallons of whisky. It sells for $16 at retail. The government gets $3.60, the farmer gets 40 cents, the railroad $1, the manufacturer $4, the vender $7, and the drinker all that is left—delirium tremens.

IS THERE A PERSONAL DEVIL?

AN EXEGESIS BY REV. GEO. P. BYINGTON, SHOREHAM, VT., READ BEFORE THE ADDISON ASSOCIATION, AUG. 28, 1888.

"The Lord said unto Satan, Whence comest thou? Then Satan answered the Lord, and said, From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it."—Job 2: 2.

The revisers made no change in rendering the original of this verse, and left no trace in the margin of difference of opinion concerning it, and I will not revise their work. The passage occurs in the prose introduction with which the author prepares the reader to understand his poem of forty chapters which follows. And yet, underlying the simple style of narrative, in the verse before us is a poetic figure which makes the explanation more difficult. The figure is that of God as a monarch on a throne, surrounded by servants whom he sends forth to do his will, and who return from time to time for fresh commands. These are holy angels of God, and among them comes one called Satan.

1. The question is raised as to the real existence of this Satan, and this question belongs with another: Is the whole narrative an allegory, with the names of only fictitious beings occurring in it; or is it partly real and partly fact? It may be answered that the whole has the appearance of being real history; and it requires more than a theory to turn it into an allegory. Its representation of God's holy angels going forth and returning, as ministers of his will, agrees with the general teaching of the Scriptures. The existence of the sons of God (in such association) is not doubtful; and our narrative treats Satan as having the same reality of being as the sons of God, whom he follows to the throne.

The same representation also implies the real existence of a man called Job, who is known as a historical person, for Ezekiel speaks of Job just as he does of Noah and Daniel, who are undoubted historical characters; and James holds up Job as an example of patience. The verisimilitude of the scene also makes Satan here as real as God. They talk together, and we may as well say that the one does not exist as the other; and so it is not probable that God and sons of God and Job in this narrative are all true beings, while Satan, who appears to be just as real, is fictitious!

2. If then our passage implies the reality of Satan's existence, it also implies his personality. He who is styled Satan, cannot be a mere evil principle; for such a principle must belong to some personal being: and if God is the only personal being present, then we shall have him (by a figure), talking with an evil principle within himself. But he has no such evil in heaven. Hence, even poetic license will not permit us to interpret this Satan who talks with God as other than a personal being. He shows, too, the intelligence, self-consciousness and free moral agency, which make him a person. He recollects the past; he relates its history; he shows a sense of responsibility; the pronoun "himself" is applied to him; he is as real a person as the angel Gabriel; and if we are at liberty to read out, even of this poetic story (in God's Word), Satan's real, personal, existence, I know not what (in the Bible) we may not read out (or in) at pleasure.

3. Our passage implies that Satan is a creature, finite and limited in power and work. Here he is acknowledging his accountability to God, like one of us. God demands, "Whence comest thou?" Only a being made by God is answerable to him. If there were a second self-created, self-existent, infinite being, God could not ask him to give account of himself.

The rest of the narrative brings out, in detail, how Satan is limited by God's will, in what he can do to Job. And other Scriptures, which represent Satan as bound by God's chain, agree with this. Our passage will not let us give to Satan the Divine attribute of omnipresence (as some of the talk we hear in religious meetings practically does), for Satan represents himself as "going up and down in the earth and walking to and fro in it. That is, he is never in two places at once, like a Divine being, but he must travel by some process, and take time in order to reach a given point. If he is personally tempting some one in Boston, at this moment, he is not in Middlebury, or Paris. No matter how swiftly he may journey, he must consume time (like the limited, created being that he is). Our passage agrees with the rest of the Bible in making it improper to speak (or think) of him as in many places at once.

4. Our passage implies, also, that Satan is an evil being; because God is here calling him to give account of himself. The sons of God, whom he follows to the throne, are not called to account—but he alone! With a being who is perfectly holy, God does not enter into judgment. There is no need of it. He may make him his attendant, and his minister of judgment, and a spectator of the judgment of others. God may say, "Where art thou, Adam?" when Adam has been sinning; or, "What doest thou here, Elijah?" when Elijah is distrustful; or, "What is this that I hear of thee?" when the steward has not been faithful; or, "Whence comest thou?" when Satan is coming from a journey for evil purposes. I know of no Scripture or reason why God should ever call the good to give account. Judgment implies sin. Also, the very name Satan here means "Adversary;" and when we read the whole narrative, we find it means "Adversary of God and good men."

5. Our passage implies that Satan is the overseer of evil in this world. His journeys to and fro and up and down in the earth are as superintendent of wickedness, to organize, discipline, direct his army, so that the most concerted and effective hindrance to the will and work of God may be maintained. Satan is the restless and mercurial leader, planning his campaign, and passing rapidly from one part of the world-wide field to another, to diffuse his spirit, to communicate his plots. Most of his personal interviews are with demoniac or human leaders—like Judas, or Nero, or Tiberius, or Richard III., or Alexander VI., or Robert Ingersoll. Many of his interviews are with persons who are born leaders, whom he wants to secure as generals of his host, (like Adam, Job, Jesus, Paul and Luther). Mr. Moody says, "It is better to get ten men to do the work of ten men, than it is for one to do the work of ten men." And here is where Mr. M. agrees with Satan. He does not do all the work of tempting the world. He does not need to. He works mostly through agents, and there are plenty of agents. The strongest evidence to-day (outside of the Bible) for the existence and agency of a personal devil is the union of plan and effort on the part of those who are doing evil work,—the sameness of method of those who oppose revivals, or manage the liquor traffic, or scatter the issues of the Satanic press.

6. Our passage implies, also, that Satan's usurped authority over this world will come to an end. For he is the adversary of God, and the time must come when the almighty power and wisdom of God will end all his craft and power.

INEXPRESSIBLY SAD.

We have one of the most painful facts to record which has often fallen to our lot to mention. A few years since, under the efficient pastorate of Rev. N. E. Jenkins, a youngerly man by the name of Thomas W. Jackson was licensed to preach by the Syracuse Wesleyan Methodist church. Brother Jackson possessed pleasing gifts, and was soon ordained, and for several years served as pastor of the Wesleyan Methodist church of Lisbon, N. Y. One year ago last spring, under influences which we do not care here to mention, he joined the Methodist Episcopal church just before the meeting of the Wesleyan Methodist Champlain conference, and received an appointment by the Methodist Episcopals. Going to his new appointment but one Sabbath, he left and went to West Plattsburg and engaged to serve that Wesleyan Methodist charge. The Champlain conference passed it all by without a word, as he had returned his letter of standing to Rev. R. E. Johnson, president of the conference, just before the session. Last spring brother Jackson left the Wesleyan Methodist and joined the Methodist Episcopal church again, and went to serve a comparatively weak appointment in Clinton county. Now comes the painful intelligence just received. "Rev. T. W. Jackson, who left the Wesleyan Methodists last spring and joined the Methodist Episcopal church, is dead. He was drawn into the Masonic snare at Plattsburg. After being initiated into the third degree he was brought home from the lodge sick, about one o'clock at night, and run right down and died one week after being carried from the lodge." These are terrible facts. Whether the roughness of the treatment, the smitings of conscience, or some mysterious drinking in of deadly, Masonic charity led to the fatal issue, we opine not. In the Masonic lodge in Plattsburg, where Jackson was initiated, a candidate was handled so roughly some years since, Jubelum doing his setting-maul work so effectively, that when they went to raise the "dead" candidate they found him in a fainting fit and were seriously alarmed for fear that he was dead, indeed. He finally rallied, never to enter the lodge again.

Oh, that God would give us a people to understand more perfectly the true character of the entire lodge system. Let none of our people dare utter one word of apology for organized secrecy, which as a system is one and inseparable. Out forever on the whole system of darkness and of death! All secret societies are offspring of one common parentage. He who adopts the evil-doer's methods, as characterized by Christ, has no right to claim that he is covering and concealing some wonderful good, under the method condemned by Christ as only appropriate to evil. "For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God." O ye apologists for secretism, go to the new-made grave of Rev. Thomas W. Jackson, and cover your faces with shame and weep.—Wesleyan Methodist.

THE WORK OF THE SPIRIT.

[From the Christian Witness, Boston.]

I was a Master Mason twenty years, a Royal Arch Mason fifteen years, and an Odd-fellow eight years, during which time I was a minister of the Gospel, and, as I believe, "a Christian." I believed in and defended those organizations.

Soon after I experienced entire sanctification, the Holy Spirit enabled me to see the whole subject of secret societies in a new light.

Except a short conversation with an old friend, I neither read nor heard anything from others respecting the matter while re-investigating it. After much reflection and prayer, it appeared to me that I must withdraw from, and renounce all secret societies, or come into condemnation. That was the first time the matter was presented to me in that light. My heart was consciously free from inbred sin, and the light of the Holy Spirit filled my soul. Other things also which I had previously considered harmless, then appeared wrong. My spiritual perception was greatly clarified.

Under a deep sense of humiliation, bordering at times on agony, after delaying action until my opinions ripened into convictions, I took steps whereby I obtained certificates of honorable withdrawal from all secret societies.

With them there came to my heart a sweet sense of God's approval, which grows sweeter and stronger as time advances.

I shall now mention but one of the several reasons which prompted my action, namely: According to my understanding, Freemasonry and its offspring, Odd-fellowship, in their religious teachings, antagonize orthodoxy and foster unscriptural views of the requisite preparation for heaven.

This is done throughout their ritualistic work generally, and especially in their burial services, by assuming and implying that all who perform their covenant obligations as members of those orders go to heaven, in consequence thereof, with no other conditions required at death.

While studiously avoiding all allusion to Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit, and their redemptive work, under guise of neutrality as to religious creed, and while inculcating correct moral precepts, the theological atmosphere which is breathed in the work of the lodges of those organizations is that of salvation by works, and not by faith.

To the average mind, unevangelical doctrine is thereby inculcated, carnal security is fostered, and the seeds of spiritual ruin are sown.

My range of facts convinces me that, in not a few instances, the influence of the lodge operates as a dry rot on the spirituality of professors of religion, and as an opiate on the religious creed and consciences of unprofessors. I profoundly believe that much of the subtle and fatal skepticism of the times, relative to the essential points of orthodoxy, is due to secret societies more than to anything else.—Joseph H. Brown, of Marlboro, N. H.

Each member of the United States Senate has taken a solemn oath to vote on all questions according to the interests of the nation. It is a serious thing to say that this oath is deliberately broken, but there are certain facts which challenge attention. On the 22d a vote was take on the Fisheries Treaty with Great Britain. The Democrats, twenty-seven in number, voted solidly to confirm the treaty, while the Republicans, thirty in number, voted solidly to reject it. Now if the treaty was plainly unjust, and to the disadvantage of the nation, the Democrats must have supported it merely for partisan reasons. If, on the other hand, the treaty was plainly just and to the advantage of the nation, the Republicans must have opposed it from merely partisan reasons. In other words, either the twenty-seven Democrats or the thirty Republicans broke their solemn oath and voted according to the interests, not of the nation, but of the party.—Christian Inquirer.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

California Wines and Foreign Tourists—Labor Day—The Opinion of a Missionary and Late U. S. Consul on the Catholic Question—Italian Votes—A New Use of the Ten Commandments.

California wine-makers, it may be supposed, are taking "heart of grace" from Kate Field's projected Eastern tour, in which she purposes to show that the free use of pure California wine will solve the temperance problem for the country. It is not often they can get so distinguished an apostle, especially one of the gentler sex, to advocate their financially losing cause. They say that the vast quantities of beer and whisky consumed throughout the country is the reason that they have now two hundred thousand gallons of new wine in their cellars, besides the stock left over from the vintage of previous years. They point us to France where 30 gallons a year per capita is set down as the average consumption; but the United States is not quite prepared to be made a New France. Speaking of our tourists who give such rose-colored reports of the temperate habits of wine-growing countries, is it not a rather strange fact as well as a severe commentary on their superficial observation that they never seem to see the immorality which prevails in these same countries? In the Papal States, for instance, carefully prepared statistics show that murders reach the frightful average of 1 to every 750 of the population. Yet it is needless to say that in the notebook of the Italian tourist, assassinations, awfully common as they are, seldom figure; and why should cases of drunkenness?

Our astute legislators passed a law last April which allows the saloons to keep open on Labor Day—which by the way is a most decided misnomer, as it means the exact opposite of its name—and thus when other places of business have to be closed, the saloons are left free to reap their golden harvests, and make of the day a nuisance even to the class it was originally designed to benefit. A body of men elected by party interests will be likely to serve the party which elects them, untroubled by questions either of morals or consistency. Mr. Henry H. Faxon has probably done as much as any one by the strong weight of his personal influence to keep Prohibitionists in the Republican ranks, but it is understood that he is far from pleased at the platform they adopted at Chicago, and may bolt if, at their forthcoming State Convention at Worcester, they fail to pass strong temperance resolutions. Hatred of the Democrats more than love for the Republicans has hitherto kept Mr. Faxon on the wrong side of the political fence. Anything more scathing can hardly be imagined than the arraignment which he has given that party in some of his campaign documents.

The fact that a gift of $250 from the Prince of Wales to a Roman Catholic charity, only half of the sum which Gov. Ames, as stated in my last letter, lately gave to the Roman Catholic church at Easton, is wakening serious comment in the London newspapers, gives emphasis to the remarks made on a recent Sabbath by the Rev. William Clark, late U. S. Consul to Italy: "A project, like the establishing of the Roman Catholic University at Washington, would be a principal topic of discussion in Europe, but here in America no one seems to give it a moment's thought. This Washington university will be the grand climax to Jesuitism in America." This gentleman has been a missionary to Constantinople, has been in Europe for more than thirty years, and in his work, which has been largely educational, has constantly come in collision with the Jesuits, and can therefore speak with authority, both as to the danger from their machinations, and the comparative indifference with which they are regarded by Americans. Italy will not allow one of them on her board of educators, because she recognizes the fact that they will teach doctrines contrary to her laws. Shall Massachusetts be more careless of her glorious heritage than papal Italy?

The Congressional Committee on Contract Labor have ended their investigations at the Tremont House with a rather bad showing for New England. The testimony of Mr. John Orvis, who was once a member of the Brook Farm Community, which the names of Thoreau, Emerson and Alcott have rendered more famous in its failure than most other similar undertakings in their success, was the one last taken. He testified that to-day 95 per cent of the employes in New England mills were aliens, and a third of these French Canadians. In regard to Italian immigration, the report that they are brought over for political purposes as well as for labor, and are now being prepared, wholly ignorant as they are, to vote next November, is one that calls for immediate restriction of our suffrage laws. This is quite as important as the iron-clad anti-Chinese bill, which endorsed by Cleveland is now before Congress, and which a Democratic paper asserts, "is all that could possibly be desired by the most ardent hater of the Chinese." A friend recently suggested to me that in her opinion much good might be done by printing the Ten Commandments in large letters and posting them up in all places of public resort. I agree with her and only offer the further suggestion that to post them up on the walls of our National Capitol would be a most appropaiate beginning of this good work. E. E. FLAGG.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, O., Sept. 5, 1888.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Last Sabbath morning I preached in the Mt. Auburn Presbyterian church, Rev. Dr. Spinning, pastor. We were warmly greeted by the friends who remembered us from our visit a year ago. In the evening I preached in the Central Presbyterian church, Rev. Dr. Francis, pastor. Some friends from the Third church came up to hear the Sabbath question discussed.

A great many things are done on Sabbath unnecessarily under the plea of "necessity". They say it is necessary to run the water works. During the flood the water works engines did not run for eight days, and there was no water famine. It would do no harm to stop them one day in seven. The same is true of the gas works. You say street cars are a necessity. In Toronto, Canada, they have no street cars on Sabbath, and the people get to church. "Thou shalt do no work." That will close every meat shop, grocery, tobacco store and bakery in the city, and tie up the ice wagons and milk carts, as well as close the postoffice. Why not do it? Has God's law become of none effect?

Yesterday the Columbus Centennial of Ohio was inaugurated. Gov. Foraker in his address, said of the great State of Ohio:

"During this century the whole of the 26,000,000 acres of our area has been subjected to the uses of man; more than 17,000,000 of these acres have been put under actual cultivation, with the result of an annual yield of more than 100,000,000 bushels of corn and more than 40,000,000 bushels of wheat, with all other agricultural products which our climate admits in due proportion. We have 600 coal mines, that give us an output of more than 8,000,000 tons of coal annually. We have more than 7,000 manufacturing establishments, almost as varied in character as are the wants and purposes of man, in which are invested a capital of more than $200,000,000. In these establishments 250,000 men, women and children find remunerative employment, and from them we have products, fabrics and wares amounting annually to more than $400,000,000, which go out into all channels of trade and commerce, to literally gather from the ends of the earth rich rewards for the labor, skill and ingenuity of our mechanics and artisans, and add to the fame and name of a progressive and enterprising people.

"With generous and patriotic magnanimity, Virginia parted for the common good with her title to our soil, and with far-sighted statesmanship Union-loving and God-fearing Massachusetts and Connecticut gave us our institutions as well as our first settlers. To them we are indebted for the fact that before the Constitution of the United States was adopted we had in force here, through the agency of the ordinance of 1787, those great energizing ideas that 'religion, morality and knowledge are essential to good government,' and had vouchsafed to all citizens the right to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience."

Yesterday Gen. Harrison made a triumphal march from Toledo to Indianapolis. He talked much about the tariff, but had nothing to say about the liquor traffic. He magnifies that pigmy, but cannot see the pyramid. Whitefield was accused of leading audiences into excitement. "I have heard," he said in reply, "of a traveler who saw, at the side of the way, a woman weeping and beating her breast. He ran to her and asked, 'What can I do for you? What is the cause of your anguish?' 'My child is in the well!' With swift dispatch assistance was given, and the child rescued. Farther on, this same traveler met another woman, wailing also and beating her breast. He came swiftly to her, and with great earnestness asked, 'What is your trouble?' 'My pitcher is in the well! My pitcher is in the well!' Our social and political excitements are all about pitchers in the wells, and our religious excitements are about children in the wells." Harrison cries, "My pitcher is in the well! My pitcher is in the well!" Fisk shouts, "My child is in the well! My child is in the well!" Which should be heeded? J. M. FOSTER.

REFORM NEWS.

The Twelfth Annual Meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association will be held in the Advent Christian church, corner of Atkinson and St. Thomas Streets, Dover, N. H., October 23–26, commencing Tuesday evening and closing Friday evening. The following laborers have engaged to be present and assist in the work of the Lord: Wm. F. Davis, now in Charles Street jail for preaching the Gospel to the poor, Henry J. Pierson and wife, evangelists of Boston, Revs. Isaac Hyatt, A. A. Hoyt, E. W. Oakes and Miss E. E. Flagg. Rev. Edward Robie, D.D., Mrs. Dr. Odell, Mrs. C. W. Bixby, and Miss I. D. Haines have also been invited and are expected. F. A. Blackmer and wife have been invited to lead the service of song.

WASHINGTON REFORM NOTES.

THE PROFITS OF SABBATH-KEEPING.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 3, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Bro. W. H. Ramsay kindly gives the use of his organ, and Miss Jennie Foster has volunteered to play it and otherwise assist Mrs. Stoddard in her school on Sabbath. The attendance yesterday was encouraging, and at three o'clock Bro. Johnston was greeted by an intelligent company, who gave earnest heed to the things spoken by him. An hour's conference followed, in which seventeen gave their testimony, all but three speaking of their strong convictions against the lodge. One brother gave it as his experience, that when he came into the "True Light" he was out of the darkness of the lodge, and could never return to that darkness without giving up his hope of heaven.

The pastors who have been absent are beginning to return, and will, no doubt, resume the ministers' meetings on Mondays. I met several of our colored brethren in the Metropolitan A. M. E. church to-day. They were very cordial and showed me every courtesy. I gave a brief account of Mrs. Stoddard's school, of our prayer and preaching services, and of some cases of special interest in families in this neighborhood, which met their hearty approval. I then said, "Our special line of work is in connection with the secret lodges. Although I have never been a member, my observation has led me seriously to question their utility, and greatly to fear that connection with these orders is one cause of the want of spirituality in the churches, and one hindrance to the maintenance of prayer meetings, of which your brethren have spoken." I gave reasons why I entertained such fears. A very kind and candid consideration of the subject followed, in which the brethren stated their views and relations to the secret orders, and their reasons for uniting or standing aloof from them.

After listening for an hour or so, I asked to be heard in a few words, which was readily granted; and I said if the brethren could show me that Christ's church was so defective in its provisions as to require a supplement of human inventions to assure the care of the sick and the burial of the dead, or if they could show that Masonry was a divine institution, then, for Christ's sake, and at his bidding, I would submit to be blind-folded, cable-towed and sworn; but never for the loaves and fishes, or to secure a decent burial, would I surrender my right of private judgment, or consent to join hands with the wicked in a form of godliness from which the name of my Saviour was excluded. The chairman, who said, "I am a Mason and an Odd-fellow," listened attentively, and another brother, who is a Mason, proposed to devote another meeting to the consideration of the subject, which met the seeming approval of all present.

I spoke of my purpose to start a Friday-night prayer meeting, to be led by colored brethren, and several said they would like their turn in leading such a meeting. Bro. Moore, of Lincoln Congregational Mission church, will also heartily co-operate, and, I presume, others whom I have not seen. All received tracts and promised to call at No. 215, 4½ street for further light.

The following letter, recently received from Bro. A. M. Paull of Providence, R. I., will interest your readers, and, I trust, subserve the cause of righteousness. Replying to a letter of inquiry in reference to desecration or observance of the Sabbath, Bro. Paull says:

"In inquiring at the ticket office of the line, I learned the following facts: The Massachusetts was wrecked about 1876, the Rhode Island about 1879. Between these dates the Narragansett and Stonington collided, and one boat was consumed by fire. No lives were lost on the Massachusetts, although the passengers were obliged to remain on the boat through the night, until daylight opened a way of escape. The light work of the boat was badly broken, and six large holes were made in the hull by the constant thumping on the rocks. At great expense the boat was floated and towed to New York and repaired.

"No lives were lost on the Rhode Island. The boat, however, was a complete loss except the engine, which was raised and put into a newly-built boat, occupying about a year's time in building, during which time the income from running the boat ceased, of course, as there was no boat to run.

"The other disaster was fearful in loss of life, though some were saved. Just previous to these disasters an advertisement appeared in the papers, stating the number of years the line of boats had run without missing a trip. My impression is twenty or twenty-five years. About the time I saw that advertisement, happening into a wholesale house on business, I overheard two men, apparently stockholders on the line, saying, 'We may as well run the boats on Sundays, and have something coming in, as to have them lie idle all day.' Soon after the Massachusetts and Rhode Island began to run Sunday excursions, almost immediately followed by the disasters spoken of above.

"After the last one, Rev. E. K. Fuller, one of the stockholders, addressed a letter to the president of the line, asking him if they had not lost about enough money on account of desecrating the Sabbath. The letter had the effect of putting a stop to it; and I was informed by the agent to-day there had been no accident of any kind since, although the boats have run continuously for the nine years to date. The line is generally known as the 'Providence and Stonington Steamship Company,' the points of connection being Boston and New York by train to Providence or Stonington, and boat from those places to New York and return."

The course pursued by the management of this steamboat line in desisting from the desecration of God's holy day is deserving the careful attention of those who are responsible for the movement of trains on the railroads in violation of the command, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." May it not appear that these men are responsible, not for the destruction of property only, but for the blood of those who perish in the terrible judgments that come unheralded to whole train-loads of people?

A DISGRACE TO OHIO.

THE LODGE-RIDDEN CENTENNIAL AT COLUMBUS—ITS MANAGERS VIOLATE THEIR CONTRACT WITH THE OHIO AGENT.

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 7, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Subsequent to my last report it was requested, at a Covenanter prayer meeting at Hopewell, that I remain over Sabbath, preaching in Dr. Cannon's pulpit, he being called away to hold communion with the church at Londonderry. The request seeming to be from the Lord, I remained and enjoyed a pleasant Sabbath. A collection amounting to seven dollars was taken for our cause. I am especially indebted to Wm. Johnston of this congregation for his kind assistance. The kindness of others would be mentioned did space permit.

Again at home, I found Dr. H. A. Thompson, who was given charge of the Educational department at the Centennial, had kindly reserved a very desirable space for the exhibit and advertisement of our work near the main door, in the building given to his supervision. I went to work at once to fit it up to exhibit our work to advantage. An artist was found and the following was placed on a canvas 4x6 feet on the wall, in a semi-circle in large letters: "LIGHT ON THE LODGE;" beneath were the square and compass and three links, to attract attention. Under this: "Churches in the United States with over one million communicant members exclude persons belonging to secret societies from membership." Under this: "I do abhor the selfish, clannish spirit of secret societies."—Joseph Cook.

A counter was made, on which was placed a goodly number of our publications together with tracts and advertisements of our work for free distribution. The sign, as expected, attracted the attention of nearly all. I was kept very busy the first day giving tracts and answering questions. A delegation of Knights Templars from Connecticut, with feathers in their caps, gaudy dress, and any quantity of badges, medals and gewgaws, stopped, and seeing a tract on which the candidate is represented kneeling at a Masonic altar, one turned to the other and said, "Give me the word of a Master Mason or Master's secret or I'll take your life." Another seeing the square and compass, took me for a brother Mason, made the sign, told me of his lodge, of the recent burial of a brother, etc. Some of the officials wearing keystones and other Masonic trinkets, called and demanded by what right I was there. I referred them to Dr. Thompson, whom I supposed had entire control of the building. Tracts and circulars were given to all who wanted them, and it was evident that I had an interesting part of the program.

The next morning about 9 o'clock, Secretary L. M. Bonham, accompanied by his assistant, called and asked if I represented the National Christian Association. I assured him that I had the honor of representing that body. He then handed me the following resolution, adding that he was authorized by the committee to state that hereafter I would not be allowed to exhibit our literature, or distribute circulars and tracts on the grounds; that the different secret societies had been invited to come there, and they proposed to protect them, etc. The resolution reads:

WHEREAS, The National Christian Association, having a stand or location in the Educational department, is distributing circulars, tracts and so on, contrary to the rule of the Board forbidding distributing of advertising matter on the grounds and in the buildings; and as some of these circulars are direct attacks on other organizations which have been recognized by this Board in the order of special days; therefore,

Resolved, That said National Christian Association and others be forbidden to distribute or expose for sale any circular or literature antagonistic to societies or organizations represented on our list of special days. UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED.

After reading the resolution, I told the Secretary that I was a law-abiding citizen, and since the committee deemed it necessary to protect the lodges, I would remove, expecting of course that they return to me the expense to which I had been, as I came in lawfully under the invitation of their appointed agent. This he was not inclined to do. I think it can be collected by law, but perhaps it will cost more than it will come to.

Let us consider the resolution:

1. It puts me in the light of a law-breaker, "distributing," etc., "contrary to the rule." No rules were given me, nor was I told of any pertaining to this matter. The woman suffragists have been giving away tracts and circulars right along advertising their work. Smythe & Co., book-dealers, are giving circulars advertising their work. The monumental men are advertising in this way. In some places the floor is literally covered with advertisements of various kinds. Yet the committee fail to see these.

2. The last clause of the preamble should have been placed first, for it contains the entire reason for their prohibition.

3. If this resolution was enforced, half the literature in the Educational department would be excluded from the grounds. This is the special day for the Catholics. This resolution would exclude all Protestant literature "antagonistic" to them. Democratic and Republican papers are sold. They antagonize, of course, with the special days of these parties, and with the Prohibitionist special day, Oct. 11. The metallic and stone monument antagonize, and so might we go on.

The reader can see at once the underhanded, unfair, sneaking work of the lodge. The board having in charge the Educational department, declared their sympathy with me, and but for the disturbance, would have contested the matter with the higher authorities.

W. B. STODDARD.

THE CANVASS FOR THE SOUTHERN HEADQUARTERS.

WYANET, Ill., Sept. 7, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Leaving Chicago on the afternoon of the 3rd, I reached Aurora at 7 P. M., and was most hospitably entertained and aided in my work by Bro. John Gardner, whose fidelity and faith has not abated. I was glad to become acquainted with the pastor of the First Baptist church of that city, Rev. N. C. Mallory, whom I found to be an outspoken reformer, and in cordial sympathy with our reform work. Other friends that we called on had lost none of their zeal or relaxed in their efforts to reprove "the unfruitful works of darkness."

Instead, as I had thought, of finding Aurora at a standstill, I found it growing quite rapidly. A considerable addition is being made on the southwest side of the city, a large new public school building is nearly completed, and a new Baptist church is just undertaken. New avenues, full of stumps and trees, are being laid out and graded. The Adventists are holding a camp meeting in the border of the city, and in spite of the political excitement the people have not forgotten their higher obligations to the Divine government.

From Aurora I went to Princeton, and was cordially entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Hodgman, whose labors and contributions for all Christian and reform work are worthy of all commendation. Princeton is a beautiful town, but it does not speak well for a place that glories in having been the home of Owen Lovejoy and the early center of Christian and reform principles, that now it should have a large number of saloons and lodges, and that its old and respectable churches should exert so little influence for good. I called on Rev. Dr. Bascom, who was a pioneer in Christian work in northern Illinois. I found him very feeble, but strong in faith. He expressed his hearty sympathy with our work, and was glad to hear of the progress made in the South. Ten years ago he introduced a resolution against secret societies at a Congregational Association at Montgomery, Ala., and was glad to know that it was adopted.

I attended the Wednesday afternoon prayer meeting at the Congregational church, and by invitation spoke briefly of my work among the schools and churches of the South. What I said was listened to with respectful attention. By the kindness of Rev. Wm. Pinkney, I visited the Wesleyan people of Bureau, making numerous calls, and staying over night with Bros. Fay and Bradley, who are stalwarts in the cause of reform. Bro. Pinkney has preached for this people for nine years, and is likely to continue in a work both pleasant and profitable. The brethren here have all aided in our work. They are all doing much for the Prohibition cause, but still have a large reserve of sympathy for the anti-secrecy reform. Nor should I fail to mention the Congregational pastor of this place, Rev. Mr. Gibson, who gives a faithful testimony against both the saloon and the lodge iniquity.

On the whole, our anti-secrecy reform is broadening and deepening, though at present somewhat obscured by other movements. I expect to go West. About $500 still remains to be raised for our New Orleans work. I trust the friends of the reform will not be unmindful of the importance of the undertaking. Yours in the Lord, H. H. HINMAN.

FROM NORTHERN LOUISIANA.

TRENTON, La., Sept. 7, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—While information from other portions of Louisiana is coming to you, a few lines from this portion of the State may be of interest.

This place is situated on the Ouachita river, two miles above Monroe, a city of about five or six thousand inhabitants, ninety-six miles from Shreveport on Red river, and seventy-five from Vicksburg on the Mississippi river, sixty-five miles south of the State of Arkansas. The soil is fertile and yields abundantly.

I have only belonged to one secret society, viz., the Knights of Pythias, and as soon as I found that it was no secret, and that it was lead by the devil, I had religion enough in me to say, "Get behind me, Satan." I brought many more out with me, and am still earnestly at work discouraging every act leading to secretism. The societies are not doing much among the colored here now. Until Rev. Woodsmall came through, they were many; since then they have gradually gone down. Prohibition is gaining some ground in this portion of the State.

W. G. HEAD.

FROM THE LOUISIANA AGENT.

THE FLOOD—THE LODGES—THE MASSACRE OF NEGROES.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 1, 1888.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Thank God, the water has gone down now, and we can get about the city again without skiffs and flats. But despite the $5,000 appropriated by the city council and the free rations distributed among the destitute, the suffering is yet intense. The weather has been very warm and threatening, with occasional showers. Up to this writing I have not been informed whether the secret lodges directly or indirectly relieve these poor sufferers. Yet some of them are boasting of their benevolence. Mr. Jones, a prominent secretist and a P. C. C., met me Wednesday evening and wanted to know why the Cynosure makes war on the old lodge rum Republican party, and does not expose the Democrats. I explained to the gentleman that our object was not only to expose Republican fraud, but to oppose, withstand and expose corruption in both religious and political circles irrespective of creeds. He went on to denounce my course in preaching against lodgery in the city and country. He said that I was making more disturbance in the country and doing more evil to the Odd-fellows and masonics than any other man in this State, and he thought I had best to stop.

I preached Sabbath at 3 P. M. at Orleans Street Baptist church, to a moderate congregation, and was invited by Rev. Wm. W. Davis to preach at St. Mark's Fourth Baptist church at 7:30 P. M. But Mr. Davis has a $540 debt on his church to be paid by March 10, 1889, and as it might be an offense to some of his secret members and the lodges that frequent his church, he declined to let me preach after I arrived at the church.

Miss Lucy Parker Folsom, the faithful young teacher of St. Mark's church mission school for the last two years, passed a most rigid and triumphant examination before the Parish School Board at Southern University lately. She resigned the mission school to take charge of the public school at New Texas, September 15. Miss Folsom is a young lady who has carried herself above reproach and clear of secret societies and all other immoral deviltries that New Orleans is so sore afflicted with. Friends would do well to write to Miss Folsom after September 20, at New Texas, Pointe Coupee Co., La., and send her temperance and other reform tracts for distribution. I am sure she will do much good by her untiring efforts in New Texas.

It seems as though the Southern Negro is used as a target, especially in years of national contests. The wholesale manner in which the poor defenceless Negroes in Freetown and Abbeville, in Iberia Parish, have been murdered for the last three weeks is worse than in the far heathen lands. It seems that the Southern Democrats, or at least a majority of them here in Louisiana, will resort to any kind of violence and slaughtering of Negroes to keep the State in Democratic hands. They seem to despise any other party principles saving their own. When Rev. Mr. Thomas was speaking in Rapids Parish, several years ago, in defense of the Prohibition party, the Democrats of Robeline attempted to murder him; and last year the Knights of Labor were the cause, in part, of many poor Negroes being killed and churches closed in Lafourche and Terre Bonne parishes. But now there is no Negro lodge at the head of this wholesale slaughter in Iberia Parish. Surely God will visit the iniquity of these heartless men upon their children for shedding so much innocent blood. These heartless creatures are not satisfied with murdering the poor Negro men, but they even whip and kill the poor women.

We write these facts in order that the praying readers of the North will understand how these murderous bull-dozers are shielded from punishment by their pernicious oaths and obligations of "Hail, for ever conceal and never reveal;" inasmuch as Freemasonry was a covert for slavery, even so secretism is a dark cloak, white-washed over, for these crimes. And notwithstanding all these undeniable facts, which should cause every Christian to forsake these dark lodges, we see speculative secretists multiplying new lodges very near every month. O God, deliver us from this terrible snare of the devil. And may every Christian go in earnest prayer, and not cease until we see these altars of these midnight lodges crumbling down.

The Knights of Labor have been distributing rations yesterday and to-day (Saturday), so I am told. Of course, the lodge must do something, as a kind of seductive bait. I attended covenant meeting at the old Baptist church last night. The Spirit of the Lord was there, and many were made to rejoice. Rev. J. L. Burt, the pastor, treated me very kindly, and invited me to lecture for his people when I return from Vicksburg. I am expecting to leave about the 6th for Greenwood, Johnsonville, Lexington, Yazoo City, Greenville, Marysville, Lake Providence (La.), Vicksburg, Natchez, and other points. Friends can write to me, and send tracts, Cynosures, etc., to Natchez, Miss., until September 20.

F. J. DAVIDSON.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

The fifteenth annual meeting of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Miss Frances E. Willard, president, will be held in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Oct. 19 to 23. The convention will number 400 delegates, from every State and Territory of the United States, representing 10,000 local auxiliaries and more than 200,000 members. Forty departments of work will be reviewed under the heads of preventive, educational, evangelistic, legal, and the department of organization. A large representation of Southern ladies will be in attendance. Mrs. Mary T. Burt, president of the New York Woman's Christian Temperance Union, is at the head of the committee on arrangements, and will be well supported by the great organization which she leads.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A PRISON PARABLE.

CELL 20, SUFFOLK CO. JAIL,
BOSTON, Mass, Aug. 23, 1888.

One morning, after having been in jail six months, I had a curious dream. I seemed to be on top of one of the green hills of Chelsea, Massachusetts, where we can look up into the blue-domed sky, around upon verdant fields and orchards, and off over the tumultuous city and far-tossing sea. Among myriads of objects present to view, vast flocks of clamorous crows caught and held my attention.

Their indescribable numbers, their unresting industry, their loud cawing, and their eager rivalry in labors which I had never before known to engage these creatures' attention, combined to assure me that this was High Crow-Day.

But what were they trying to do?

Multitudes seemed to be flying, with labored flapping of their black wings, from the surface of the sea several hundred feet up into the sky. Other ten thousands were diving sea-ward from their airy heights, and dipping into the waves. These forthwith joined the vast procession which was toiling slowly up the viewless stairways of the skies, only to plunge down again after reaching a certain level, with much noise, to repeat their strange endeavors.

Looking intently, I now saw that each crow brought up from the sea a fish in its beak, which it carried carefully to a height of about six hundred feet, deposited beside the fishes brought up by other crows, and then flew back for fresh booty.

As for the fishes, though shaped like a herring, they were as transparent as a jelly-fish. There they lay, wriggling and flapping, as if supported by the surface of an invisible table far above the ocean, an innumerable multitude, extended like a vast cloud, only more transparent than a cloud of watery vapor, only less transparent than the air itself.

While I wondered at these new conditions of crows, clouds, and fishes, a furious tempest came whirling in from the sea. With a loud roar the wind struck the cloud. The fishes fell into the sea. The crows, uttering the most discordant cries of anger, disappointment, and despair, dashed headlong into the water after their fishes, and were instantly buried beneath the waves.

From this real vision of an imaginary occurrence, for crows are never so foolish as men, I awoke, and understood that, as a dream when one awaketh, so will all this world's unholy ambitions, pride, riches, pleasure, and false religions descend into the bottomless abyss at the coming of the Son of man in the glory of the Father, with his saints and holy angels. In that day whoever has relied upon his bank, his stocks, his culture, his strength, his social eminence, his name, his family, his denomination, his politics, his anything but Jesus Christ and him crucified, will find his reliance like the crows' treasure in heaven.

WM. F. DAVIS.

PITH AND POINT.

FROM WESTERN KANSAS.

In the last Cynosure I see a communication from northern Kansas with reference to the whole country being given over to the control of secret societies. Had the writer come a little further west he would have found it still worse. I never was in a place where there was so much need of a reformation. The people are not only unmercifully oppressed by secret societies, but money extortioners, the most bold and desperate I ever heard of. On last Sabbath I saw the two worst extortioners in the country, after robbing and oppressing the poor through the week at three per cent, these two men, the leaders in the so-called house of God, pass around to gather the few remaining pennies. I have found a few good, solid Prohibition and anti-secret society men and women here.—A LOVER OF JUSTICE, MERCY AND TRUTH, Oberlin, Kans.

NO MASONRY IN HIS PROHIBITION.

I have been an Anti-mason ever since the night Morgan was taken through the town of Victor. I saw them change horses there at 12 o'clock at night. I am also a strong Prohibitionist, but am also strong enough not to vote for a Mason or any other secret society man. Please to accept my thanks for your paper. I have distributed it widely.—MORGAN BEMENT, Canandaigua, N. Y.

CAN'T VOTE FOR A MASON.

I am now past eighty, have taken the Cynosure from the very first, and I have enjoyed its contents very much. After reading it have sent the paper far and near, and not three have been lost; have got some subscribers years ago, and have been as much interested as any one needs to be. I wish I could see the downfall of Masonry, but it will be denied me. My weak judgment tells me it is a mistake to vote for a demitted Mason. He is no better than any other Mason. The same as a letter from a church, can hand it in when and where he has a mind to.—ALLAN WRIGHT, Wilton Center, Will Co., Ill.

THE VERMONT CANVASS.

I am speaking somewhere every Sabbath. Our people are in that state of ignorance regarding the subject that they do not apprehend any danger to church or state, and imagine those who do so to be cranks and half crazy. President Blanchard's coming was a great blessing to us all, and I can but feel that God has been wonderfully with us. This has been gained, more churches are open than I can possibly fill, and I must try and get audiences through the week.—J. A. LEACH.

LITERATURE.

THE IMPENETRABLE MYSTERY OF ZORA BURNS. Pp. 108. Price, cloth, 50 cents: paper, 25 cents. Published by the author, 112 N. Clark St., Chicago.

Five years ago this fall the horrible murder of the young girl, Zora Burns, at Lincoln, Ill., horrified the whole community, and the subsequent investigations, which pointed to a Freemason named Carpenter as her betrayer and murderer, aroused such a storm of popular indignation that Carpenter had to flee from the vicinity, although by the aid of the lodge he was unconvicted by the courts. A young man who followed up some of the proofs of Carpenter's guilt, which seemed to make it certain, found this lodge influence impossible to overcome, and his evidence was not heard in the legal investigations. The father of the murdered girl attempted to shoot Carpenter, and the temper of the people, it would seem, would have vindicated him had the effort been successful. All these facts, and more, were widely published in the papers at the time. This volume is the work of the young man above mentioned. It is the history of the case, and account of the evidence which might have brought the murderer to justice. The book will have many readers, but its statements will by some, no doubt, be discredited, because of the singular, disconnected, and, sometimes, extravagant style, and lack of clear method in the arrangement. The author was his own compositor and proof-reader. The book is for sale at the N. C. A. office, and by E. A. Cook, 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The following is a letter from John B. Alden, the popular publisher, to Miss F. E. Willard: "Years ago, when I was clerking in Chicago in a stationary store for a Presbyterian deacon, I was an opponent not only of strong drinks of every sort, including tea and coffee, but an equally strong opponent of what I still think almost an equal abomination with liquor, the use of tobacco; so when our deacon concluded to increase his business by adding the sale of cigar-cases, I refused to sell them, and got my discharge in consequence. Your neighbor, Dr. Hatfield, can tell you how I went to him to advise about the matter, and he thought it might be well for me to yield on the point of the cigar-cases, but in spite of his advice I stood out."

The frontispiece of the September Century is a portrait of Edward Thring. Since Dr. Thomas Arnold of Rugby, Mr. Thring has been regarded the most highly esteemed educator of England. He was late head master of the Uppingham Grammar School, England. The article on this English institution describes "an ancient school worked on modern ideas." Other articles related to this subject are "The Industrial Idea in Education," by Charles M. Carter; "The University and the Bible," by T. T. Munger; "Women who go to College," by Arthur Gilman; and a paper on "College Fraternities." In addition there is an "Open Letter," by President Seelye, of Amherst, on the subject of "College Fraternities;" also an "Open Letter" on "Art Education," by W. J. Stillman, and two editorials having to do with teaching. The college fraternity articles are weak apologies for these demoralizing sccieties, and the Century will not do justice to this topic unless they procure a reply. Dr. E. E. White, late president of Purdue University, should have an opportunity to give his experience. At least the misrepresentation in his case should be corrected. Other articles in this number are a continuation of the Life of Lincoln: George Kennan on "Exile by Administrative Process;" A. C. Gordon on "Hard Times in the Confederacy;" Professor Holden's concluding article on "Sidereal Astronomy;" an illustrated article by Mrs. E. S. Starr on "Doves;" and "Bird Music," by S. P. Cheney, father of the poet. Mr. Kennan, in the department of "Open Letters," answers the question, "Is the Siberian Exile System to be at once Abolished?" His articles on the agitation for constitutional government, and the attempts of the Czar to suppress it, are an astounding revelation to many American readers.

The English Illustrated Magazine for September brings the close of Prof. Minto's story of the peasant uprising in the time of Wickliffe and Richard II, generally known as "Wat Tyler's Rebellion." We have followed the history of this movement as recorded by Prof. Minto with great interest, because of the light thrown upon labor difficulties of the present day. The oppressive taxes levied for the expenses of an extravagant court and unsuccessful wars, and the oppression of the feudal lords who held the peasants in a state of slavery, were the chief reasons for the rising. The sympathy of the young king, Richard II., with his poor people, and readiness to grant their prayer, the opposition of the lords and members of his council, and the intervention of the young Lollard, who was imbued with the generous sentiments of Wickliffe, form a narrative of deep interest. The story ends with so unhappy a tragedy that the reader could wish it had not so closely followed the record, and the author had been more free with his fancy. The illustrative papers in this number are descriptive of the Carpathian mountains of Poland, London street scenes and Hampton Court.

With the peaceful autumn days Vick's Magazine reflects the quiet beauty of nature. The leading articles are devoted to the apple orchard, to the preparation of the flowering shrubs for winter, and the care of fall plants. The anemone colored plate is a beauty.

"Does Literature Pay?" is a question asked and answered by Eugene L. Didier in the September number of The Writer (Boston). There are other bright and interesting articles in the same number of the magazine. The Writer admirably fulfills its purpose of being helpful and interesting to all literary workers, and each number is filled with practical hints and suggestions about the details of literary work that are well worth many times the price of the magazine to all who write.

The profits of gardening, whether it be fruit culture, floriculture or vegetable gardening, not only in direct money returns, but also in health, happiness and beautiful surroundings are, taken altogether, greater than those of plain farming and greater than those of most other pursuits. The taste for and the practice of gardening has been far less in this country than in Europe. Indeed, most of our commercial gardeners are of European birth and training. But now gardening is rapidly increasing in America, as shown, for example, by the marked success of The American Garden of New York, now acknowledged to be the foremost monthly horticultural periodical in the world.

The question: "What Makes Baby Cry so?" is discussed by Dr. Patton in the September number of Babyhood, and if it is not finally solved, at least several valuable suggestions are offered to perplexed mothers. "The Right and Wrong Use of Drugs," by Dr. Crandall, is an equally interesting article. It discriminates clearly between drugs that may be safely used in the home treatment of the minor ailments of children and those which are only safe in the physician's hands. An editorial paragraph enters a vigorous protest against the dissemination of a certain class of pseudo medical literature professing to teach "painless child-birth" through the avoidance of "bone-forming foods." The dangerous consequences of following this pernicious advice are pointed out.

St. Nicholas for September has a dainty summery frontispiece, the original of which may be found in almost every country place. The late Mr. E. P. Roe collected "Some Stories about 'the California Lion,'" during his recent sojourn in Southern California, and these stories are related in this number. Estelle Thomson relates a charming story about "Knot-Holes," and "What Dora Did" is a true story of a Dakota blizzard. There are several articles about birds: Ernest E. Thompson describes the "Pintail;" Henry Tyrrell writes a charming poem, "The Water-Ousels' Address;" and Charles Frederick Holder reports "How Some Birds are Cared For." Thomas Stevens describes the haunts and habits of the "Wild Pea-Fowls in British India," "Dick's Farm Hand," by Anna S. Reed, touches upon the labor question, and shows how a small boy found one solution of the problem. A very practical article, valuable to all ingenious boys, is "What to do with Old Corks," by Charles G. Leland.

LODGE NOTES.

The sixth national convention of the Woman's Relief Corps convenes in Columbus, Ohio, this week, along with the G. A. R. Headquarters of the Department of Illinois will be in the chapel of the First Presbyterian church.

The funeral of Emil Schandein, the brewer and Knight Templar Mason, was the greatest event of the kind ever seen in Milwaukee. Over ten thousand people gathered around the residence. The procession was over two miles in length, and was headed by 900 employes of the brewery, followed by the hearse, escorted by Wisconsin's Commandery of Knights Templar. There were no religious services (very appropriately) but an address was delivered at the grave by Herman Siegel, editor of the Freie Presse.

Charles H. Litchman, General Secretary of the Knights of Labor, has mailed his letter of resignation to Master Workman Powderly: He says: "I desire to be free to act as a citizen in this campaign. I could not retain my official position in the Knights while interested politically, because it is against the principles of the order for any of its members to engage in politics on the strength of their connection.

Great preparations are going on for the entertainment of the Iowa Grand Lodge Knights of Pythias which meets in Dubuque in October. D. B. Henderson, Congressman from the Third District, will deliver the address of welcome. William Ward, Mayor of Newark, N. J., the Supreme Chancellor of the world, will speak; also George B. Shaw, Mayor of Eau Claire, Wis., the Supreme Vice Chancellor of the world.

Ada, Ohio, was excited last Wednesday by the report that a band of White Caps had been in town. After a close investigation it was found that they had appeared at the residence of a woman named Strunn, who was taken out by them and tarred and feathered. She was accused of running a house of ill-fame. This is the first exploit of the White Caps in this part of the State. Mrs. Strunn was given twenty-four hours to leave.

Prominent Knights of Labor in Pittsburg, Pa., are considering the advisability of introducing a resolution at the next general assembly prohibiting any but American citizens from becoming members of the organization. Those advocating the change say that it would reduce membership about three fifths, but that the order would be better off with 100,000 good American citizens than with 500,000 of the class which are now coming in.

The Chapter General of America, Knights of St. John and Malta, concluded its annual session at Wilmington, Del., last Wednesday. The following officers were elected: Most Eminent Grand Commander, Richard A. Beatty, Bradford, Pa.; Very Eminent Lieutenant Commander, Christian Ambruster, New York; Very Eminent Grand Almoner, James M. Goodenough, New York; Very Eminent Grand Chancellor. Jonas L. McElroy, New York; Very Eminent Grand Assistant Chancellor, Cornelius Merritt, New York; Very Eminent Captain of the Guard, W. H. Alexander, Wilmington; Very Eminent Grand Prelate, William A. Carter, Brooklyn.

A prominent barber at Xenia, Ohio, named William Barr, who was being initiated into a colored Knights of Pythias lodge, jumped from a third story window onto the roof of a store adjoining, having become frightened during the initiation. A man in the store below became convinced that a burglar was on the roof and gave the alarm. Three policemen chased the fellow around over the roofs for half an hour, one policeman sliding down a water spout in a hurry to get a "move on himself." The frightened fellow thought all the time the police were K. of P's after him, hence he flew over the housetops. He was finally captured, his hands all cut and matters explained, but the initiation did not go on.—Ex.

Wisconsin Grand Lodge of Good Templars elected as Chief Templar E. W. Chafin, of Waukesha; Counselor, L. F. Cole, of Lacrosse; Vice Templar, Emma Brown, of Fort Atkinson; Superintendent of Juvenile Temples, Altie A. Reed, of Prescott; Secretary, B. F. Parker, of Mauston; Chaplain, Rev. John Schneider, of Edgarton. Grand Lodge headquarters were established in Milwaukee. Officer's reports showed that the membership in the insurance department of the order was 1,057 a year ago, and only 940 at present; receipts including balance were then $7,560, and there is now a balance of only $64. The whole order is hopelessly permeated, says a dispatch, with third partyism, which indicates that it is dying off before the advancing reform.

No lengthy advertisement is necessary to bolster up Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

EDITORS.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1888.

AN URGENT MATTER.

Our publisher has just sent to some 200 delinquent subscribers, who are owing the Cynosure over FIFTEEN HUNDRED DOLLARS, a personal, written request that they do the just thing, remember the Scripture command, to "Owe no man anything," and pay the small bill which they have allowed to accumulate against them IMMEDIATELY. The publisher has written these friends kindly. We hope his letter will be sufficient. But as some may be indifferent until the case is presented from another point of view, the editors wish to say to them:—

That objections to the account may be admitted, but you will rarely be able to make them good. Because we have sent you every week:

1. A statement of your account upon the address label, which shows the date to which the subscription is paid.

2. A statement of the terms under which the paper is continued. This is on the first page, and in the first column, where every eye can see it.

Now, your publisher had a right to believe, if you sent no order to stop the paper when the subscription expired, that you wished it continued and would pay the full rate. This was his proposition to you, REPEATED WEEK BY WEEK. If you did not wish to accept it, you did not send him a postal card (one cent) and tell him so; and if you object to his bill, you simply enter complaint against what?—your own neglect.

Now, that you have required the paper to be sent a year or two without prepayment, is it not reasonable that the N. C. A. should be no longer compelled to carry this burden? If you were a poor, colored pastor, we would raise money and send the paper freely. But you are not, and if you assume that you deserve to receive the paper gratuitously, you ought to prove it. As the case stands you are, so long as you withhold payment of a just bill (and one which the U. S. laws maintain), compelling the N. C. A. to publish the paper at a loss, and, thereby, using up funds which should go to pay lecturers and circulate tracts. The amount named above would employ three men like Bro. Davidson of Louisiana. Dear friends, look at this matter as you would if on the N. C. A. Board, and remember that these numerous small amounts make a large sum put together. It is little for you, but it is a serious matter for the National Association.

THE SOUTHERN MINISTERS' FUND has not been made conspicuous in our columns for several months. It is not because the excellence of this means of promoting the reform is any the less, but we were confident that the $1,500 asked for last year would come in. The subscriptions from the Carpenter fund in the hands of Dr. Roy have more than made up the balance, lacking in the last report of donations, or about $270. It is the desire of the members of the N. C. A. Board that this fund be continued, and as our next number opens the new volume, the proposition for a new year will be put before our generous readers.

CAMPAIGN CLUBS of ten subscribers for $1, all at one office, may be sent in at any time. The subscription of all these clubs expires Nov. 1. This remarkable offer has brought in hundreds of names; it should bring thousands. The reports of the lodge standing of candidates will be resumed next week.

THE VERMONT CANVASS.

MIDDLEBURY, Vt., Aug. 29, 1888.

DEAR READERS OF THE CYNOSURE:—We reached here day before yesterday, Aug. 27, and found one of the finest crowds I ever saw assembled, for a Republican rally. I judge three thousand persons were present. The city was blooming with flags, and beaming with stars. Mr. Griffin, (Anti-saloon Republican) of Kansas, was speaking. He told the crowd, "There was no hope for Prohibition but to turn the guns of the grand Republican party on the liquor traffic." Every bitter condemnation of the saloon was applauded loudly by the people.

The last speaker, Mr. Dewey, of Michigan, with an immense memory of its history, argued earnestly that the prosperity and happiness of the United States rose and sunk with the tariff! He lauded Gen. Jackson for his threat to hang secession "higher than Haman," in the person of John C. Calhoun; but especially for his tariff protection, and the prosperity of the people under him. (Some of us remember the wail of business under his throttle of the National Bank, and that he was a Democrat, bitterly cursed by what is now the "Republican party.") He spoke sneeringly of who meekly waited till the Republican rally was over, and yesterday got two magnificently tall spruce poles and were raising them to hang out their Fisk and Brook's flag. The chief of police came on them and ordered them to stop. The young men kept on. "If you put your shovel in the ground again," said the policeman, "I will arrest you." The young men worked on all the same, and the policeman subsided.

Yesterday, all day, I attended the Addison County Congregational Ministers' Association. Being vacation, President Brainerd was absent and some others. Nine ministers, however, were present. I was made an honorary member and participated in the execution of an excellent program. I was likewise permitted to address the Association, which I did in words nearly as follows:

RESPECTED BRETHREN:—Mrs. Blanchard and I were babtized in the white church on the hill yonder, years before you brethren had come to live with us. When I left my native State, Vermont was a unit in condemnation of the Masonic lodge, as owning another sworn allegiance than that to the United States, and practicing other worship than that appointed by Christ. The venerable Father Merrill, the sainted Bushnell, of Cornwall, the theologian Hopkins, of New Haven, Daniel O. Morton, of Shoreham, Lamb, of Bridgeport, and others of whom the world was not worthy, all then abhorred the lodge as I did then, have since done, and do now. As to the little lodges, got up and run by Masons, they are related to that mother lodge, as Sunday-schools to the church. And they cover the land, as Baal's altars in the time of Elijah.

John D. Caldwell, a leading, perhaps the leading Mason of Ohio, in their Masonic Temple in Cincinnati, where I went to purchase "Rebold's General History of Masonry in Europe," said to me, "We respect such gentlemen as you are, for we know you are sincere, and because you must be aware THAT WE ARE DISINTEGRATING YOUR CHURCHES!" In Boston there are 571 secret lodges to 223 churches. We need only to look at these two forces to see that the lodges, swallowing young men by thousands, money by millions, and their time by lifetimes, are "disintegrating those churches." And now, brethren, I have come back to these hills, dear as familiar friends, as Elijah came to Israel, to see if God will turn the heart of this people back from the altars of Baal to the altar of Jehovah-Christ. I wish to preach in the churches of this Association as I have preached in five of the Congregational churches in the south of the State.

One pastor wishes me to preach to his people here. And others yet may.

Rev. Mr. Byington, of Shoreham, gave the best and soundest exegesis on Satan I ever listened to. Rev. Mr. Stebbins, endorsed by Professor Yager, of the College, and also by the moderator, Rev. Mr. Hague, suggested that it was hazardous to say that Satan, a spirit, requires time for locomotion, since spirits live in eternity, not in time. The Association voted that the manuscript be given me to be published in the Cynosure. All will be pleased with it.

The Cynosure has said that Vermonters are the freest-minded people on earth, and we believe it; though with specific differences, the other New England States belong to the same genus. True, Joseph Smith and Brigham Young were Vermonters. But, "corruptio optimi pessima" (the best thing corrupted becomes the worst). And Mormonism and Masonry are among the worst things. When Vermont set her heel on the lodge-serpent in 1832, a little brassy, fifth-rate lawyer of Vergennes was the only one of any notoriety who had the audacity to brave the righteous, public sentiment of an enlightened people, by standing for Freemasonry without giving a solitary reason for so doing. As the lodges of Vermont went under the auctioneer's hammer, perhaps Phillip C. Tucker's reason for adhering to Masonry was in the property left in the lodges when good men forsook them.

In my Freshman year in Middlebury College this Phillip C. Tucker came from Vergennes and took up on the wrong side of some case in the court house, and slung insults at the people generally, "from the sublime and reverend Dr. Bates," the college president, who had nothing to do with, or interest in the suit, to every other decent citizen who shared public confidence at the time.

I well remember the scathing retort of Hon. Mr. Phelps, afterwards Senator, father of our present minister to England. He spoke thus:

"Your Honor, this plain case needs no argument; and as to the opposing attorney, he has absolutely uttered nothing fit to be replied to. He has made no argument. He has attempted none. He has presented neither precedents nor principles to assist this court and jury to discern or apply the law to the facts involved in this case. He has come here and reared himself up like a bear on his haunches, and hissed at citizens of the place who are no way concerned in the case, without even mentioning the points involved in it."

This withering rebuke fell harmless on the chunky little man, who had no sensibilities to be wounded, but seemed rather pleased with having attracted so much notice of an eminent jurist. And yet the Chicago Voice of Masonry, in giving the history of the fall and revival of the Vermont Grand Lodge, has made a hero of Mr. Phillip C. Tucker for his defiance of the laws of the State, which prohibited, and should have punished, his share in the perpetuation of the mockeries of the lodge which had murdered a citizen of New York.

Gen. Fisk, we learn, had a strong gathering at St. Johnsbury last night. Burlington only gave ten Prohibition votes four years ago. The increase is steady everywhere.

I learn the prospects of the opening college year in Middlebury are very encouraging. Dr. Brainerd is away; but his bright and charming family of children entertain Mrs. Blanchard, by the mother's direction, delightfully. Professor Yager, a clear-thinking, solid man, treated me in the Association with much urbanity, and our stay is made happy. We leave to-morrow for Burlington, to attend the Prohibition rally, and hold up the hands of their Moses, Gen. Fisk. A meeting is appointed for me at Hardwick, and others may follow, of which our readers shall hear in due time.

HARDWICK, VT., SEPT. 3.—The Stars and Stripes are floating in the breeze here again this morning. They were hauled down yesterday (the Sabbath).

On Saturday Gen. Fisk had an excellent meeting in Burlington. The large Opera Hall was not crowded, but full; and, judging by the applause, almost the entire mass were Prohibitionists; and if any were not, they were in a hopeful way. The General's speech was short, pleasant and popular. In that he showed his good sense, not to commit suicide by speaking himself to death, while he has plenty of very able speakers with him to carry the masses by fact and argument. To-morrow (Tuesday) will decide whether Republicans have gained or lost in Vermont in the last four years.

We came out here to Hardwick Saturday evening. Yesterday I preached to a full congregation in the M. E. church. I remembered our reform distinctly in the prayer, and next Sabbath I am to preach in the same church directly against the lodge. The pastor and stewards cheerfully acquiesce. After discussing the religious nature and bearings of the lodge, I am to discuss its relations to civil government, particularly to the laws of Vermont. I hope to-morrow or next day to go to the State capital, Montpelier, to read the records of the legislature, that I may give Vermonters the exact state of their laws on the subject of Freemasonry.

DR. BROOKS AND HIS DEMIT.

The readers of this number will notice the case of Joseph H. Brown, of Marlboro, N. H., republished from the Christian Witness of Boston, organ of the National Holiness Association. In order to leave the lodge he took a demit, as a method of withdrawal from direct contact with those associations, which first became distasteful, and then were seen to be an evil not be fellowshiped by a Christian man. Other similar cases could be named by the score. One brother who became an eminent degree-worker left the lodge in this way. We believe, that were the truth known, there are hundreds of thousands of men living who have thus quietly separated themselves from the lodges not seeing their iniquity very clearly, but enough to be assured that they have no fellowship a Christian can safely cultivate.

But such a case as that of Nathaniel Colver was different. His conscience was suddenly and powerfully aroused, and his strong, independent, combative nature could not for a moment submit to the dictation of the lodge. In God's providence a disagreement that might have been smoothed over (and is in most cases), arose directly into a combat in which neither side would yield, and Colver's moral courage overpowered the Satanic influence which had nearly gotten the mastery over him. He marched out of the lodge face to the foe; most men back out. But even the bold, unconquerable Colver was shackled for years by his lodge oath, as he tells us, and did not at once fully renounce and rid his conscience of the whole iniquitous business.

Now, in respect to Dr. Brooks, whom the Cynosure has recommended to our American anti-lodge voters along with Gen. Fisk, we must give these facts a fair hearing. But the argument of Bro. Butler, of last week (which he gives even more forcibly in the Birmingham Free Press), is not to be forgotten. He states the principle which we hold to be fundamental, that the law of Christ demands entire separation from the secret lodge in any and every form. And this rule of Christian duty is as inflexible against the lodge as against any other iniquity. But civil duties devolve upon the good and evil alike, and we vote for men who cannot repeat the Apostles' Creed and the Shorter Catechism. But in order to do our whole duty as citizens, we have resolved not to assist a man to office who works with the lodge. Here comes in the question of Dr. Brooks and his Masonic demit. He took it years ago, and says he is not now a member of any secret society. The presumption is, therefore, that it is not his purpose to ever make use of that demit for a Masonic purpose. He does not tell us whether he will ever do so or not; and taking all the circumstances into account, such a question would seem uncalled for and unkind. Under the idiotic Masonic rule, "once a Mason always a Mason," that demit can be used to reinstate Dr. Brooks as a Freemason. We do not believe he will ever so use it, and with this confidence can vote for him.

—The Chicago auxiliary to the N. C. A. work holds a meeting on Saturday September 15, in this office at 3:45 P. M., for the election of officers, and to transact any other business proper to come before the body.

—Dr. J. E. Roy, as trustee of the fund left by Mr. Carpenter, has ordered 1,000 copies of "Stories of the Gods" sent to Bro. I. R. B. Arnold to be distributed by the "Mississippi Expedition." He visited Bro. Arnold lately, and is much pleased with his work against the unholy orders. From the same fund have been issued two handsome tracts, one a sketch of Mr. Carpenter's life, the other containing some of his published writings against the lodge.

—Rev. Joseph A. Leach, who has been aiding the editor of the Cynosure in the campaign in Vermont, we are glad to notice will continue in that work during September. Though long opposed to secret societies, he has learned much respecting their true character of which he had been unaware. He writes: "I see and feel every day more and more the importance of this cause of which so little is known in this region. The work here must be pressed mainly by personal work with those not yet entangled by the lodge. If our people can only be made to see the terrible curse as it has been revealed to me, they will act strongly."

—We had supposed the Chicago Sabbath Association was a distinctively Christian body. It seems, however, not to be, since it joins hands with lodges and clubs of all sorts to secure the closing of saloons, etc., on the Lord's day, and is preparing for a great Sabbath meeting for this end. The objection to this method of promoting Sabbath observance is, that it does not promote it, never can, and never will. And why? Because the labor lodges and clubs and unions and assemblies want business to cease, not that they may have the day for the worship of God, but for their own pleasure, for odd jobs about their homes. So far as any good and useful purpose is concerned, as a rule, it is all the same before God whether a man works or plays on his day. Let the lodges have their way to secure the enforcement of laws against Sabbath labor. These should be enforced and business should cease; but let the Christian churches labor unitedly in a Christian way to gain the day for God. They may be assured that Satan does not intend to aid them in this matter, and they cannot safely join hands with him.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Elder A. D. Freeman, of Downer's Grove, Ill., has been spending the summer in the vicinity of Adams, New York. He lately returned in apparent rugged health.

—Elder J. F. Browne has so far recovered as to return this week to New Iberia, to begin the second year of Howe Institute. Mrs. Browne accompanies him, and they ask that the prayers of our readers attend them.

—Bro. H.H.Hinman, having recovered sufficiently to permit him to safely travel, left this office last week Monday for Aurora, Princeton, Galesburg and other points on the Burlington road, to secure further subscriptions for the proposed district office in New Orleans.

—Rev. J. M. Foster of Cincinnati, our valued correspondent and district secretary of the National Reform Association, expects to spend some time during the winter in Washington and vicinity, and will be welcomed at the N. C. A. office, No. 215, Four-and-a-half street.

—Mr. G. A. Conrad of Grinnell, Iowa, who graduated at Wheaton last June, enters the Union Park Theological Seminary in this city this week. Bro. Conrad spent his summer vacation a year ago in the colporteur work under engagement to the Illinois State Association.

—Bro. Jonathan W. Moss of Cameron, West Virginia, and his wife, have lately been led through the waters of affliction. A little son in his second year has been taken from them in God's providence. May their trust in this hour be stayed upon him who says, "Suffer the little ones, and forbid them not, to come unto me."

—Rev. L. G. Jordan of Texas, the eloquent colored Prohibition orator, is removing his family to Illinois. After the Indianapolis Convention he spent some time in Chicago and vicinity, and expected at one time to speak in Virginia under engagement to the Prohibition campaign committee. He spoke at the Prohibition camp meeting at Decatur, Ill., and vicinity, and now is locating in that city.

—Dispatches from Sag Harbor, Long Island, on Friday night, reported to the world of readers who have been charmed with her books, that Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe was dying. Some months ago she came to live at the home of Rev. Charles Edward Stowe at North Haven, near Sag Harbor. About the last of August congestion of the brain set in. Mrs. Stowe lay in a partially unconscious condition. There is no hope of her recovery. The members of the family were called to her bedside last Thursday. Mrs. Stowe is now 77 years old.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold writes a strong appeal in the Free Methodist for the institution at Orleans, Nebraska. It is embarrassed, but the debt is not large, and can be canceled with proper effort, and a valuable property and promising young institution saved.

—Earlham College entered upon another year's work last week. The institution is to be congratulated, says the Christian Worker, upon its favorable auspices and outlook. It begins with new buildings in addition to the old ones, better adapted to its needs, than anything it has ever had. We understand the prospect of attendance is good, and every indication promises a successful year.

—The fall term at Wheaton opened last Tuesday very favorably with a considerable increase in attendance over last year. The Faculty of last year are in their places as then, except the Lady Principal. Miss Hulbert resigned last year and is now teaching in Mr. Moody's school for girls at Northfield, Mass. Her place is taken by Miss Guitner, an experienced teacher who some years since occupied the same position at Westfield College.

—Geneva College, Beaver Falls, Pa., began its academical year for 1888–9 last week Wednesday. Rev. T. P. Stevenson, of the Christian Statesman, is president of the Board of Corporators, and Rev. C. D. Trumbull of Morning Sun, Iowa, vice-president. Rev. W. J. Coleman takes the chair of Political Philosophy and History vacated by Dr. D. McAllister, when he assumed the pastorate of the Pittsburgh Reformed Presbyterian church. Prof. Coleman was engaged in the work of the National Reform Association in Ohio, and addressed the last anti-secrecy convention in that State. President George, who is also the presiding officer of the N. C. A., continues to be the efficient head of this fine institution.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7, 1888.

June, July, August, September—and Congress is still here. The present week has been an interesting one in both branches. Everybody had become weary of the tariff, and a change of subject that promised to bring out the fire of the big artillery on both sides in the House of Representatives was to be welcomed. It was on Tuesday that the Retaliation bill came up for consideration, and interest was manifest all over the hall when Representative McCreary arose to defend President Cleveland's retaliatory message. The gentleman from Kentucky commenced his speech by complimenting the President on the dignity and courage displayed by him, and said that this Fisheries message and the Tariff message of Mr. Cleveland should be recorded together in history. One sought to reduce taxes and lighten the burden of the people; the other looked to the maintenance of the dignity and rights of American people.

The opposition was led by Representative Hitt of Illinois. He characterized the fisheries' story as one of wrong and outrage; wrong unredressed and insult unavenged; and assailed the President for his hook. He charged that the Treaty was a bargain between the administration and Canada, and said that Mr. Mills, by his bill, had endeavored to make good Mr. Bayard's promises; he trusted that when men ceased to regard Presidents' messages as campaign documents and electioneering devices, the question would be solved permanently for the manifest good of both parties, and the permanent peace of both nations. Applause and congratulations followed the close of Mr. Hitt's speech, and prefaced the remarks of Mr. Chipman of Michigan, who favored the bill, but wanted peace. He said that, except Pennsylvania, all the nine States on the lakes wanted free-trade and commercial union with Canada. Speaking of the suggestion that two years' notice should be given to England of the proposed action as a matter of diplomatic courtesy, he gave utterance to the following epigram: "The nearer a man approaches a diplomat in form, the nearer he is to a fool; the nearer he approaches one in substance, the nearer he is to a knave." He characterized England as the monster money changer in God's temple of the earth, and said he favored giving her just what was hers and no more. It was on Tuesday, too, that proceedings became unusually lively in the Senate. Mr. Reagan was led into a speech on the greenback question, in which he remarked that the mind could not realize the extent of a million dollars; that a million contained more units than there had passed seconds since the birth of Christ. Mr Blair replied that he had made a calculation that 59,000,0000,000 seconds had passed during the Christian era; so that Mr. Reagan's statement contained only one-sixtieth part of the truth, which was about the average of truth in his general utterances. He expressed sympathy with the Senator from Texas as being almost as much of a crank as himself—even to the extent of being a Prohibitionist.

Mr. Reagan said that the suggestion that he was a crank was about the hardest thing ever said about him. He did not care to be in the same category with the Senator from New Hampshire. He (Reagan) had voted for Prohibition in his own State, but had not asked anyone else to do so, and in voting he had acted on his own judgment and conscience. "Why," said Mr. Blair, "to reply to one's own judgment is the most absolute characteristic of a crank."

A distinguished party of Chinese noblemen traveling in this country have been sight-seeing in Washington this week. They visited the Treasury Department, and were conducted through the vaults, which are now being filled with millions of standard silver dollars. They said that since they left China nothing had done them so much good as the sight of that great mass of money.

And in this connection, some figures showing how the money is being hoarded may be interesting. On Saturday last the amount of gold and silver coins and certificates, United States notes, and national bank notes in circulation was $1,360,863,157. The amount locked up in the Treasury was $598,494,019, nearly one-half of the amount in circulation. Almost two-thirds of the amount in circulation is paper. About five-sixths of the stock in the Treasury is gold and silver coin, almost equally divided. The paper in circulation represents about twice the sum of the gold and silver coin in the Treasury. The silver dollars at present locked up in the Treasury would fill the new hundred million dollar vault under the Treasury court-yard almost three times over; and still they come. There are five times as many silver dollars lying idle in the Treasury as there are in circulation.

THE HOME.

BEYOND.

Though mortal eyes know well the nearer side
Which, as we turn, the turning moon displays,
In this unchanging through the changeful days,
The farther one no man hath yet espied:
What that would show some reasoned rule doth hide.
Mayhap the sun's light there more lustrous plays,
Outshining far the earth observing rays;
So, musing, guess we, knowledge is denied.
Of life the lower half alone we know,
The higher, brighter part hath ever been—
And still, to us in flesh, remains—unseen;
Faith waits, content that wisdom wills it so,
The lesser glory, love to us reveals,
The greater glory, love awhile conceals.

CROSS-EXAMINING A SKEPTIC.

"I don't believe in a personal God," remarked a skeptic to F. R. Jones, a Welsh Presbyterian minister, on a railroad train between Toledo and Cleveland.

"Why not?" asked the minister.

"Because I can't see him. His existence is not demonstrable, capable of proof, like facts of science."

The minister asked, "Don't you believe that you are alive, and that I am alive?"

"Yes," he answered.

"Why do you believe it?"

"Because I can see you move."

"Well," said the minister, "the locomotive that is drawing this train also moves—is it alive?"

"No, but the engineer who runs it is alive."

"Please tell me, whether the engineer is a part of the machinery or a living person?"

"He is a living person," replied the skeptic.

"Now, sir," retorted the minister, "consistency is a jewel—please tell me why you attribute the movement of the locomotive to a living person, but deny that God, who sets the universe in motion, is a living person?"

He could not answer. Silenced on this argument, he branched off into another objection against Christianity.

"What I hate," said he, "in orthodoxy, is this endless talk about creed, creed, creed, thrust upon us everywhere and at all times."

"What do you mean by a man's creed?" asked his opponent.

"I understand by a creed that which a man believes."

"Well, sir," rejoined the minister, "you have just as much creed as I have. I believe there is a personal God; you believe the opposite doctrine. I believe in the incarnation of the Son of God for our redemption; you believe the opposite. I believe in the ruined estate of man; you believe the opposite. What difference is there in the bulk of our creed, only that I believe one side of the question and you believe the other? Now, sir, when we come to that point, you have just as much creed on your side as I have on mine; but you want the right to advocate your sentiments, but wish to deny me the right on my side."

He was silenced again.

"But," said the skeptic, resuming the attack by another argument, "Christianity is not capable of scientific demonstration. When we take the sciences, all truths are capable of demonstration by experiments which prove them. You can put them to the test. I take peculiar pleasure in the study of chemistry. Its propositions are plain and capable of proof by facts and experiments which appeal to the senses."

"You have studied chemistry, have you?" inquired the minister.

"Yes, sir," he answered.

"Well," resumed the minister, "if you are a student of chemistry you are acquainted with the fact that charcoal, coal, and diamond are the same in their molecules—namely, carbon. Now can you take a molecule out of the charcoal and put it into the diamond and get a perfect thing of it?"

He acknowledged he could not.

"Where, then," said the minister, "is your demonstration in chemistry? But so far as Christianity is concerned your objection is not valid, for it is capable of spiritual demonstration. You can try it and find it all that God has represented it to be. God says to all, 'Oh, taste and see.' Try it, and experience will attest its truth. Millions have put it to the test of their experience, and have found it 'the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.'"

The skeptic then, in a somewhat conciliatory spirit, acknowledged that his father and mother were orthodox, Christian people.

The minister inquired, "Were they good people?"

"Yes, excellent; my father was an excellent good man."

"Well," inquired the minister, "what practical benefit do you get by changing the religion of your parents for skepticism? Does it make you a better man? Are you a better husband to your wife; a better father to your children; a better citizen in the community in which you live?"

He frankly acknowledged he was not.

"Have you a watch?" inquired the minister.

"Yes, an excellent timepiece," he said, taking it out and displaying a fine gold watch.

"It keeps good time, does it?"

"Yes."

"Well, how would you trade it off? Would it not be for a better timepiece, one more valuable, rather than an inferior one?"

"Yes; certainly."

"Here again," retorted the minister, "you are not acting consistently with reason; for you have changed the creed of your parents for one that, by your own confession, does not benefit you at all!

"Now, my brother," concluded the minister, "why do you embrace infidelity in preference to the faith of your parents? Is it not only because you love sin, and the first principle of Christianity is holiness—opposition to sin? Is it not so?"

He was speechless.

The train stopped and they separated. The skeptic, seeming loth to part on unfriendly terms, insisted upon the minister's repairing to a neighboring dining-saloon and enjoying a good supper at his expense.—Pontiac Weekly Gazette.

DARWINISM AND PRAYER.

At the close of the noonday service in the City Temple recently, referring to his invitation to his congregation to send questions and difficulties to him on religious subjects, Dr. Joseph Parker said:

"I have been asked to say whether the Darwinian theory is reconcilable with the biblical account of creation. A little simple question that could be put on the back of a postcard. I reply that Darwin has no theories; he was too wise a man to have anything to do with such brittle toys. Darwin was not a theorist; he was an examiner, a student, an observer, a man who set down patiently what he had seen, and who had left other people to form theories. Mr. Darwin not only left the church, but he owns in a melancholy passage, full of the voice of despair, that he had lost all interest in pictures, in color, in music. He does not rejoice over the loss; he acknowledges it. It must ever be so, I think. He who lays hold upon the living God will take most interest in pictures, in music, in flowers, in little children, in every young thing that gambols on the mead or dances in the sunbeam. When we lose our consciousness of God, we lose more than that; a tremendous collapse takes place within the whole range of our nature. Do not trouble yourselves, dear friends, about the theory of creation. Only a man here and there ought to ask himself anything about that. Think of a man climbing on the top of an omnibus and asking a brother man what he thinks of the theory of creation? A few men must deal with these questions. For myself, I do not know whether I am common-minded or not in this particular, but I find it of the highest advantage to assume the existence of creation. I really cannot go behind it. If you will guarantee me 300 years, and 300 more of life, I may do a little more; but I am obliged to accept the universe. There are preachers who take the universe to pieces every Sunday morning in order that they may preach in it every Sunday evening. I think it better to accept creation, and leave great minds to tussle and wrestle with things which I really cannot pretend to understand. Another correspondent asks me if prayer is answered. Certainly. The question ought never to have been put. A man cannot pray until he has first got the answer. That is the mystery of the Divine method. He may utter words, but to pray is to express an answer. Whatsoever thing ye ask, if ye believe ye have them, ye have them. We have endeavored to define prayer here again and again. It is not mere asking; it is not a selfish interpretation of the details of life; it is an intelligent, filial, loving submission of the will to God: 'Not my will but thine be done.' He prays who says, 'Lord, I want this dear little child to live; it will cut our poor hearts into inches, and the house will be a great black sepulcher if the child is not here; nevertheless.....' That is prayer, and it is always answered."

THE INFIDEL'S WAGER.

A young man named Thorpe, who afterwards became an effective minister of that Gospel which at first he ridiculed, was one of Mr. Whitefield's most insulting opposers; and, possessing an unusual talent for mimicry, he not only interrupted his sermons in public, but ridiculed them in private in convivial theatrical circles.

On one occasion, at such a gathering for revelry and wit, he and three of his companions laid a wager for the most effective imitation and ridicule of Whitefield's preaching. Each was to open the Bible at random, and deliver an extempore harangue from the first verse that presented itself, and the audience, after the profane exhibition, were to adjudge the prize.

Thorpe's three competitors each went through the game with impious buffoonery, and then it came to his turn. They had the table for their rostrum; and as he was about to step upon it, confident of his superior ability, Thorpe exclaimed, "I shall beat you all." They handed him the Bible, and when he opened it the invisible providence of God directed his eye at the first glance to the verse in the thirteenth chapter of Luke's Gospel—

"Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."

He read the words, but the moment he had uttered them he began to see and to feel their full import. The sword of the Spirit in that passage went through his soul as a flash of lightning. An instantaneous conviction of his own guilt as a sinner before God seized hold upon him; and his conscience was fearfully aroused. The retribution in that passage he felt was for himself, its terrors glared upon him; and out of that rapid and overwhelming conviction he preached.

His fervor and fire increased as he went on, the sympathetic gloom of his audience deepened the convictions in his own soul, and the sentences fell from his lips with such intense and burning imagery, and with such point and power of language, that, as he afterwards stated, it seemed to him as if his own hair would stand erect with terror at their awfulness. Yet no man interrupted him, for all felt and saw, from the solemnity of his manner, what an overwhelming impression there was upon him; and though their astonishment gradually deepened into anger, yet they sat spell-bound, listening and gazing at him. And when he had finished a profound silence reigned in the whole circle, and not one word concerning the wager was uttered.

Thorpe instantly withdrew from the company, without speaking a word, and never returned to that society; but, after a season of the deepest distress and conflict, passed into the full light of the Gospel, and at length became a most successful preacher of its grace.—Dr. Cheever.

VIEWS OF MEN OF SCIENCE.

1. Sir William Thomson, from a study of solar phenomena, utterly denies the possibility of that infinite series of geological ages which is the first demand of the evolutionist.

2. Prof. Max Muller, of world-wide reputation, points out that the crowning faculty of articulate speech constitutes an impassable barrier between man and beast.

3. Dr. Carruthers, of the British museum, states that the whole testimony of the vegetable kingdom entirely contradicts the hypothesis of evolution.

4. Prof. Owen says: "No instance of change of one species into another has ever been recorded by man." And again: "Man is the only species of his genus."

5. The eminent Prof. Virchow of Berlin declares that "man has not descended from the ape, or from any other animal whatever."

THE FREED SLAVE.

Something like twenty-five years ago a little boy was walking through the bush in Africa, and was overtaken by a few men on horseback. He was carrying on his head a pot of fire. These men called the little boy, and one said, "Bring me a light for my pipe."

The boy went towards them; they seized him, threw him across a horse, galloped away with him, and sold him in the slave market not far away. He was re-sold, and was ultimately brought to Lagos. It so happened that the cook who was in the employment of a missionary at Lagos bought the lad.

By-and-by the man died, and the lad took his master's place, and, being in an English colony, he claimed his freedom. He proved an exceedingly sharp boy. He was put into school, trained, became afterwards a teacher, then a catechist, and eventually a minister.

God had been training this lad and keeping him for the purpose of extending Christian missions towards Lake Chad. The lad to-day occupies the most advanced post of one of our missions in Western Africa—and his eyes are to-day fixed upon Lake Chad, for he is hoping, as he has the mastery of the language of that particular district, to reach his home by-and-by, and carry to his own people the Gospel which has saved him.—Rev. J. Milum.

HOW OLD MUST I BE?

We commend the following story to those who do not believe in children being brought to a saving knowledge of Christ when young.

"Mother," said a little child, "how old must I be before I can be a Christian?"

And the wise mother answered, "How old will you have to be, darling, before you can love me?"

"Why, mother, I always loved you; I do now, and I always shall;" and she kissed her mother. "But you have not told me yet how old I shall have to be."

The mother made answer with another question: "How old must you be before you can trust yourself wholly to me and my care?"

"I always did," she answered, and kissed her mother again. "But tell me what I want to know;" and she climbed into her mother's lap, and put her arms about her neck.

The mother asked again, "How old will you be before you can do what I want you to?"

Then the child whispered, half guessing what her dear mother meant, "I can now, without growing any older."

Then the mother said, "You can be a Christian now, my darling, without waiting to be older. All you have to do is to love and trust, and try to please the One who says, 'Let the little ones come unto me.' Don't you want to begin now?"

The child whispered, "Yes."

Then they both knelt down, and the mother prayed, and in her prayer she gave to Christ her little one who wanted to be his.—Friendly Greetings.

TOUCH IT NOT.

Children, do you see the wine
In the crystal goblet shine?
Be not tempted by its charm;
It will surely lead to harm.
Children, hate it!
Touch it never!
Fight it ever!

Do you know what causeth woe
Bitter as the heart can know?
'Tis the self-same ruby wine
Which would tempt that soul of thine.
Children, hate it!
Touch it never!
Fight it ever!

Never let it touch your lips;
Never even let the tips
Of your fingers touch the bowl;
Hate it from your inmost soul.
Truly hate it!
Touch it never!
Fight it ever!

Fight it! With God's help stand fast
Long as life or breath shall last.
Heart meet heart and hand join hand;
Hurl the demon from our land.
Oh, then, hate it!
Touch it never!
Fight it ever! —Selected.

PUNCTUALITY.

When eight Quaker ladies had an appointment and seven were punctual, and the eighth, being a quarter of an hour too late, began apologizing for keeping the others waiting, the reply from one of them was: "I am sorry, friend, that thee should have wasted thine own quarter of an hour, but thee had no right to waste one hour and three-quarters more of our time, which was not thine own." And of Washington it is said that when his secretary, on some important occasion was late, and excused himself by saying his watch was too slow, the reply was, "You will have to get another watch or I another secretary." Napoleon used to say to his marshals, "You may ask anything of me but time." And of John Quincy Adams it is said, that in his long service in Congress he was never known to be late, and one day when the clock struck and a member said to the Speaker, "It is time to call the House to order," the reply was, "No, Mr. Adams is not in his seat yet." And while they were yet speaking, Mr. Adams came in, he being punctual, while the clock was three minutes fast.

TEMPERANCE.

TEMPERANCE AND TEMPERANCE.

We mean by temperance, total abstinence from everything that can intoxicate, whether rum, beer, cider, tobacco, chloral or opium. It is evident that Democrats, Republicans, Catholics and many Protestants, followers of Dr. Howard Crosby, all of whom profess to favor temperance, do not so understand the word. With them, not to get drunk is temperance. A man who can drink a pint of rum and then be able to walk is temperate; a man who drinks the same and then cannot walk is intemperate. A man's temperance depends on how much rum he can carry off. At the recent Catholic National Temperance Convention held at Tremont Temple, the lines of prophecy crossed. Some thought rum-selling a sin, but Rev. Father Hogan of Trenton said: "The sale of liquor is not condemned by the church; it is not our duty to denounce the saloon-keeper, to whom we give the sacrament every week; it is those who oppose the sale of liquor who must be denounced and avoided, who are committing sin and who are not worthy of liberty. The sale is carried on according to Catholic teaching."

"O, that some power, the gift would gi' us,
To see oursel's as others see us."

"RUM AND RELIGION."

The liquor business in America, as in Ireland, is mostly in the hands of Roman Catholic rum-sellers. A Roman Catholic bishop describes a western city as containing "1400 saloons kept by Irishmen for Irishmen."

The great Catholic council at Baltimore undertook two things: They advised their people to get out of the liquor business, and they ordered the priests to get the children out of the public schools into the parochial school. They are making great progress in getting the children started out of the schools,—how is it about starting the rum-sellers out of the rum traffic?

Said the Philadelphia Catholic Total Abstinence News:

"The license court in Philadelphia is now a sickening sight. Notwithstanding the advice of the church to liquor-dealers to get out of the dangerous business and make their living in a more becoming way, the court is full of Catholics asking for liquor licenses, Catholics who are saloon-keepers, Catholics who are bondsmen, Catholics who are lawyers, Catholics who are politicians—the very air of the court is saturated with rum and religion."

PECULIARLY RISKY.

In the good old times it was the law that licenses to sell strong drink were only to be granted to "discreet men of good moral character." Things have changed somewhat in practice, and many men feel, as the license-seeking Irishman said, when asked to bring evidence concerning his moral character:

"Precious little moral character does a man need to sell whisky."

One branch of the insurance business concerns itself with guaranteeing the fidelity of clerks, agents, etc.; but men without much moral character are not safe men to depend on.

A recent article in the Alliance News of Manchester, England, says: "According to the Insurance year book for 1888, guarantee societies are advised by their actuaries to have, if possible, nothing to do with undertaking to answer for the honesty of travelers in the wine, spirit, and beer trades. These are regarded as peculiarly risky. And no wonder."—Safeguard, Boston.

HOW HOMES ARE WRECKED.

A brief dispatch in yesterday's Daily News throws another high light on a social evil which, while it works untold misery, is almost entirely disregarded or ignored. A prominent citizen of Kansas City applies for a divorce from his wife and the mother of his children—on the ground of confirmed and incurable drunkenness. The unfortunate woman admits the justice of the action, and only pleads in extenuation, that she "contracted the love for liquor by taking it at first as a medicine."

The physician who so prescribed it has a heavy account to render at some bar, either here or hereafter. And there are numbers of others equally culpable in every community. Here in Chicago hundreds of homes have been desolated through this medical crime, which is not limited to prescribing whisky, but all forms of stimulants and intoxicants—either chloral, hasheesh, morphine, bromidia, etc.

The dipsomaniac is bad enough, but the slave of the opium habit or chloral is infinitely worse. There is nothing too degrading, no trick or art which human ingenuity can invent, no crime, even, too monstrous, to which the devotees of these infernal drugs will not resort to obtain the stimulant, narcotic, or intoxicant. And in immensely the greater proportion they have been led to their terrible fate by the prescription of the family doctor.

A writer in the September number of the Popular Science Monthly, describing how the opium habit is acquired, suggests certain means of preventing the spread of that form of this social evil. We would extend his suggestion so as to include alcoholic liquor, as well as opium, and require that no prescription calling for any of this class of agents should be filled more than once by a druggist without having the physician specifically renew the prescription. This would undoubtedly do much to check the spread of these enslaving and insidious habits.—Chicago Daily News.

HIGH LICENSE IN MINNESOTA.

High license in Minnesota has entered upon its second year in almost every county in the State. This law imposes a minimum liquor license of $1,000 in all cities of over 10,000 inhabitants, and of $500 in all other places, and makes it optional with the local authorities to make it larger. The Pioneer Press has sent circulars to the county seats in the State, asking for the number of licenses before the law of 1887 went into effect, and the number now. Replies have been received from more than seventy of the eighty counties, giving the date asked. The counties from which no replies have been received are largely those in the northern wilderness of the State, where there are no means of enforcing the law or knowing of its violation. These replies show the law has effected a decrease of about twelve hundred in the number of saloons in the State, or nearly one-half of the whole number under low license, the exact figures being a reduction from 2,806 to 1,597.

DRINK AND SUICIDE.

A. Throckmorton, nephew of ex-Governor Throckmorton of Texas, committed suicide in Denver, Col., Aug. 29. Young Throckmorton entered a cheap lodging house on Holladay street and paid 10 cents for a bed. He never awakened, and was found dead in the morning with an empty bottle of morphine by his side. Throckmorton is a descendant of one of the most aristocratic families in Texas, and was an orphan, his father having been killed while holding an important position in the Confederate army. He early acquired a taste for an artist's life and gave promise of brilliancy in that direction, but liquor and a fondness for a dissipated life wrecked him before he had attained his majority. At the time of his death he was en route to California, accompanied by a bride of two months, a frail creature, both of whom had spent the last cent which had been furnished by the charity of ex-Governor Throckmorton to his dissolute nephew, who refuses to have the remains interred in Texas, so thorough was his dislike for his nephew.

It seems that the British public has just had a "beer boom." The Christian Commonwealth comments on it with great severity. It charges that the Allsopps, the famous brewers, were guilty of a fraud in issuing their prospectus recently, offering a large amount of very profitable stock in their immense business. Purchasers were numerous and greedy. The stock was regarded as a good thing.

"With astounding alacrity, as uncontradicted reports declared, even many of the clergy rushed in among the crowd of applicants, and much of the drunkard-making stock was bought up by the representatives of the churches!"

For the first six months 8 per cent was paid; for the second six months only 6 per cent, and now the reserve is said to be only £6,000; and the stockholders complain that they have been deceived, and that beer is a bad thing after all.—Independent.

The following work is carried on by the Chicago Central Woman's Christian Temperance Union: Two day nurseries (where over 14,000 children were cared for last year), two kindergartens, two industrial schools, two medical dispensaries, a waifs' Sunday-school, a nightly Gospel temperance meeting, a free lodging-house for girls (where over 4,000 were cared for last year), a lodging-house for men, where 60,000 were lodged during the year at 10 and 15 cents a night, including a bath and clean night linen.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON XIII.—Third Quarter.—Sept. 23.

SUBJECT.—Death and Burial of Moses.—Deut. 34: 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.—Prov. 4: 18.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Moses on Mount Nebo. Vs. 1-4. Dying with the Christian is a going up, not a going down. Often death brings with it, by isolating the soul from earth and earthly things, a Mount Nebo experience, a vision of the heavenly Canaan, but with no such hard condition annexed, "Thou shalt not go over thither." Like that greater Prophet of whom Moses was a type, his hands were uplifted in blessing as he parted from the people. A devoted Christian life, like some grand river, grows broader and deeper, and bears a richer argosy of blessing on its bosom as it empties into eternity.

2. The Death of Moses. Vs. 5-8. Moses died in the full vigor of his natural powers, though 120 years old. Whether he would have reached this remarkable age, or reached it with all his faculties unimpaired had he continued to live surrounded by the luxury of a court, is a doubtful question. Had he done so it would have been because, though a prince, he had learned, like Daniel, the virtue of abstemiousness. Through all those weary desert wanderings his fare had been the same as the meanest of the people; manna from heaven, water from the rock. His life is a temperance lesson. He had a sound mind in a sound body. No poison of alcohol or tobacco had impaired his sight or unstrung his nerves. "His eye was not dim nor his natural force abated." Hebrew Rabbis have a beautiful tradition that Moses died by the kisses of God's mouth. Can we imagine a beer-drinker, taking daily into his stomach the germs of corruption and decay, meeting with this blessed fate? They talk of the expense of intemperance. No ledger but that of the Judgment day is large enough to record the full account of what it costs a soul in bitter remorse and regret at the last hour. The children of Israel wept and mourned for their great leader, as was natural they should. It is also natural to every one to want to be regretted when they die, but it is only through living unselfish lives; it is only by increasing the sum total of human happiness so that our death really leaves a void, that we can be perceptibly missed. It is right that there should be mourning when the righteous die, when the voice is silent that rebuked sin and spoke so eloquently for God and truth; but let us remember that the void is always filled up. "God buries the worker, but carries on the work."

3. The Appointing of Joshua. Vs. 9-12. In one sense Moses had no successor. The majestic figure of Israel's great law-giver stands alone and unapproachable in Old Testament history. When great and good men pass away there is a sense in which their place can never be filled even by their successors. Joshua could not have done Moses's work in leading Israel out of Egypt. Joshua's mission of conquest could not have been given to Moses. So every individual soul has an individual work. No other can do it. At the same time there was only one man in Israel who could succeed Moses. Nothing is recorded about Joshua's boyhood and youth, but we are sure they held the promise of his maturer years. The great leaders of humanity have never given their youth to vice. Our country may need another Abraham Lincoln, but we shall not find him smoking cigarettes or reading dime novels. As a man, Joshua was full of faith and backbone. He dared to stand by his convictions even when the mob was threatening to stone him. Such are the men whom God appoints to succeed the fallen heroes in our great moral conflicts. Where are the Joshuas to take Moses's place? to fight back the rising tide of intemperance, licentiousness, Sabbath desecration; and say like him when secret false worships are leading away the people, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve; but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

—The Presbyterian missionaries to India have been successful in converting some of the Indian fakirs to Christianity and have made preachers of them. They speak highly of them as making the most useful and successful native preachers. In their ignorance in heathendom they had a deep sense of sinfulness, and were striving by painful austerities to work out a righteousness of their own. Now they depend on Christ for righteousness and redemption.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

SUFFOLK JAIL OPENS.

WILLIAM F. DAVIS, THE BOSTON COMMON HERO, RELEASED.

A Boston dispatch of Friday says that Rev. W.F. Davis, who has been in the Charles Street Jail for the past ten months because he would preach on the Common in defiance of the city ordinances, was released that day. He went behind the bars as a martyr. He was received by his friends as a conquering hero. When he reached the sidewalk on Charles street he found quite a crowd awaiting him. Handshaking and congratulations were general. A handsome carriage, drawn by a sleek pair of bay horses, was in waiting. Several conveyances were ready to escort him to his home on Garland street, Mount Washington, Chelsea, so that he drove off at the head of quite an imposing cortege. The little covered wagon, covered with legends such as: "Americans, down with Rum, Romanism and Rebellion," and "Rev. W. F. Davis, a Prisoner in Charles Street Jail for Preaching the Gospel," which had been parading the streets for several weeks, drove up, and its attendant began to distribute circulars advertising Mr. Davis's speech in Music Hall on the next Sabbath evening. It was the intention of the managers of the Music Hall service to charge admission and thus secure a purse for Mr. Davis, but he flatly refused to be a party to any such scheme, insisting that the Gospel should be preached freely to all men. He would not promise to appear at the hall until the money-making feature was abolished. When asked as to his plans for the future so far as preaching on the Common was concerned, he said: "I feel that the Common is the property of the public and that I have as good a right to share in its privileges as any other man. I may preach there again if I think it necessary, or if I have a call to do so."

THE SWEDISH BAPTISTS.

The meeting of the General Conference of the Swedish Baptist church of the United States in this city last week was productive of very important results. Friday's entire session was devoted to the discussion of the school question, and several very interesting addresses were heard; among the more important was that of Rev. E. Wingren, editor of the Swedish journal, the Weekly Post, on "Educational Interests of the Church." Rev. Christopher Silene, pastor of the First Swedish Baptist church of Kansas City, Mo., also spoke on the subject at length, and brief remarks were made by fifteen or twenty other delegates. Rev. Dr. Gates of Minneapolis, representing the Baptist National Educational Society, addressed the conference regarding a proposition from the seminary board of Morgan Park Baptist Theological Seminary, to unite the present Baptist Seminary at Stromberg, Neb., with the Morgan Park institution. The Swedish institution, it was proposed, should come into organic connection with the Morgan Park Seminary, and become a branch of the same.

After a careful consideration by the conference, it was unanimously voted to accept the propositions of the Seminary Board, providing certain details are agreed upon and conditions accepted, which will undoubtedly be done. This does not mean the entire disorganization of the Nebraska institution, which will be continued by the denomination as a preparatory school. There was a good attendance of delegates, comprising the leading men of the church from all parts of the United States.

—The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Ohio and adjoining States met in Allegheny City, with 180 delegates from the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kansas, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Illinois, Washington, D. C., Michigan, Indiana, Minnesota, West Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina. Rev. Professor Loy of Columbus, Ohio, was chosen moderator, and Rev. H. P. Dannecker of Washington, chaplain. Professor Loy, president of the Capitol University of Columbus, read his report, showing the institution to be in a sound financial condition. He also called the attention of the synod to the importance of taking into consideration the finances of the Orphans' Home, at Richmond, Ind.; the Practical Seminary, at Afton, Minn.; the Teachers' Institute, at Woodville, Ohio, and the Hickory College, at Hickory, North Carolina.

—The New York Sun says that the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church have decided that the radical modification of the itinerant system, resolved upon by the National Conference of last May, shall not be delayed. The action taken by the Conference was to permit a minister to remain in one pastorate five years, instead of only three. The bishops have now ruled that the amendment of the discipline took effect upon its passage, and, therefore, Methodist pastors throughout the country will not have their usual disturbance next spring.

—Twenty-eight thousand of the 37,000 new members added to the New York Baptist churches in the past eight years came from the Sunday-schools.

—Mr. Moody will go to California to work through the winter on an evangelistic tour, while Mr. Sankey will go to England to assist Spurgeon and others.

—The forty-second annual meeting of the American Missionary Association will be held at Providence, R. I., Oct. 23-25. The Rev. Arthur Little, D. D., of Chicago, will preach the sermon. The meeting will be held in the Union Congregational church, of which Rev. J. Hall McIlvaine, D. D., is pastor. The friends in Providence have already begun preparations for the reception of the Association.

—Two of the speakers at the World's Conference, recently in session in Exeter Hall, London, advocated foreign missions on the ground that they prepared the way for peaceful and cheap annexation of the lands of barbarous peoples. The Japanese welcome Christianity because it is the religion of the most highly civilized nations; because it would "improve the Japanese music;" "because it would be good for the uneducated." Worldly-minded men often subscribe to a new church enterprise, because it would add value to the real estate in the vicinity. Very properly does the New York Observer say: "The less of such motives we have in Christian work at home or abroad, the better."

—Rev. A. B. Lilga, Swedish missionary at the Castle Garden, Yew York, calculates that 60,000 Swedes and Norwegians entered the country via Castle Garden during the year ending June 11 last. He says "there are 600 Swedish Lutheran congregations in America, comprising fully 125,000 members."

—A modern Savonarola is said to have appeared in northern Italy. His name is Father Augustin, of the Franciscan Order of Montofeltro. He is said to mingle marvelous eloquence with great humility. He is greeted with cheers and huzzas by the people wherever he is heard, and enthusiasts are with difficulty restrained from carrying him in triumph through the streets. Even the railway directors have to organize special trains in order to meet the demand to go and hear him. This latter-day Savonarola does not make a crusade against certain formalities and abuses in the church, but against the foibles and unrealities of societies.—Public Opinion.

—The Friends have lost by fire one of their oldest meeting houses in Pennsylvania—that at Bird-in-Hand. The house was of brick, and was built in 1790, in the place of a log house erected in 1749.

—The Presbyterian General Assembly is on record against the running of Sunday trains. Last year it enjoined the presbyteries to "take such steps as to them appear wisest, to discourage and put a stop to such riding on Sunday trains and steamboats by church members, and by ministers of the Gospel in going and returning from appointments, as cannot be justified on the grounds of necessity or mercy."

—A special meeting of the American Baptist Home Mission Society will be held in Nashville, Tenn., September 25 and 26. The work of the society among the colored people will be fully discussed. September 19-25 meetings of three general organizations of the colored Baptists of the United States will be held in the same city. Heretofore these organizations have met at different times and places. This combination of meetings promises to bring together a large body of colored Baptists.

The catalogue of railroad disasters has been enlarged during the past week by several distressing and costly accidents. Does it never occur to the railroad managers that possibly God has a controversy against them? And why so? they might ask. The answer is just this: God has very explicitly and emphatically demanded of men an act of homage, in treating with respect the Sabbath. The railroads, for the most part, treat that day with contempt. They do so out of avaricious greed. Now God, in dealing with individuals, blasts their avaricious schemes when they make money their idol. And is not this the very thing he is doing in dealing with these railroad corporations? Have the Sabbath-breaking roads the courage to give to the public the statistics of their losses for the past five years? We think not.—Southern Presbyterian.

HOME AND HEALTH.

PURE WATER.

Probably there is no more fruitful a source of disease than the use of impure water; hence, it is a matter of the greatest importance that we use, at least for drinking and cooking purposes, only pure water. In many sections of the country the sources of water contamination are so many that it is a difficult matter to obtain an abundant supply of perfectly wholesome water; but all might, if they would, secure, at least for drinking purposes, enough water sufficiently pure for practical purposes.

In the first place water should never be used from either a spring, well or cistern where any probable, or even possible, source of contamination is known to exist, until it has been carefully tested and found to be pure. But even then it is scarcely safe to use the water from suspected sources, for a few weeks, or even days, may entirely change the conditions and render it totally unfit for domestic purposes.

Almost any water that people would ordinarily think of using may be rendered at least harmless by boiling, and filtering through a good filter. A reasonably good filter may be relied upon to remove organic matter suspended in the water, or it may even take away the unpleasant flavor of rain water, but no filter can remove the siepage from barn-yards, cesspools, drain pipes and water closets. Where there is even the slightest possibility of contamination from any one of these sources, the water, if it must be used, should be boiled before being filtered. The following suggestions from the June Good Health, relative to the examination of water, are valuable, and should be preserved for future reference:

"How to Examine Water.—Only a skillful chemist can make perfectly accurate and reliable examination of water, but the following suggestions will enable any intelligent person to make such an examination of drinking-water as will greatly diminish the chances of injury from this potent source of disease:

"1. Notice the color of the water. Pure water has no color, is free from sediment, and does not contain suspended or floating specks or particles.

"2 Observe the odor. Pure water is absolutely free from odor. Water which has a distinct color is to be suspected.

"3. Notice also the taste. Pure water is free from flavor.

"Remember: Good water is colorless, odorless, tasteless.

"If you wish to test the water further—and it is necessary to do so to be even reasonably sure that it is pure, as some waters which are free from color, taste, or odor, are still very impure—take a few ounces of water, place it in a clean bottle, add a small lump of white sugar, and put it in a warm place for a few days. If the slightest turbidity appears within a week or two, the water is unsafe to use.

"Here is another test: Get at a drug store a solution consisting of three grains of permanganate of potash, twelve grains of caustic potash, and an ounce of distilled water. This is a test solution by means of which organic purities may be detected. Put some of the water to be tested in a clean glass. Add a drop of the purple test solution to the glassful of water. It will produce a faint pinkish tinge. If the water is pure, the pink color will remain; if the water is impure, the color will disappear. If the color disappears within half an hour, the water is unfit to drink. The more impure the water is, the sooner the color will disappear."—Pacific Health Journal.

A London doctor, who despaired of being able to cure a woman suffering from an affection of the face and jaw, finally wrote her that he was at the end of his resources, and added that tempus edax rerum (time which finishes up all matters) was the sole remedy. His patient, who was seemingly ignorant of Latin, got an obliging apothecary to furnish her with this specific, at the moderate price of 7s. 6d. After drinking several bottles of it she met he physician in London, and astonished him by her gratitude for the invaluable medicine he had recommended to her. The Congregationalist relates this story, and suggests that perhaps it was "a strange case of faith cure."

Fever and restlessness in children is frequently caused by indigestion. If you find the skin of the little one hot and dry, remember, if you can, what she ate for supper. Give the child a warm bath, then give it a cup half full of warm water to drink. In a few minutes the undigested food will be thrown off the stomach, and the child will soon be sleeping soundly. Should fever and nausea continue during the day following the attack, send for a physician, who will undoubtedly approve of what you have done, and should the symptoms develop into scarlet fever, measles, chicken-pox, or any of the diseases to which children are liable, the attack will probably be of a mild nature.—Sel.

TO CHECK BLEEDING.—Mr. Kemyer, of Ohio, says in the American Agriculturist, that bleeding from a wound on man or beast may be stopped by a mixture of wheat flour and common salt, in equal parts, bound on with a cloth. If the bleeding be profuse, use a large quantity, from one to three pints. It may be left for hours, or even days, if necessary. In this manner he saved the life of a horse which was bleeding from a wounded artery. The flow ceased in five minutes after the application. It was left on three days, when it worked loose, was easily removed, and the wound soon healed.

INTER STATE INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION OF CHICAGO.

For the sixteenth consecutive year Chicago opens up its great Inter State Industrial Exposition, replete with the best products of Science, Industry and Art, on Wednesday, September 5, and closing Saturday, October 20.

The immense structure is now laden to its fullest capacity with the finest and most magnificent exhibits ever displayed; from almost every quarter of the civilized world, illustrating as it does every avenue of human industry in its most complete form, it is almost a necessity that they who would keep abreast of our most advanced ideas in both industry, science and art, should not fail to visit this great Exposition.

Every railroad and transportation line running into the city have made reduced rates, and there is every indication that a much larger attendance will follow than any year that has preceded.

"I know 'tis a sin to
But I'm bent on the notion,
I'll throw myself into
The deep, briny ocean," is the mental exclamation of many a sufferer from headache, indigestion, constipation, torpid liver, etc. The use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, however, would transform these unfortunates, and cause them to sing—

But my spirit shall wander
Through gay coral bowers,
And frisk with the mermaids,
It shall, by the powers!

We know of no mode of treatment which offers, to sufferers from chronic diseases, a more certain hope of cure than that which is comprehended in the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. For purifying and invigorating the blood, this preparation is unequaled.

THE GLORIOUS CAUSE.

The new song book, "The Glorious Cause," by Dr. Geo. F Root (single copy 30 cents; 20 copies or over, 27 cents each, express unpaid), is exactly what is needed for general temperance, Gospel temperance and local Union meetings. It has a fine selection of old tunes, while the new ones "hit the nail" squarely on the head. W. I. PHILLIPS,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

FARM NOTES.

SELECTION AND THOROUGH CURING OF SEED-CORN.

From a long and careful experience in planting corn and in saving and thoroughly curing the seed I am convinced (1) that there is no certainty that seed will grow if taken from the crib; (2) that corn gathered in the fall and thoroughly cured by fire heat, will not only grow when that taken from the crib will rot, but also give a stronger and more vigorous stalk when planted under favorable conditions, so that both kinds come up equally well; (3) that careful and persistent selection of seed-corn can be made to add from ten to twenty-five per cent to the yield of the crop, and there is no other way in which we can increase the yield of our corn at so little expense. I believe in "pedigreed" seed-corn, and know from experience that persistent selection will enable one to fix any characteristic found in an individual ear, but it will take just about six years to do this. Some years ago in gathering some early sweet corn, I found a dark red ear, the first red ear of sweet corn I had ever seen, and I laid it aside to plant. The next year more than half the product of this ear was white, and the remainder ran through all the shades of red from a mere tinge to very dark. I selected the darkest colored and best-shaped ears for six years, by which time I had completely bred out the white and also established a finely-formed ear with good flavor and quite early. I have visited and inspected many fields of corn which confirm this theory that any type may be established. A neighbor has had in view for for some years reducing the size of the cob, and it is curious to notice how he has succeeded and what a depth of grain he has established. My miller tells me he finds a difference of eight pounds in the quantity of shelled corn from seventy pounds of ears in the corn brought to his mill to be shelled. In proof that careful selection of seed will add largely to the yield of corn, I am now husking a field bought of a neighbor, one part of which is planted with a mongrel yellow corn, and the remainder with an established variety of white corn, and the difference in yield is more than 25 per cent. There have been seasons when the fall was damp, and cold weather set in early in the winter—mercury dropping to several degrees below zero—that two-thirds of the corn planted the next spring over large areas of country failed, and had to be replanted the 1st of June, and the yield reduced one half—all of which extra work and loss might have been avoided by an outlay of about ten minutes' work for each acre planted. In selecting seed-corn try to get as nearly as possible perfect ears. The grain should be of good depth, the cob of moderate size, and the ends of the ear well filled out and the rows straight.

I set the standard so high that I consider myself fortunate if I get from a forty-bushel load twenty to fifty ears which come up to it. After selecting the corn put it to drying at once. If you have a room where a fire is kept and a rack can be arranged around the stovepipe, you need no better place. I have a room not plastered overhead, and have nailed lath to the under side of the upper joist on all sides of the pipe, and I can put four or five bushels of corn here so that not an ear of it will be more than a yard from the stovepipe and the nearest ears about fifteen inches. There is a fire in this room all winter, as it is used for papering seeds. The first year I kept corn here my wife noticed in March how near some of the ears came to the stovepipe and got up on a chair and felt of them, and found them hot enough to be uncomfortable to hold, and she said to me, "That corn will never grow, the life is all cooked out of it!" I shelled a few grains from two or three ears nearest the stovepipe and planted them in a box, and they grew at once vigorously. I have been told by old farmers who have tried it that seed corn that has been thoroughly cured by fire heat will not rot if planted in March as soon as the land is in good condition, although cold, wet weather may follow which would be fatal to corn less vigorous. A few bushels of seed-corn may be cured in a smokehouse. Make racks of lath six inches apart, one above another, and lay the corn on them two ears deep; then set an old stove in with a short piece of pipe, and let the smoke fill the house. Fire up twice a day so as to make it uncomfortably hot to stay in.

A neighbor claims that the smoke is of great advantage, vitalizing the corn, and I am disposed to believe it, for I never had corn grow stronger than when I have smoked it as brown as bacon. After the corn is thoroughly cured, take it from the smokhouse and store it in a dry place till needed.

There are large farmers who require from fifty to one hundred bushels of seed-corn a year. I advise such to build a house on purpose for curing seed-corn. A room ten feet square will hold over one hundred bushels. Make racks of lath just far enough above each other to take two rows of ears. Each rack across the room will hold about a bushel, and, beginning two feet from the floor, the racks can be six inches apart, and there can be three or four rows on three sides of the house and leave a little room for circulation between them, and room for the stove in the center, and space to pass around it. A room of this kind would not be expensive and would be a convenient storeroom when not in use for seed-corn. Let every farmer who reads this secure an abundant supply of seed corn early in November, if not done sooner.—Waldo F. Brown, in N. Y. Tribune.

Man prayed to God to destroy the insects which devoured his vines, trees and fruits. And God answered: "I made birds sufficient to feed upon the insects; what have you done with the birds?" And man replied: "I have killed them." And God said, "Then kill the insects."—Farm and Home.

Statistics show that the proportion of women engaged in agriculture to those earning money otherwise, is one to thirty; and of those engaged in agriculture about one-fourth are in Iowa. Great numbers of women take up Government lands, more often unmarried women than unmarried men.

Farming is hard work, but then it is a beautiful work It tires, but it brings a good appetite and sound slumber, a clear conscience, and a place that ought to be a second Paradise.

The way to build up the sheep industry is to weed out the flocks, go for greater capacity for mutton, and increase in the individual, and put a small flock on every farm where they will pay their way.

France expends about half a million of dollars per year in the encouragement of horse breeding, besides keeping up breeding establishments where 2,678 stallions, and mares and their offspring are cared for.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00. Paper covers, 75 cents. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated. The complete illustrated ritual of the entire Scottish Rite, in two volumes, comprising all the Masonic degrees from 3rd to 33rd inclusive. The first three degrees are common to all the Masonic rites, and are fully and accurately given in "Freemasonry Illustrated," as advertised, but the signs, grips, passwords, etc., of these three degrees are given at the close of Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated." Vol. 1 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 3rd to 18th inclusive. Vol. 2 of "Scotch Rite Masonry Illustrated" comprises the degrees from 19th to 33rd inclusive, with the signs, grips, tokens and passwords from 1st to 33rd degree inclusive. Price per volume, paper cover, 50 cts. each; in cloth, $1.00 each. Each volume per dozen, paper covers, $4.00; per dozen, cloth bound, $9.00.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By E. Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639 Chicago. Gives the complete standard ritual of the first three degrees of Freemasonry; the exact "Illinois Work," fully illustrated. New edition 274 pages; bound flexible cloth covers, 50 cts.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephtha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work,) by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical, explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75 cts.

Mah-Hah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp.....$1.00

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan Abduction. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesmen concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario, the discovery of the body at Oak Orchard Creek and the two inquests thereon. Mr. Weed testifies from his own personal knowledge of these thrilling events. This pamphlet also contains an engraving of the monument and statue erected to the memory of the martyred Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., in September, 1882, for which occasion Mr. Weed's statement was originally prepared. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

National Christian Association.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Free Masonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void: OR, FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, make them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonic Salvation as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cts.

Anti-Masonic Sermons and Addresses. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness;" the Sermons of Messrs. Cross, Williams, M'Nary, Dow and Sarver; the two addresses of Pres't Blanchard, the addresses of Pres't H. H. George, Prof. J. G. Carson and Rev. M. S. Drury; "Thirteen Reasons why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion" and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages; cloth, $1.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. J. Day Brownlee. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able Sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. Five cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

National Christian Association.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

POLITICAL.

Mr. Thurman, while suffering severe pain, attempted to address a meeting at Newark, N. J., but was unable to finish. He was some days previously suddenly prostrated while attending a political meeting in New York. It is evident that too much is being exacted of the aged candidate.

A Democratic mass meeting at New York City Friday night adopted an address to the Democratic State Convention denouncing Governor Hill and opposing his renomination in unmeasured terms.

The mail-carriers in the postoffice at Davenport, Iowa, received formal notification Thursday from the Iowa member of the Democratic National Committee that their share of the campaign expenses would be $15 each, and immediate payment was requested.

The reports of the State election in Vermont last week are yet meager. The Republican majority for Dillingham, governor and a strong temperance man, is believed to be about 25 000 The Prohibition vote is less than 2,000. The vote in Maine Monday is also a Republican victory, claimed to be 20,000 majority, with a Prohibition vote of about 2,000.

CHICAGO.

The Interstate Industrial Exposition opened Wednesday, and as on previous occasions a large crowd was present to witness the fine display.

The Jewish New Year commenced at sunset Wednesday evening, and the ceremonies attendant on the occasion were very generally observed by the Hebrews of Chicago.

A brief recapitulation of the good work accomplished during the summer by ministering to the comfort of working girls and children, shows that 125 working girls and 500 mothers and children have been sent out to the country, and more than 300 to the Lake Geneva sanitarium.

RACE TROUBLES IN THE SOUTH.

At Milbrook, Ark., at 2 o'clock in the morning, after election, Tuesday, a body of mounted and armed men began firing from a thicket on the persons who were guarding the ballot-boxes, killing one man and wounding six others. The intention of the assassins was to steal the ballot-boxes.

The State Rangers and two local military companies have been called into service in Fort Benton county, Texas, where a body of 500 Negroes and the whites are likely to come in conflict. The colored people are charged with an attempted assassination, and refuse to quit the county at the behest of the white residents. It is said that forty men, armed with Winchesters, are marching on the Negroes.

At Little Rock, Ark., Wednesday night, the vault in the County Clerk's office was broken into and the poll-books, showing the returns of Monday's election in nine townships, seven giving Republican majorities and two Democratic majorities, and an aggregate majority against license, were stolen. There is no clew to the criminals, though the Republicans charge the Democrats, the Democrats the Republicans, and both the whisky men with the deed.

There is trouble between the Negroes and whites in Fort Bend county, Arkansas, growing out of the election. Bloodshed is feared, and two companies of militia have been ordered there to preserve order.

A strike of longshoremen at Fernandina, Fla., has resulted in rioting, and the placing of the city under martial law. The local Rifles are under arms, and the State troops from Gainesville and Ocala have beed ordered to Fernandina. Fifty arrests have been made.

Three colored men were taken from the jail at Oxford, N. C, on the 2d, and hanged by a crowd of from seventy-five to one hundred masked men, white and black. Three were charged with the murder of a Negro and one with burglary and arson, the latter a capital crime in that State. Only one man was guarding the jail, and he was overpowered.

COUNTRY.

Killing frosts prevailed Thursday night in parts of New Hampshire, Vermont, Rode Island and New York. The damage to crops is reported as heavy.

Heavy frost at Howard City, Mich., Thursday night, damaged vegetables and corn and reduced potatoes to half a crop: at Cadillac killed corn and buckwheat, and damaged potatoes, and at Manton killed what was left of crops.

Judge Lenehan, at Waterloo, Iowa, denied Friday the application of the Chinese laundryman, Frong Wing, to be made a citizen, on the ground that the Chinese are not eligible to citizenship under the laws and constitution of the United States.

Yellow fever is reported raging at McClenny, Fla, thirty miles west of Jacksonville. There have been twenty five cases and four deaths, it is claimed, of dengue fever. At Jacksonville seventy-seven new cases were reported for Friday, with nine deaths.

At a labor picnic in Cleveland, Monday, a band of anarchists displayed a red flag, and refused to acknowledge the Stars and Stripes. The anarchists were at once attacked; their flag was torn to tatters and trampled in the earth, and the men themselves badly wounded in the fight, which continued for ten minutes Five of the anarchists were locked up on a charge of riot.

The postoffice at Cutler, Ind, was destroyed by an explosion of dynamite at midnight, Thursday. For some time the town has been subject to the raids of a gang of desperadoes, which has destroyed much property, and has greatly terrified the citizens. The postoffice has been blown up with dynamite five times within the last eight months. Two or three days ago a plot to explode ten pounds of dynamite under a hotel was discovered in time to prevent the mischief. In the destruction of the postoffice no one was injured.

By the explosion of a boiler in the Perry Stove Works at South Pittsburg, Tenn., Monday morning, five men were killed. The structure was badly damaged.

Near Crystal Falls, Mich., early Friday morning, a lamp exploded in Louis Brown's bedroom, and Mrs. Brown was caught in the flames and fatally burned. Mr. Brown and six children escaped, but Browh went back for his money and was burned to ashes.

At Ellendale, D. T., Wednesday evening, the boiler of Goulette & Letson's thrashing outfit exploded, and of the crew of eight or ten men, an old man named McLean was killed, four fatally injured, and others badly hurt.

A heavy thunderstorm in the vicinity of Jacksonville, Florida, had a decidedly bad effect on the yellow fever patients. Voluntary contributions for the relief of the sufferers are being received from a number of prominent citizens of the Union. The plague is increasing steadily. The official bulletin for the twenty-four hours ending at 6 o'clock Sunday night shows this condition of affairs: New cases, 51; previously reported, 555; total to date, 606; deaths previously reported, 66; total to date, 73.

FOREIGN.

The French government has ordered an investigation to be made of the report that dhows carrying the French flag are engaged in the slave trade between Pemba and Madagascar. Should the report be found true steps will be immediately taken to stop this degradation of the national colors. The Pope has instructed the Papal Nuncio at Brussels to aid Cardinal Lavigirie to convoke an international conference on the suppression of slave trading. His Holiness promises to send legates to the conference.

An express train from Dijon, France, left the rails Tuesday while on its way to Paris, blocking the road. The Italian night mail train ran into the disabled train and was wrecked. According to the latest report nine persons were killed, thirteen severely injured, and many more slightly injured.

The Chronicle's Rome correspondent says that King Leopold, through Cardinal Schieffino, has offered the Pope a residence in Belgium in the event of necessity arising for him to leave Rome. The Pope has had several audiences with the Russian Envoy, and is completing a concordat with the Czar giving a large share of religious liberty to Polish and Russian Catholics.

The destruction of life and property on the Island of Cuba by the cyclone of Tuesday was very great. Fifty persons are reported to have been killed at Sagua, where enormous damage was done to dwellings and warehouses, wharves and shipping. The gunboat Lealtad was foundered off Batabano, and the commander and eight of the crew drowned. The village of Pueblo Nuevo was literally wiped out. Destruction of telegraph wires prevents the ascertaining of farther damage and loss of life.

The discussion of the immigration treaty with America caused great excitement. There have been several riotous demonstrations. A mob, incensed at the American Minister's action, attacked the American official residence at Canton.

The floods in Bohemia reached alarming proportions last week. At Budweis 15,000 persons are homeless. The inhabitants have taken refuge in the hills. The Danube is rising steadily. Six villages in the valley of the Poprad are submerged. The villagers have fled to the mountains. Crops and granaries have been swept away.

Dispatches from Melbourne, Australia, announce that in a test action in the Supreme Court a Chinese emigrant sued the government for damages for prohibiting him from landing. A majority of the judges decided in favor of the plaintiff. The chief-justice dissented.
